Finding a family

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Erin Engelland, senior in family studies and human services, right, celebrates with new member Claire Anderson, freshman in business administration, while the new members made their way to the Kappa Kappa Gamma house Thursday morning. More than 500 women participated in the recruitment process.

Nearly 500 women join K-State sororities

By Laura Noll
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Teary-eyed Libby Bramlett, freshman in open option, hugged her older sister and then turned to her huge group of new sisters.

Bramlett participated in last week's sorority recruitment with hopes of meeting people and possibly pledging into her big sister Angie's sorority.

"I didn't think I'd be so emotionally attached to both houses," Libby Bramlett said during Bid Day, Aug. 18.

As she wiped the tears off her smiling face, she described how she loved her sister and her pledge class and was sure she had made the right decision.

However, she said the recruitment process was overwhelming.

"I'm usually not a crier, but I've been crying for the past two days," she said.

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

Members of Gamma Phi Beta cross Claflin Road Thursday morning after the new members received their bid for sorority recruitment. Sorority recruitment began Aug. 13 and ended Friday.

The pair of open-option freshmen went through the six-day recruitment together. For them, recruitment consisted of talking with many girls from different sororities and taking house tours.

Recruitment proved, for many, to be an emotional rollercoaster. It took potential pledges "way out of their element," said Emily McIntyre, member of Delta Delta Delta and sophomore in interior design.

BTK to serve 175 years for murders

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Dennis Rader walked into a maximum security prison in El Dorado, Kan., early Friday morning, wearing an orange jumpsuit with chains binding his hands to his waist.

The confessed BTK serial killer was sentenced to ten consecutive life sentences – or 175 years – without a chance of parole, Thursday, after a two-day hearing in a Wichita court.

Rader

Jessica Williams, sophomore in psychology, lives in Maize, Kan., a suburb of Wichita.

"It sickened me that someone who lived that close to me had done that sort of a thing," she said.

"He bound, tortured and killed many people," she said. "He doesn't deserve a chance to be in society because he might do it again."

Some K-State students said they are glad he is in prison for life.

"I thought he got off easy, and the only reason he is alive is because Kansas didn't have the death penalty back then," Anthony Walenz, junior in electrical engineering, said.

Kansas instated the death penalty in 1994, three years after Rader murdered his final victim, Dolores Davis.

Jeremy Schletzbaum, junior in construction science, said he did deserve to have a life sentence because of the brutal murders he committed.

"He was proven guilty and parole should not be granted at any time," he said.

While Paul Holman, junior in electrical engineering, said the life sentence is fair, but it will also protect BTK.

"If he ever leaves solitary confinement, he will probably also be killed" he said.

Williams said through the classes she has taken on serial killers, she was not surprised at how Rader was so well-known in his community.

"In a way I was surprised at the type of person he had become," she said. "In my knowledge, though, it didn't surprise me."

Electrician injured in fall from ladder

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A K-State electrician was injured Friday after he fell from a ladder in Mosier Hall.

Charles Lagabed was injured in Frick Auditorium, where Manhattan Emergency Medical Technicians and firefighting units responded to the call Friday morning at Mosier Hall.

Lagabed's coworkers said they were unsure of who made the emergency call.

Dennis Ahlvers, the maintenance supervisor for Mosier Hall, said Lagabed was doing electrical work in the auditorium when the accident happened.

Cliff Slocum, a coworker, said he was present when Lagabed fell.

"He was drilling a hole, and he fell off of the ladder he was on," Slocum said.

Shane Patterson, service manager with Cytek Media systems, said he was working with Lagabed at the time.

"All I heard was his drill fall, and then he was yelling out as he fell," he said.

"I asked him if he was alright, and he said he thought his foot was broken," Patterson said.

Although the extent of Lagabed's injuries were unknown, coworkers said he appeared to be doing well, and was even cracking jokes.

Restaurant to feature deep-dish pizza, World Beer Tour

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Old Chicago has made its mark in major metropolitan areas in Kansas, including Olathe, Kan., Overland Park, Kan., Lawrence and Wichita.

Soon, Manhattan will join the list.

The restaurant specializes in Chicago-style deep dish, thin crust and stuffed pizza and 110 different kinds of beer from 20 countries. It is scheduled to open Aug. 29 at 100 Manhattan Town Center. Business hours will be 11 a.m. to 2 a.m. daily.

Sara Vanallen, marketing manager at Manhattan Town Center, said applications are being accepted at the store space next to The Gap in Manhattan Town Center from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m.

Steve Hohl, Old Chicago general manager, said the restaurant features a World Beer Tour club. When a customer purchases beer, a card is scanned electronically.

Prizes are offered along the way, including hats, t-shirts, sweatshirts, coolers and backpacks. Once a customer has purchased all 110 kinds of beer, a plaque with his or her name will go on the wall, Hohl said.

Lyle Butler, president of the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce, said Old Chicago will bring traffic to downtown Manhattan.

"Old Chicago is a well-known restaurant that appeals to college students and families because of its menu and sit-down atmosphere," he said.

Hohl said late night dining with a full menu until 1 a.m. will appeal to college students, as well as daily food and beer specials. A lunch buffet will be offered Monday through Friday.

"The restaurant will serve as an Aggieville alternative to students and as a great place to hang out with friends," Vanallen said.

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Tornado touches down
Thunderstorms moving across Kansas on Friday brought large hail, high winds and at least one report of a tornado, but there were no immediate reports of deaths or injuries. In Barton County in central Kansas, sheriff's dispatcher Paula Lloyd said a combination of a tornado and straight-line winds damaged trees and signs west of Great Bend late Friday afternoon.

Student remembered
An Altamont, Kan. teenager who was killed while having her picture taken with a Siberian tiger was remembered by classmates and teachers for her energy and "zeal for life," while two animal welfare groups demanded investigations into the attack.

Discovery moved
Discovery rode piggyback atop a jumbo jet Friday for a cross-country trip to Florida, more than a week after it landed in the Mojave Desert to become the first space shuttle to return to Earth since the Columbia tragedy. It will make several stops to refuel during the 2,232-mile trip.

POP QUIZ

Are you prepared for the upcoming semester?

1. You prepared your class schedule:
A. The moment the fall 2005 course schedule was released
B. After discussing it with your academic adviser in April
C. Last week

2. You spent your summer:
A. At an internship directly related to your major
B. Catching up on your reading
C. Lounging by the pool and watching TV

3. You purchased your textbooks:
A. Online, immediately after enrolling
B. After arriving in Manhattan in August
C. You haven't, and you aren't planning on it

4. Your school supplies:
A. Are all brand-new: pens, pencils, highlighters and notebooks
B. Are leftovers from last spring — you didn't use that entire notebook anyway
C. You haven't bought school supplies since your freshman year of high school

5. Your desk is:
A. So neat and organized, you could eat off it
B. Usually tidy, but can get messy when you're busy
C. Still in pieces after the move into your new apartment

6. You have study groups for:
A. Every class. You also have tutors lined up — just in case.
B. One or two of your hard classes, like French and algebra.
C. Study groups? Why study when you can spend your time in Aggieville?

If you answered:
Mostly A's: Your life revolves around your class schedule and study groups. It might be a good idea to lighten up a little before you burn yourself out.
Mostly B's: You've found the balance between being prepared and being obsessed. You're ready for classes to begin. Get ready for a great semester.
Mostly C's: You're in college, remember? The semester is almost here. You'd better get ready for fall.

RA work challenging, rewarding

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While most students are sleeping in and hanging out with friends the week before classes begin, resident assistants in K-State's nine residence halls are busy preparing for the arrival of new students.

Returning and new RAs underwent training this week in how to handle crisis situations and how to build an inclusive community as well as a policies review and a resource fair on how to get information from on-campus groups.

New RAs also had training on how to facilitate their first floor meetings, recognition ideas and how to put on programs for their floor.

Rachel Trowbridge, senior in family studies and human services and elementary education, is a second-year RA. Trowbridge has also been an RA for two summers in Moore Hall.

Trowbridge said her decision to become an RA was based on the amount of influence RAs have on students, especially freshmen. She also wanted to involve students in the campus.

"Down the road in my life, I won't have the opportunity again to live with 90 people at one time and be a part of their lives willingly," she said.

Erica Martens, junior in public relations, is a first-year RA. Martens said having a good experience in the halls and learning from RAs influenced her decision to become one.

"The community in the halls is a lot of fun and I wanted to be a bigger part of that," she said.

Martens said her main worry is getting to know everyone on her floor from the beginning, but she said the returning staff has done a good job of making new RAs feel welcome.

"The bond and chemistry between returning and new staff makes the job not feel so overwhelming," Martens said.

Trowbridge recognized several reasons she works as an RA. She said she has grown as a person through the job and has learned skills that are transferable to any career.

Trowbridge also said the support from her supervisors has helped her develop a sense of balance between work, school and a personal life.

While being an RA is rewarding in many aspects, there are drawbacks.

Trowbridge said it is hard to know RAs can only do so much since there are other responsibilities.

"That's where the balance comes in," she said.

Martens said the job is a big commitment and will take discipline to prioritize her time.

Trowbridge said sometimes students don't utilize RAs enough and see them as only as policy enforcers.

"We are here to meet their needs and put on programs to facilitate a community atmosphere," she said.

Drivers should avoid road improvement zones

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The City of Manhattan began new road improvements within the city this week.

Robert Ott, city engineer, said there are several major construction zones residents can avoid.

Tuttle Creek Boulevard and Kimball Avenue

"We are constructing a double turn-left lane in the northbound lanes of Tuttle Creek Boulavard," Ott said. "The project's contractor, Shilling Construction, should be moving material as of Monday morning."

"Around November, we should see a new signal pole with a master," he said.

Claflin Road and Beechwood Terrace

"We are installing a brand new traffic signal and also aligning the entrance in the Westloop and Beachwood Terrace," Ott said.

All lanes will line up and create an even flow of traffic.

"This project should take roughly two months to complete," he said.

Fort Riley Boulevard and Seth Child Road/ K-18 and K-113

The Kansas Department of Transportation is working on reconstructing the interchange at Fort Riley Boulevard and Seth Child Road. "The interchange is going to be created into a standard diamond configuration, much similar to the what one would see at Seth Child and Anderson," Ott said. "The city is in the first year of the project, and it will continue for at least another year.

"People should expect traffic congestion for the next two years. There is no simple way around it.

"In the next two weeks, we should be off to Wreath Avenue, between Kimball and Anderson, where we're currently working on a mill overlay."

This roadwork, however, will last only a couple weeks.

Ott said that there are several other construction projects in progress all over the city. Most projects should be on time, but due to changes in the weather and other obstacles, these projects may be delayed.

He also noted that the steel industry affects current construction works.

"In the world market, steel is a very hard product to get right now." Ott said. "Everything in our business revolves around these products.

"We must be patient and just hope that things will move a little faster. "The city asks that people drive slowly, obey all traffic signs, and use caution in these work zones."

TO THE POINT

Construction should be done before autumn

Few will argue that many of Manhattan's roads and intersections are in desperate need of improvement.

The odd intersection at Seth Childs Road and Claflin Road leaves motorists playing chicken with on-coming traffic, while the spaghetti works that used to be the intersection of Fort Riley Boulevard and Seth Childs Road was once as clogged as Dick Cheney's arteries come football Saturdays.

Current projects will alleviate some of the traffic debacles, but for now they are creating another malady for those returning to K-State this fall: migraines.

It didn't have to be that way.

Poor planning and disregard for the autumn influx of students has created numerous traffic problems that will only become aggravated when football season opens on Sept. 3.

Many projects, including those at the intersections of Tuttle Creek Boulevard and Kimball Avenue, as well as Claflin Road and Beechwood Terrace, could have been completed during the summer.

Instead, those projects were begun in mid-August and won't be finished until September – assuming variables such as the weather don't intervene.

Even simple overlay projects on Wreath Avenue and North Manhattan Avenue should have been done well in advance.

The Manhattan City Commission must do a better job of planning around the return of students and the inevitable traffic caused by fall football games.

Judging from the rest of the city's roads and intersections, it still has plenty of opportunities to do so.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

New year resolutions

Procrastination, laziness interfere with columnist's semester goals

KELSEY CHILDRESS

Anticipating a new school year, I sat down and made a list of goals. Most of them center around my ability to procrastinate and be the laziest person on earth at the same time.

1. Go to bed earlier – You know those people who always use the phrase, "I work well under pressure?" I've found that it's just an excuse because they didn't feel like getting it done while they actually had the time.

About 85 percent of my life is spent "working well under pressure." This may be a stretch, but actually completing my speech or English paper before 2 a.m. Tuesday when it's due Wednesday might be a good idea. Going to classes on three hours of sleep never did a lot for me anyways.

Doctors say you need at least eight hours of sleep every night. Last year, my body became conditioned to run on five. You know why? That damn Elimidate! Why does it have to be on until midnight? Then Blind Date comes on. Before too long, skipping my 8:05 doesn't seem like a bad idea. Instead of being in a lethargic stupor everyday until 2 p.m., maybe I should start going to bed at a reasonable time.

Making my body work this hard isn't really worth two hours of bad TV dating shows. But, Dr. Phil is on at around 3 a.m. He is also on at 3 p.m., which means it would be pretty easy to watch it while I was, say, working out at the recreation center.

2. Work out and eat healthy – The recreation center seemed to be a way to combat my short attention span, and while some days my laziness convinced me I needed a "rest day", I managed to gain 10 pounds of muscle and lose zero pounds of my love handles, which were the only thing I worked out for in the first place. I suppose eating fast food all the time doesn't really help this problem; maybe I should eat those things they call "fruits" and "vegetables".

3. Fix myself up – I might be more inspired to wear clothes that actually fit me to class, instead of sweats and a t-shirt. I'm also going to try this new concept called "blow drying my hair on days I'll be in public" which I have forgotten about since I started going to college. I realized that loose buns and crinkled ponytails stopped being acceptable in seventh grade. I do get my hair cut for a reason. What really bugs me about how I look is when people tell me, "I didn't recognize you!" Why don't you just tell me how nasty I look and spare me the niceties?

If I got enough sleep and stopped stressing myself out 24/7 I probably wouldn't look as run-down as I usually do. It all comes full-circle. If I know I feel better when I get enough sleep and I look better if I take the extra 20 minutes to style my hair and change clothes, then why don't I suck it up and just do it? I really am going to try to accomplish my goals -soon.

I encourage everyone to set goals for this year. That is, if you have time between your hectic schedule of Grand Theft Auto and Halo two.

Tips to survive the dating jungle

LAUREN ROHRER

Welcome back to Manhattan, kids. Time to party because your parents decided to reinstate your curfew this summer despite that you are, in fact, in your twenties.

During the next few days, the house parties and bars are going to be a frenzy of fabulous new people to meet.

For those who are new to college, take some notes. For those who have been here since the dawn of time, prepare for a refresher as I attempt to guide you through the dating jungle I call K-State.

Ladies, here is a little bit of perspective for you. Manhattan is littered with good-looking guys. You can barely drive through campus without hitting at least a dozen.

Guys in this town are like shoes. Some of them fit perfectly, most of them have a least one small defect, and some of them are so sexy they might actually kill you. Here are some things to think about before you and your friends head out to party.

You don't have to be half naked to look sexy. I have a friend who looks sexy in a Weezer T-shirt because of how confident she is in it.

Go out in groups. This way, if Mr. Perfect never comes along, you and your buddies still have each other (and that Super Troopers DVD at home).

Watch your drink! I don't need to recount the horror stories of things that have happened and can happen, so just be an adult and watch your drink. Better yet, bring your own drinks. You may impress guys as a woman capable of purchasing alcohol.

Keep track of your handbags ladies, unless of course, you are willing to fight for it.

Someone tried to steal my favorite Dooney last year, and the aftermath was not pretty...for him.

Finally, pace yourselves. Not everyone can stomach 10 shots, or five for that matter.

Fellas, Lord knows I love you. In fact, it's a big possibility that we've met, or dated. Guys can get the crappy end of things. Lots of women would love to label you as creepy predators, but we know better, don't we?

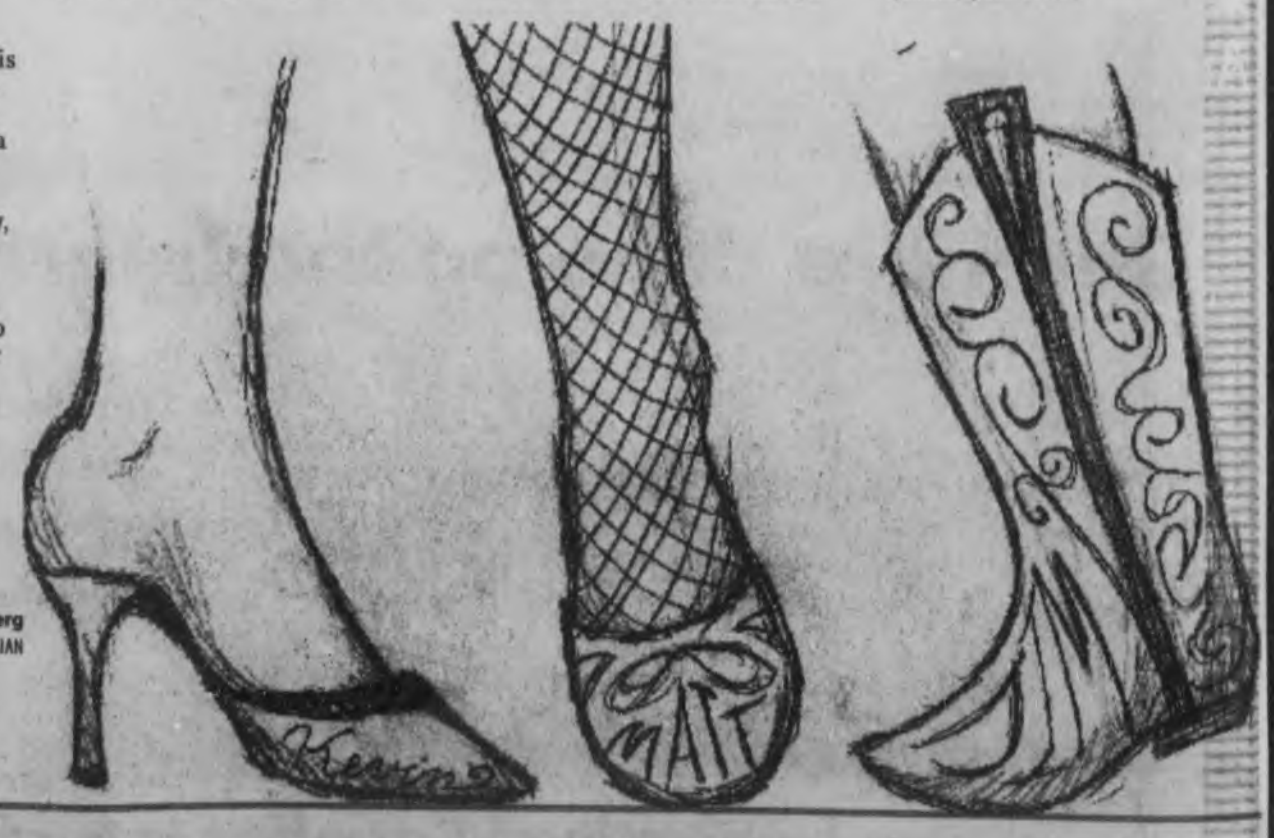
For starters, if you had to wait until you saw it done by someone else, you were never meant to pop your collar.

Start a new trend so the ladies have something else to obsess about.

Walk to where you are partying. I have several guy friends who think they are tough enough to drive a group of people home for the night even though they have been drinking. Here's a thought, that's not tough- that's stupid!



Don't get into fights with other guys. It really doesn't matter who wins, the ladies think you look ridiculous.

Be a gentlemen and talk about things that the ladies can relate to (this does not include Halo 2 or anything else at Game Stop).

So have fun this semester, take care of yourselves and each other. Even insanely cynical columnists have feelings (although mine may be slightly skewed after one too many crappy dates).

And always remember that you have plenty of time to be serious when you're 40, so chill out and enjoy what's happening right now.

7 new area businesses provide better shopping, job opportunities

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan Town Center is expanding its retail horizon– and just in time for back-to-school shopping.

During a time span of five months, the town center will become home to four new stores and three new restaurants.

The first of these seven new businesses, Kay Jewelers, made its Manhattan debut in April.

Two other businesses followed in June: Hot Topic, a music lifestyle-influenced clothing store, and the latest addition to the food court, Jasmine: A Taste of Asia.

Merle Norman, featuring a full line of skin care and color cosmetic products, also opened earlier this month.

Still to come are the openings of Old Chicago Aug. 29, and CJ Banks clothing store in mid-September. Bourbon Street Grill will also be opening in the mall food court in mid-September.

"It's been a very positive asset," Sara Vanallen, Manhattan Town Center Marketing Manager, said.

"We now have a broader mix to fit everyone's needs. The need to go to Topeka is getting much, much smaller," she said.

As these businesses are all new arrivals to Manhattan, many of them said they have been pleased with customer response.

"It's been great," Josh Vaughn, assistant store manager at Hot Topic said. "We've had a lot of really good business. People have received us really well."

The arrival of the seven new businesses could also provide many employment possibilities for K-State students.

"If I decide to get a job first semester at K-State, I would love to get a job at the mall," Elizabeth DeBusk, freshman in kinesiology, said. "I would love the extra spending money, because I'm officially a poor college freshman."

As stores at Manhattan Town Center is always hiring, students looking for a part-time jobs in retail are encouraged to stop by the Customer Service Center, Vanallen said.

The service desk provides up-to-date job openings, but going to the store directly is also very effective.

The Town Center, which opened in 1987, was again placed on the market in 1999. The mall remained unsold for five years, during which there was little leasing activity.

"We're hoping it's only going to get better from here," Vanallen said.

Already, the mall is looking to further expand by adding a couple more businesses, Vanallen said.

Free training offered for new hospice volunteers

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Homecare and Hospice is offering fall training sessions for those interested in becoming hospice volunteers.

The training began Aug. 15 and will continue every Monday for five weeks, with no training on Labor Day. Sessions are from 5 to 6:30 p.m. in the Homecare and Hospice conference room at 323 Poyntz Ave.

Sessions will feature speakers, including social workers, nurses, and holistic hospice care. Volunteers will receive certification on the last day of training, Sept. 19.

Chris Wernette, community relations and volunteer coordinator, said volunteers, social workers and nurses are sent to keep clients as comfortable as possible until they die.

Wernette said training is required for being a hospice volunteer because it is care for terminally ill clients.

"Volunteers need to understand what clients are going through physically, emotionally and spiritually," she said.

A background check will be conducted prior to hospice volunteering.

A tuberculosis shot is required for those involved with direct client care which is done free of charge.

Wernette said volunteering is open to students in all majors, but those going into any type of medical profession or social work are highly encouraged.

Wernette said the experience of being a hospice volunteer is one-of-a-kind.

"Even if you volunteer with several different clients, the experience will be different with each," she said.

Judine Mecseri, director of program operations and social worker, will be speaking at the training sessions about home visits with clients, confidentiality, understanding family dynamics, communicating with clients and anticipatory grieving.

Mecseri said volunteering makes people understand what's important in life on a personal level.

"People who are dying can teach you a lot," she said.

Mall to sponsor back-to-school expo for K-12 students

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan Town Center will be hosting a back-to-school expo for parents and their children, ages kindergarten through 12th grade.

The expo will be from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. today at the center court in the mall. Each table at the expo will have a giveaway or goodie bag.

Sara Vanallen, marketing manager at Manhattan Town Center, said the expo will feature information on after school activities and senior portraits.

Local organizations on display at the expo include Gymnastics Plus, Boys and Girls Club of Manhattan, Manhattan Arts Center, Reflections Photography, Mark Rose Photography, ATA Black Belt, Girl Scouts of Kaw Valley and several others.

"We have a broad range of activities for parents and kids to look into to get involved after school," Vanallen said.

Lisa McCurdy, resource development director for Boys and Girls Club of Manhattan, said Boys and Girls Club booth will showcase information applying to the back-to-school theme.

There will be information available about their before and after school programs, which serve more than 300 students every day in Manhattan and Ogden.

McCurdy said parents who attend the expo may see activities in the community they were not aware of and get their children involved in positive activities during the school year.

The Manhattan Arts Center booth will feature information on the fall seasons of theater, BirdHouse and Swing City Jazz, said Shauna Tominey, marketing and programming director. There will also be a drawing for two free tickets to any fall production at the MAC.

The fall classes schedule for ages preschool to adult will also be available. Classes include clay, music, art and theater.

"Parents and children should attend the expo to become more familiar with different events and opportunities available in the community," Tominey said.

While the expo is primarily for grades kindergarten through 12th, Vanallen said the expo is a good opportunity for any K-State student looking to volunteer for community service hours.

"The organizations on display are not-for-profit and are always looking for volunteers," she said.

Sophomore named captain, starting setter

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Last year, Stacey Spiegelberg watched and learned as she waited to join her team on the volleyball court.

This year, the sophomore setter will be starting as she helps lead the 2005 women's volleyball team.

She will be replacing Gabby Guerre, who graduated last year.

"I've been working extremely hard to try and fill what she left," Spiegelberg said of Guerre. "She's a great setter, so I have a big role to fill. It's been good though, I've jumped in and really enjoyed being a leader on the team."

In 2004, Guerre helped lead K-State back to the NCAA Tournament, earning First Team All-Big 12 honors for her third-straight season along the way. But now Guerre is gone, and Spiegelberg said she is set to take over.

While waiting in the wings last season, Spiegelberg said she learned a lot from Guerre's example.

"She was a great leader on this team," Spiegelberg said. "She taught me so many things while she was here, just little things that you don't really think about until someone points it out to you."

As Guerre's backup, Spiegelberg, who opted not to redshirt as a true freshman, saw action in 25 games, tallying 53 assists and garnering some valuable playing experience

Volleyball team young, yet optimistic

New team same expectations

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

K-State's projected starters for the 2005 volleyball team include Agata Rezende, Stacey Spiegelberg, Sandy Werner, Angie Lastra, Rita Lilliom, Katie Stanzel and Joy Hamlin. In the Big 12 coaches poll the Wildcats are currently picked as sixth place.

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A young team is no excuse for a letdown by K-State's volleyball team this season, said Coach Suzie Fritz.

But, having only two returning seniors and the loss of three primary contributors from last year's squad may have factored into the Big 12 Conference coaches' decision of choosing the Wildcats to finish sixth in the conference – the lowest in Fritz's tenure.

Fritz said her expectations for herself and her team remain high, and she is not concerned with what others think.

"We never cared when they (coaches and the media) said we were going to be second or third and we don't really care that they say we are going to be fifth or sixth," Fritz said. "What matters is where we are going to be in December."

Under Fritz's leadership, the Wildcats have compiled a 91-33 (.734) record in four seasons, including a Big 12 title in 2003.

For her efforts, Fritz was named Big 12 Coach of the Year in 2002 and 2003.

Despite the same high internal standards, K-State's coach said she realizes how hard it will be to return to a 10th straight NCAA Tournament, since her team has lost eight starters and three All-Americans during the last two seasons.

And while a young team is not an excuse for poor play, Fritz said there is no way to make up for Big 12 experience.

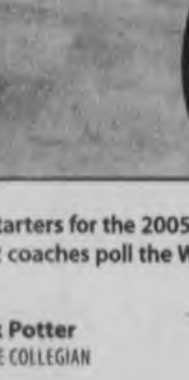
This season, sophomore captain Stacey Spiegelberg will replace All-American Gabby Guerre as setter.

Coach Fritz said she has confidence in Spiegelberg, who converted to setter late in her high school career.



"Stacey started to make this her team last spring," Fritz said. "At this point, I think she feels very comfortable in that role. Skill wise, she still has some room to grow. It has only been recently that she has really started to understand the demands of the setting position."

"But she is probably the most athletic setter we've ever had."

Spiegelberg, from Blue Valley Northwest High School in Overland Park, Kan., said she feels pressure in

K-State coaches should recognize strengths, open up offense

MATTHEW GIRARD

The 2005 K-State football season starts in exactly 14 days, and after last season's 4-7 effort, Wildcat fans will be looking to see how this year's team bounces back.

Heading into K-State's match-up with Florida International, questions such as "who will replace Darren Sproles?" and "is the defense going to give up 30 points a game?" are the most likely questions fans are asking themselves.

Although I'm wondering those same questions, my focus will be on the K-State passing game.

Regardless of who is the starter, juniors Dylan Meier and Allen Webb have a wealth of talented receivers to throw to this season and, as strange as it may sound, coach Bill Snyder's offense needs to revolve around the pass.

With targets like juniors Yamon Figurs and Jermaine Moreira, senior Davin Dennis and redshirt-freshman Brett Alstatt, there is no reason Snyder's quarterbacks shouldn't complete 60 percent of their passes.

Why is the 60-percent completion mark so important?

Four out of the top five teams ranked in the final 2004 Associated Press Top 25 Poll completed better than 65 percent of their passes.

But in order for K-State to claw its way back into contention for the Big 12 Conference North Division title, Snyder needs to let his quarterbacks throw the ball more often.

Meier and Webb had the highest overall combined completion percentage (56 percent) for a K-State quarterback since 1998, and combined for 1,957 yards through the air, so the potential to have a potent passing offense is there.

Another reason Snyder should open up the offense is that nobody in the conference will be expecting a pass-oriented K-State team. In Snyder's 16 seasons roaming the sidelines at KSU Stadium, only once has a Wildcat offense attempted passing the ball more than it attempted running it, and that was in 1989.

I'm not saying K-State needs to become the new Texas Tech, but Snyder and his coaches need to recognize their team's strengths. This year, that strength is one of the best receiving corps in the conference.

Equestrian | Duda Named Equestrian Assistant Coach

K-State announced the hiring of Ashley Duda as the assistant equestrian coach on Friday.

Duda, a May 2005 graduate of Virginia Tech University, where she competed in the Intercollegiate Horse Show Association and Intercollegiate Dressage Association, will serve as the hunt seat coach and will help head coach Teresa Slough with other duties of the Wildcat program.

"I am so thrilled to be at K-State and to be part of such an incredible equestrian program," Duda said in a release. "I am also excited about getting to work with such a talented group of riders and am looking forward to the start of our season."

TEN | Safin ousted out at Cincinnati Masters

MASON, Ohio — Marat Safin barely moved while the match-ending ace flew by, then tossed his racket onto the court in exasperation. The U.S. Open is at hand, and the Australian Open champ is in a bad way.

Safin

Wild card entry Robby Ginepri needed only 56 minutes Friday to knock Safin out of the $2.45 million Cincinnati Masters. Ginepri advanced to the semifinals with a 6-2, 6-3 victory over the hobbled Russian.

Top-ranked Roger Federer also reached the semifinals with a 6-4, 6-3 victory over Jose Acasuso. The rest of the field would be set after evening matches.

CFB | Groh gets new deal, raise of nearly $1 million

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — Virginia football coach Al Groh has agreed to a new contract that will make his annual compensation $1.7 million, giving him a raise of nearly $1 million after leading the Cavaliers to three straight bowl games.

The contract, announced Friday as a five-year deal but actually running through six seasons to Dec. 31, 2010, was signed earlier in August and is already in effect, athletic director Craig Littlepage said.

It calls for an annual salary of $240,000 and $1.46 million in compensation for fund-raising responsibilities, radio and television appearances and endorsements. It also includes performance bonuses tied to the Cavaliers' appearances in the postseason, including the Atlantic Coast Conference championship game, and its final ranking.

BISMARCK, N.D. — Dave Bliss, who resigned as Baylor University men's basketball coach in the wake of a scandal two years ago, is a candidate for the job of Dakota Wizards head coach, the Continental Basketball Association team's general manager says.

Bliss

Wizards general manager Jane Link confirmed that Bliss was one of approximately five candidates being considered for the position, which opened when the Wizards declined to renew the contract of coach Casey Owens.

NCAA | Appeals outlines for Indian mascots announced

INDIANAPOLIS — The NCAA said Friday that approval from American Indian tribes would be a primary factor in deciding appeals from schools that want to use Native American nicknames and mascots in postseason play.

The first review is scheduled to start next week.

Two weeks ago, the NCAA announced a ban on the use of American Indian imagery and nicknames by schools at postseason tournaments starting in February. Mascots will not be allowed to perform at tournament games, and band members and cheerleaders will also be barred from using Indian images on their uniforms beginning in 2008.

The NCAA's decision also prohibits schools with American Indian mascots from hosting future NCAA postseason events. Schools that have already been awarded postseason tournaments would have to cover any Indian depictions in their sports venues.

Free admission to Tuttle Creek for celebration

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State students hoping for some fun to fill the tedium before classes start Monday morning may find salvation at a pair of anniversary parties.

Tuttle Creek State Park will be celebrating the 100th Anniversary of Wildlife and Parks and the 50th Anniversary of the Parks Division by opening its doors and welcoming the community in for some free fun, according to a release from the park.

The anniversary is being celebrated state-wide with each park celebrating on a different weekend, said Bob Mathews, chief of Information and Education for Kansas Wildlife and Parks.

Mathews said the anniversary marks the organization of fish and game laws in Kansas in 1905 when, for the first time, a license was required to hunt in Kansas. He said that in 1955, the State Park and Resources Authority was founded. It would later become the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks.

Tuttle Creek will also be having its annual Free Entrance Days this weekend said Jessica Weninger, who works for the park through Americorps. Thus, participants will get in without paying the usual $6.50 vehicle entrance fee.

On Saturday, the celebration will feature an Antique Car show with participants from all over the region, and boat and RV shows displaying products offered by area merchants. Archery, BB gun shooting and fly fishing instruction will also be available.

A potluck dinner will begin at 6:30 tonight at the Man-Kan shelter, followed by a 1950s and 1960s dance at 8 p.m.

Those interested in taking a trip on the Kaw River can do just that Sunday at 9 a.m. Those interested can meet at the U.S. Highway 24 Bridge and rent a canoe for $20. Paddles and life preservers will be provided.

The trip is expected to last four hours, and will end at the St. George boat ramp. Participants must provide their own transportation back to the lake.

Sunday will also see a mud volleyball tournament at 11 a.m., a guided hike of the spillway canyon at 1 p.m., free target practice with shotguns and rifles – own guns and ammunition – at Fancy Creek Range, and a sand castle contest.

Students receive half-price zoo admission

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sunset Zoo is hosting Wildcat Week for K-State students, staff and faculty.

During the week of Aug. 21-27, admission is $2 for those with a K-State ID.

There will also be an end-of-the-season sale at the zoo's gift shop, with items 25-40 percent off.

Dianne Paukstelis, marketing and development officer, said the purpose of Wildcat Week is to make students aware of Manhattan's zoo. Many students, especially new students, are unaware of the zoo's existence.

"Anyone with an interest in conservation or animals should come to the zoo," she said.

In addition to discounts on admission and gift shop items, zookeepers will be in front of exhibits talking about enrichment of animals on August 27.

"Enrichment for animals includes food, use of paper mache animals and anything that stimulates a natural behavior," Paukstelis said.

Paukstelis said the week is also a time for students interested in vonlunteering at the zoo to get information on volunteering opportunities.

Scott Shoemaker, zoo director, said the rationale behind starting Wildcat Week was to help publicize the zoo existence and volunteering opportunities.

"The zoo is a great place to come out, stroll around and just relax," Shoemaker said.

Spirit calendar sales to begin next week

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Spirit Calendar will hit shelves next week.

The calendar will cost $15, with proceeds going to the cheerleading squad, mascots and the Big Cats.

Al Enlow, K-State cheerleading coach, said he wanted the photos for the calendar to push school spirit.

"There are two reasons for this calendar: to supplement the budget that athletics gives us and for people to pick it up and learn something that they didn't know about K-State," he said.

Willie the Wildcat and the Big Cats will be included in the photos.

The photos will feature the squad posing in places around campus. Enlow said there will be small blurbs of information about the particular place featured in the pose.

"Only being here at K-State for a year, I even learned things that I didn't know about K-State," Enlow said. "Hopefully the information will make people want to pick it up and learn some history."

He said students should buy the calendar because it reflects the spirit and tradition of K-State.

"It is all about school spirit, and I am really excited to see it," he said.

Aaron Knight, senior in modern languages, said he enjoyed making the calendar.

Knight said the calendar will sell well because many people want to support athletics.

He said students should buy the calendar because it supports fellow students.

It really shows the beauty of the K-State campus, he said.

"A lot of people see athletes and they don't usually think of them as students too," he said. "The calendar is all about the school and the money goes to support students."

Beating the heat

Students find ways to avoid the summer sun

By Iris Kalkofen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The mercury is rising as summer wears on in Manhattan. As stress builds from classes starting, students are seeking ways to stay cool from the sweltering August heat.

"I like to just get out the hose, wash my dog and wash myself," Abe Beezely, junior in architecture, said. "Other than that I'd suggest sitting in a tub of ice."

Though ice may be a bit extreme, one other way to beat the heat is to head to any of Manhattan's many outdoor areas.

Pillsbury Crossing, about 10 miles outside downtown Manhattan, has a swimming area and rope swing, with places to jump from trees into the water.

People can wade and swim in the rock bottom creek as well. This is a place visitors could have a picnic and watch the waterfall.

Tuttle Creek State Park is another option with boating and swimming areas. There are two designated swimming beaches. Tuttle Cove with a buoyed swimming area and a small playground costs $1 per person with a $4 maximum per car.

The other swimming spot is the River Pond Area and has a large sand beach with a daily motor vehicle entrance permit required. It also provides boat ramps and fishing areas.

Tuttle Creek also offers canoe and kayak rentals for those interested.

"I like going to the lake to go jet skiing, barbecue or just hanging out with friends," Doug Baier, junior in business management, said.

Tuttle Creek also offers many different trails for walking or biking, and some for equestrian riding, and even off-road trails.

Some students find relief in the many pools around Manhattan. Other than city pools, especially those in City Park and CiCo Park, there are also numerous pools at apartment complexes.

The city pools are changing their hours as the summer winds down, so it is advised to either call the pool or find them on the city's Web site for more information.

For those trying to stay out of the sun, there is always the Natatorium, which is free for students with a student ID and $3 per person, per day for non-students.

Some other ways to stay cool and out of the sun are to visit the Manhattan Town Center or other shopping areas in Manhattan such as Aggieville and the old downtown on Poyntz Avenue. The cost of these is only what you make it, but as any college student knows, it can add up quickly.

"Another way to stay cool is to sit on the free wireless Internet at Bluestem Bistro," Jessica Feltner, Manhattan resident and K-State student, said.

For students not afraid to spend a little money, the air-conditioned Seth Childs Cinema can provide comfort. Movies cost $7.50 and show times can be found online.

Other options include the movies in the K-State Student Union on weekends.

Finally, a possible way to get instant relief from the heat would be to cool down with ice cream or a cold drink from one of the many restaurants around town including K-State's own Call Hall ice cream.

"I've told tons of freshmen about Call Hall ice cream because it's cheap, good and you get tons of it," Baier said.

"In Case We Die"
Album review by Mark Sibilla

As a music critic, it is inherently my job to give enough information and personal testament to allow the reader to decide whether or not a certain album is right for them.

Every once in a while, an album comes along that defies classification and creates difficulty for me to fully express the joy of listening to that particular album. Such is the case with Australia's indie-pop octet, Architecture in Helsinki.

In order to create a common ground between the listener and myself, I (and many other critics) often attempt to compare a certain artist or group to the one being reviewed. The two most common examples for comparison to Architecture in Helsinki I have read from other articles are The Fiery Furnaces' "Blueberry Boat" or the pocket symphonies created by pop mastermind Brian Wilson.

Already these examples pose a problem. Of the 25 people who read any articles I've written, I'm sure only a few are even familiar with The Fiery Furnaces, let alone have heard the album. Likewise, many people's knowledge of the works of Brian Wilson doesn't expand much past "California Girls." This creates a harrowing obstacle to a music review.

Yet, I digress. Architecture in Helsinki has created a mini-masterpiece with its second album, "In Case We Die." It is a pop album of playful mini-symphonies that are sweet and fun, but rarely do they devolve into the overly saccharine. It's the sound of the Muppets taking LSD and being let loose in a warehouse full of musical instruments.

What do I mean by "mini-symphonies?" A perfect example is album opener, "Nevereverdid." The song begins with a series of ominously ringing funeral bells. A short fugue section follows where voices sing a gorgeous melody that is echoed numerous times by more voices and/or a horn section.

The track builds to a huge crescendo of voices and instruments before silence suddenly falls. A tinkling piano begins to play and one of the female members sweetly sings over the piano line. This changes yet again into a series of percussive clanks that builds to a bouncy Krautrock section that finishes out the track.

What should be dizzying and cluttered is very charming. Architecture in Helsinki always manages to have a musical or vocal hook that gives the listener something to hold onto as sections change or tempos and dynamics rise and fall.

Architecture in Helsinki wants listeners to realize that life is too short to be bad-tempered. The best lesson that "In Case We Die" teaches appears in the closing lines of the title track: "And baby when we get older we don't have to get colder."

Two brothers overcome emotional and physical obstacles to achieve success in the competitive world of Supercross racing. The brothers' conflicts are magnified by their different life choices and their decision to become competitors and rivals.

"The 40 Year Old Virgin" (R)
1:10, 4:10, 7:10, 9:50
40-year-old Andy Stitzer (Steve Carell) has done quite a few things in his life. He's got a cushy job stamping invoices at an electronics superstore, a nice apartment with a proud collection of action figures and comic books, good friends, a nice attitude. But there's just one little thing he hasn't quite gotten around to doing yet — something most people have done by his age. Andy's never, ever, ever had sex.

"The Dukes of Hazzard" (PG-13)
1:30, 4:15, 7:00, 9:30
Set in present day, the story follows the adventures of "good old boy" cousins, Bo (Seann William Scott) and Luke (Johnny Knoxville) Duke, who with the help of their eye-catching cousin Daisy (Jessica Simpson) and moonshine running Uncle Jesse (Willie Nelson), try and save the family farm from being destroyed by Hazzard County's corrupt commissioner Boss Hogg (Burt Reynolds).

"Wedding Crashers" (R)
1:20, 4:20, 7:20, 10
Vaughn and Wilson star as a pair of divorce mediators who spend their weekends crashing weddings in a search for Ms. Right...for a night. But when one of them falls for the engaged daughter (Rachel McAdams) of an influential and eccentric politician (Christopher Walken) at the social event of the year, they get roped into spending a weekend at the family's palatial waterfront estate and quickly find themselves in over their heads.

Kansas teen remembered after tiger attack

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ALTAMONT, Kan. – A local teenager who was killed while having her picture taken with a Siberian tiger was remembered by classmates and teachers for her energy and "zeal for life," while two animal welfare groups demanded investigations into the attack.

Haley Hilderbrand, 17, was visiting the Lost Creek Animal Sanctuary on Thursday in Mound Valley, where, for years, area high school seniors have gone to have their class photos taken alongside the sanctuary's exotic fauna.

While the 7-year-old tiger was being restrained by the sanctuary's owner, Doug Billingsly, it turned and severely bit Hilderbrand, who later died of her wounds.

The tiger was killed and has been sent to Kansas State University for a necropsy.

Authorities said this was the first incident involving the sanctuary's animals since it opened in 1994 as a home to almost two dozen wild animals, including bears, lions, leopards and several species of tiger.

Wayne Pacelle, president and chief executive officer of the Humane Society of the United States, said state and federal officials should investigate.

"People are naturally fascinated by these wild and dangerous creatures, but that doesn't mean they should have direct access to these powerful and unpredictable animals," Pacelle said.

"A spate of recent attacks demonstrates that these animals pose a threat to public safety and should only be handled by highly trained professionals in controlled environments at accredited zoos."

The People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals went a step further, demanding that the U.S. Department of Agriculture yank Billingsly's license to operate the sanctuary.

"Keeping animals in totally unnatural, cramped, substandard conditions isn't just inhumane, it's downright dangerous," said director Debbie Leahy.

USDA spokesman Darby Holladay said regulations require that exhibitors of big cats keep adequate distance or barriers between the animals and the viewing public and said an investigation is ongoing.

Billingsly declined to comment to The Parsons Sun and hasn't returned phone calls and e-mails from The Associated Press for comment.

Billingsly's neighbors said they haven't had problems with the animals and said Billingsly ran a good operation and always warned visitors about the animals' unpredictability.

Lofts give students space

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's that time of year again. When parents flood the parking lots around the residence halls with totes full of their children's college necessities.

But, when new students open the door to survey their new home for the next two semesters, many find too little space for keeping their mini-fridges and computer desks.

That's when several area businesses step in with a solution that seems to grow out of several near-campus lawns like the trees from which they were fashioned: lofts.

A loft is a raised bed frame that places a bed several more feet off the ground, creating extra space in tight quarters like dorm rooms for things like small couches, desks, chairs or simply additional floor space.

The main provider of lofts at K-State is Presidential Lofts, Derek Jackson, assistant director of housing for residence life, said.

Owned by Matt Kennedy, senior in education, the company has a contract with the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls, Kansas State University lets them install lofts in rooms before move-in day for students who pre-order.

Kennedy declined to comment on the number of lofts he sells each year, but he did say that he has a crew of about 30 employees who install them. Presidential Lofts charges $219 for each loft it installs.

Mead Lumber Do-It Center is also in the loft business and has already sold around 20 units this year, employee Dennis Zimmerman said. The company offers three packages for students desiring the space-saving furniture. For the student with assembly skills, the company offers the pre-cut wood and fasteners needed to put one together for $99.

For more information

- The Loft Guy $140
(785) 410-2543
- Lofts 101 $150
(785) 770-7549
- Mead Lumber Do-It Center $99-$150
(785) 776-4811
- Presidential Lofts $219
(785) 220-1452

One level up is the semi-assembled package for $129, with the loft in several pieces that are easier to transport and assemble on location. Mead Lumber Do-It Center charges $150 for on-site assembly anywhere in Manhattan.

These two companies aren't alone in the business, however. Several other competitors are vying for their own piece of the pie. Boone Burnside, senior in cor.struction science, said he sold 86 of the bed-elevation aides last year through his own enterprise, The Loft Guy.

Burnside has been operating the business for three years, during which time he has sold more than 200 units. Burnside said he and his crew of friends, also construction science majors, can install a loft in any dorm room in about 30 minutes, but it "depends on how messy the room is."

New to the business this year is Lofts 101, run by Manhattan resident L.G. Novotny, 20, and Kevin Schamberger, junior in financial management. The two said they have sold four lofts so far and hope to sell 20 to 30 of them this year at $150 each.

Not every student feels the need for a loft on arrival. Some, like Megan Specht, freshman in business administration, bring their own. Specht and her family were preparing to move her things, including a used loft bought from a family friend, into her room in Ford Hall.

She was unsure what would go beneath it, waiting to make the decision until she could work it out with her roommate.

"Either a bed or desk, it depends on how we get it set up," Specht said.

Other families get more inventive.

Joe Horvath, Wichita, took a different path to get a loft for his daughter, Julie Horvath, freshman in hospitality management.

"I downloaded plans for a few different designs online and combined them into my own,"

Discovery heads to Florida 1 week after landing in Mojave

By Alicia Chang
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. – Discovery rode piggyback atop a jumbo jet Friday for a cross-country trip to Florida, more than a week after it landed in the Mojave Desert to become the first space shuttle to return to Earth since the Columbia tragedy.

The modified Boeing 747 carrying the shuttle lifted off at 8:31 a.m. for Cape Canaveral. It will make several stops – the first one in Oklahoma to refuel during the 2,232-mile trip, which was expected to cost NASA at least $1 million.

Discovery and its seven-member crew touched down Aug. 9 at the Edwards backup landing site after a 14-day mission to service the international space station. NASA diverted the landing to California after low clouds and lightning prevented the shuttle from returning to Florida on four earlier attempts.

After landing, Discovery underwent maintenance inside a steel structure on the base two hours north of Los Angeles. Crews purged the shuttle of hazardous substances and removing fuel from the on-board tanks.

Thunderstorms late Monday forced crews to temporarily suspend preparations for the shuttle's ferry home. Technicians attached a 10,000-pound aluminum tail cone to the shuttle to eliminate drag during flight.

Discovery's homecoming has been tempered by uncertainties about the shuttle program's future.

The same foam issue that doomed Columbia 2 1/2 years ago showed up during Discovery's liftoff, prompting NASA to ground all shuttle flights until 2006 so engineers could solve the problem.

A chunk of foam insulation broke off Discovery's redesigned external fuel tank during blastoff on July 26, but unlike Columbia's case, the foam missed hitting Discovery. Columbia disintegrated over Texas, killing all seven astronauts on board, when a foam piece pierced a hole in the spacecraft's left wing during re-entry.

NASA ground crews who inspected Discovery after its return from orbit found little damage to its exterior. Technicians counted about 100 dings and divots around the shuttle's protective thermal tiles, including one-fifth that were larger than one inch. Those numbers were similar to the results of other shuttle post-landing inspections.

A preliminary inspection of the shuttle's thermal blanket under the commander's cockpit window, which looked torn from orbit, showed that it remained intact during re-entry.

While the protective blanket was a bit frayed and stuck slightly outward, it did not show any scorch marks.

During their mission, Discovery's crew spent nine days docked to the international space station, restocking it and resupplying the crew, fixing broken equipment and hauling out trash.

Discovery's astronauts also conducted intense inspections of their own shuttle for damage and tested repair techniques developed after the Columbia accident.

Cause of explosion, fire unknown

By Paul Elias
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO – A fiery explosion from an underground utility chamber rocked a section of downtown Friday, burning a woman and shattering store windows, authorities said.

Several blocks were evacuated around the Ralph Lauren store in the Crocker Galleria area. Firefighters quickly doused a flaming awning.

A crew from Pacific Gas & Electric Co. was not immediately able to determine the cause of the blast in its electrical vault because a bomb squad was investigating, company spokesman Paul Moreno said. He said there was no indication of a gas leak.

"The explosion did displace manhole covers – two round steel ones – and it also displaced a concrete cover as well," Moreno said.

Tom Demartini, a construction worker who was sitting in his truck outside the store, said he saw the sidewalk rise up six or seven inches.

"It sounded like a big poof, then there was a lot of smoke," Demartini said. "One woman looked like she was badly burned."

A woman was taken to the emergency room at St. Francis Hospital, where spokeswoman Linda Gillespie had no immediate comment on her condition.

The woman's name was not released.

Scores of police officers and firefighters closed off the area, and evacuated office workers milled about in the aftermath.

Workers in a nearby office building said the blast shook their buildings and they thought it was an earthquake. One woman said the elevator in her building stopped.

Carbon monoxide ruled out as cause of plane crash

By Elena Becatoros
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATHENS, Greece – Carbon monoxide did not knock out some of the passengers and crew of a Cypriot airliner before it crashed in the Greek mountains, coroners said Friday, deepening the mystery as to what caused the disaster that killed all 121 people on board.

Fillipos Koutsaftis, chief coroner of Athens, said tests were carried out on the remains of the co-pilot, three female flight attendants, an infant and an adult who were on the flight that went down Sunday about 25 miles north of the Greek capital.

More tests were being conducted to determine what could have rendered crew and passengers aboard the Helios Airways Flight ZU522 from Larnaca, Cyprus, unconscious during the flight. The plane flew on autopilot before crashing.

Koutsaftis said a few more days were needed to run the toxicological tests.

"This was the fastest test and the most secure," he said after meeting Justice Minister Anastasios Papaligouras. "We are still doing tests for other gases, poisons, drugs and alcohol."

Earlier tests showed that at least 26 people on the flight were still alive when it crashed. There has been speculation that an electrical fire or some other cause could have flooded the cabin with carbon monoxide or another gas.

"I don't know and can't rule out that something else could have been responsible," Koutsaftis said.

things as they visited each of K-State's 11 houses, participated in activities and narrowed their choices to a final three.

Sorority recruitment is "a great way for the girls to find a home away from home," said Rebecca Teel, Alpha Chi Omega chapter president and senior in public relations.

According to Greek Affairs, only 463 of the 533 potential new members were extended invitations to pledge a sorority on Aug. 18. The number dropped from 528 invitations extended to 573 potential new members in 2004. Greek Affairs suggested the decrease in participation related to the drop in enrollment at the university.

However, others said the answer may lie in what is expected from new members.

"We want them to fit into the house," Teel said. "We look for girls that have something to offer to the house and that there is something we can offer them."

FEATURE | Spiegelberg replaces Guerre as starting setter

while making the transition from the high school to the college game.

"The speed of the (college) game is hard to adjust to and then the strength of the players," Spiegelberg said. "Everyone is bigger and stronger in college. As a freshman, experience was important because I knew this year I would have to play – so getting some experience on the court was good."

Coach Suzie Fritz said inexperience shouldn't be an issue for Spiegelberg after going through the team's spring season as the starting setter.

"Stacey started to make this her team last spring, so this isn't a new thing for her," Fritz said. "We went through an entire spring season with her leading our team, setting for our team and running our offense and I think at this point she feels very comfortable in that role."

Fritz said Spiegelberg, who has only been setting since her junior year of high school, is continuing to learn all the nuances of the position.

"Skill-wise she still has some room to go," Fritz said. "She wasn't a setter really in high school. It's really been recently that she's starting to understand the demands of the setting position. In terms of athleticism, she's probably the most athletic setter we've ever had."

Added to the challenge of being a first-year starter at setter, Spiegelberg, along with senior outside hitter Agata Rezende, was named a team captain for 2005. As a captain, she must provide leadership to a team with only two seniors and seven freshmen.

As an outside hitter, Rezende said she will be counting on Spiegelberg for good sets all season. She said Spiegelberg has done a solid job filling Guerre's role as setter and team leader.

"She has been great," Rezende said. "I trust Stacey so much, and she has been a very hard worker and has made so much improvement since I've been here."

Spiegelberg said her role as captain has added significance because the team has seven freshmen.

"Everyone looks to you to tell them where to go and it's definitely important that I'm a leader," Spiegelberg said. "We are a young team but we're full of energy and we're working hard to make up for our inexperience we're just trying to get better everyday."

trying to replace Guerre, but she looks forward to the challenge.

"She is a great setter, and I have a big role to fill," Spiegelberg said. "She taught me so many things while she was here. I have jumped in and really enjoyed being a leader on this team."

Spiegelberg said the team has practiced with a high level of enthusiasm.

"We are a young team, but we are full of energy, and we are working hard every day to make up for our inexperience," she said.

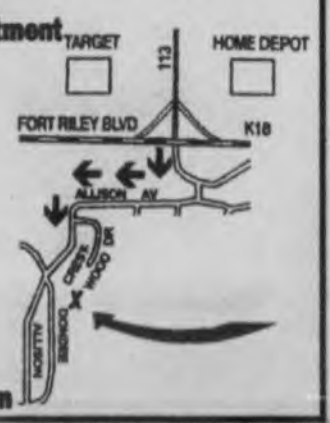
Rezende, who transferred from Western Nebraska Community College in 2003, said she takes her leadership role seriously.

"It is going to be very important for me to lead this team and make them compete, and to make these players realize how important it will be to have every player step in and play volleyball," Rezende said. "I need to take the responsibilities, and I need to be an example to the young players."

Megan Farr, a redshirt freshman from Manhattan, said it was difficult watching her team and not being able to contribute last season.



Nevertheless, she is looking forward to playing in her hometown.

"It will be pretty intimidating with all the people, but I am really excited," Farr said.

Commissioners defer casino vote

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA – The Sedgwick County Commission's decision to put off a referendum on building a casino may have ended plans for a resort casino in Park City, former Wichita mayor Bob Knight said.

The commission agreed at a meeting Wednesday to indefinitely defer voting on the referendum.

"The governor and the state tell us we have to get local approval and this was the way," said Knight, who is helping Park City lobby for the casino. "Now we can't get that. Most of our options are pretty much foreclosed on."

In January, Knight and other supporters unveiled plans for a $200 million resort casino, with a 300-room hotel, three restaurants, an event center and an indoor-outdoor water park. The proposal is for construction in conjunction with the Iowa Tribe of Kansas and Nebraska under the American Indian Gaming Act.

Two developers also have competing plans to build a hotel and casino in downtown Wichita.

In August, the five commissioners had supported a nonbinding referendum on the issue. But some of them changed their minds Wednesday, after Rep. Brenda Landwehr, R-Wichita, and eight other legislators told them that the casino issue should be decided by the state, not the county.

They also brought a document to the meeting showing that 20 of the 29 state legislators from Sedgwick County opposed the referendum.

County Commission Chairman Dave Unruh said he didn't want to approve a referendum that so many local legislators opposed.

"No matter what we do, this falls back to the state Legislature," Unruh said.

Only one commissioner said she was prepared to vote for a referendum.

Lucy Burtnett, who represents Park City, said "people still deserve a vote on this issue."

Other commissioners said phone calls, letters and e-mails from those opposed to the casino far outweighed supporters.

"Do they want people to call for and against?" Knight asked. "They should have let people know this was a phoning contest. If that's what the commission wants, I'm sure that can be arranged."

In early August, Rep. Nile Dillmore, D-Wichita, and Rep. Todd Novascone, R-Wichita, asked the commission to authorize the nonbinding referendum to give them guidance on the issue during the legislative session.

Missile narrowly misses U.S. Navy ship, kills 1

By Shafika Mattar
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS WRITER

AQABA, Jordan – Attackers firing Katyusha rockets narrowly missed a U.S. amphibious assault ship docked at Red Sea resort Friday, but killed a Jordanian soldier in the most serious strike at the Navy since the USS Cole bombing nearly five years ago.

Two more rockets were shot toward nearby Israel without causing serious damage.

Jordanian security forces hunted for at least six Egyptian, Syrian and Iraqi suspects, and an al-Qaeda-linked group that previously claimed responsibility for terror bombings in three Egyptian resorts said it staged the attack here.

The string of attacks over 10 months has raised fears Islamic extremists are opening a new arena of combat in Egypt's Sinai Peninsula and the Gulf of Aqaba, an area bordered by Israel, Egypt and Jordan that is known for carefree tourist resorts and Arab-Israeli peace talks.

In addition to striking U.S. targets, some extremist Muslims would like to topple the governments of Jordan and Egypt, which are longtime allies of Washington and also have peace treaties with Israel.

The Abdullah Azzam Brigades, a militant group that claimed to be behind bombings which killed at least 64 people at Sharm el-Sheik in July and 34 people at two other Egyptian resorts last October, posted a statement on the Internet saying its fighters fired the rockets Friday.

"A group of our holy warriors ... targeted a gathering of American military ships docking in Aqaba port," said the statement, which also threatened to bring down King Abdullah II of Jordan.

One rocket sailed over the bow of the USS Ashland about 8:44 a.m., Lt. Cmdr. Charlie Brown, a spokesman for the U.S. 5th Fleet in Bahrain, told The Associated Press.

The missile hit a nearby Jordanian military warehouse that U.S. forces use to store goods bound for Iraq, Jordanian officials said. The blast killed one Jordanian soldier and wounded another, the state Petra news agency reported. No Americans were injured.

Brown said the Ashland had docked on Aug. 13 with the helicopter carrier USS Kearsarge at Aqaba's port, south of the city, for joint exercises with Jordan's military. Both vessels left after the attack as a precaution, he said.

The vessels, which are based in Norfolk, Va., carried elements of the 26th Marine Expeditionary Unit from Camp Lejeune, N.C. It was unknown how many Marines and sailors were on board, but the Ashland can carry up to 400 sailors and 500 Marines, and the Kearsarge 1,100 crew and 1,900 Marines.

Cmdr. Jeff Breslau, another 5th Fleet spokesman, said he knew of no specific warnings of imminent attack, but he said U.S. warships in the Middle East always operate under increased security.

He said the Navy assumed the rocket was fired at the U.S. ships and missed, but authorities had not confirmed that. Several civilian cargo ships were docked nearby.

The Bush administration condemned the attack.

"We are investigating the matter and will cooperate with local Jordanian officials on the attacks," said White House spokeswoman Dana Perino, who was with the vacationing President Bush in Crawford, Texas.

It was the most serious attack involving a Navy vessel since October 2000, when al-Qaeda-linked militants rammed a boat loaded with explosives into the destroyer Cole off Yemen, killing 17 sailors and severely damaging the vessel.

Also in the region, a small Navy craft intercepted a dhow approaching an Iraqi oil platform in the Persian Gulf last year and the dhow exploded, killing two sailors and a Coast Guardsman.

All three rockets fired on Friday – the one at the port and the two at Israel – appeared to have been fired from a building in a warehouse district in the hills on Aqaba's northern edge, about 5 miles from the port, said a Jordanian intelligence official who showed journalists the site.

Two Katyusha rockets – highly inaccurate unguided weapons used by Lebanon's Hezbollah guerrillas to attack northern Israel – were fired to the west toward Israel. One sailed across the border, hitting a road about 15 yards from the perimeter fence at the airport for the resort of Eilat, about 9 miles from Aqaba.

"I heard a noise, the car shook, and I kept driving for two more meters (yards)," said Israeli cab driver Meir Farhan, 40, who suffered minor wounds. "I didn't realize what it was. When I went out of the car I saw a hole in the ground on the asphalt."

The third rocket hit the backyard wall of Jordan's Princess Haya Military Hospital, which lies between the suspected firing site and the Israeli border.

The two-story building from which the rockets were apparently launched has garages on the ground floor.

On the second floor is a 3-by-3-foot window from which the attackers are thought to have fired the rockets, said the intelligence official, who spoke on condition of anonymity because of intelligence agency rules.

The building was rented this week by four people holding Egyptian and Iraqi nationalities, Jordan's state-run Petra news agency reported, citing preliminary investigations.

Rock Creek graduate to compete on CBS's Survivor

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Brandon Bellinger has never feared taking risks.

Whether it's leaping from the peak of his roof onto a giant elm tree or scaling a cell phone tower, Bellinger is always willing to take a challenge.

The Manhattan resident's fearlessness will be shown nationally as he competes on CBS' "Survivor, Guatemala."

Brandon Bellinger, 2001 graduate of Rock Creek High School and Manhattan resident, was selected for "Survivor: Guatemala" after auditioning in January.

Filming for the 11th season began on June 27 and lasted 39 days. It will air on CBS beginning Sept. 15.

If, and when Bellinger is voted off, he will appear on "The Early Show" and the grand finale with the entire cast at the end of the season.

Bellinger
"SURVIVOR"

His family said Bellinger has always had a knack for taking risks.

Steve Bellinger, Brandon's older brother, recalled an instance a year-and-a-half ago when he and Brandon were on the roof of their house.

Brandon was at the 30-foot peak of the roof and stood there for 10 minutes before convincing himself to jump onto a large elm tree 15 feet away.

"It was pretty impressive," Steve Bellinger said. "Just looking down at the tree makes your knees shake."

Steve said his younger brother has also climbed to top of a cell phone tower.

Brandon's work as a forest firefighter at Bitterroot National Forest in Montana during summer 2004 prepped him for the physical brutality of "Survivor."

Kate Bellinger, Brandon's mother, said she had reservations about her son being on the show.

"I was somewhat worried, but not too much," she said. "He wants to go out and be adventurous and do these things in life, so why stand in his way? He's pretty self-reliant and a tough young guy."

Alliances with cast members are a crucial aspect of success on the show. Brandon's family said that doesn't bode particularly well for him.

"Brandon would never stab anybody in the back," Steve said. "He's always looking for the best in life, but he doesn't want to hurt anybody to get there."

Cory Smith, a graduate student in accounting and a 2001 Rock Creek High School graduate, remembers Brandon as being the life of parties while in high school.

He thinks that could endear Brandon to those watching the show this fall.

"It will be fun to watch Brandon try to make friends on the show," Smith said, "especially with the ladies."

When Brandon returns, he is obligated by contract to not say anything about what happened until the show airs.

"It will be good for me to watch the show and enjoy it because I am not going to know what's going on any more than other viewers," Kate Bellinger said.

She said her son's plans for the future are working on the family farm this winter. After that, he said, it's anyone's guess.

"Brandon wants to try different things in the future, such as traveling and seeing new places and scenery," she said.

Steve said Brandon's wild and crazy personality will make him fun to watch on the show.

"Win or lose, he's still a great guy," he said.

Textbook return policy being strictly enforced

By Kyle Lauridsen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As fall semester begins, students and parents are once again feeling the pinch of tuition and textbook prices.

The prices alone are enough to complain about, but this year an extra slip attached to the bulky receipt has people talking.

Bookstores including Varney's and the K-State Student Union Bookstore, have policies refraining from giving complete refunds on books for most circumstances. If a class is dropped or cancelled, the student can return their books with a receipt for a full refund by Sept. 2.

However, there must be verification students are no longer enrolled in the class before the refund can be made. A dropped class slip will meet the required verification.

The bookstore will receive information from the professor on cancelled classes or if a specific book is not being used for a specific class.

Students such as Henry Marquardt around campus have expressed disapproval for this policy.

"It drives me to buy books online even more than I did before," Marquardt, junior in finance, said. "I use KSUbooks.com and Half.com"

Kyle Smith, freshman in business, said he agreed.

"They are just trying to get as much money out of us as they can," he said.

The bookstores didn't start the return policy this year. In fact, Union Bookstore manager Steve Levin they have had this return policy for a while.

This year, however, enforcement on the policy is much tougher than in the past.

Levin said students were using the store as a library. Students would buy their books, then shop around online to possibly find a better deal. The books would then be returned to the store.

Levin said this created a problem for the store when the book supply would run out. Some students would still need a copy of a particular book which was sold out. The bookstore would then order another shipment of the sold out book for anyone who still needed it.

Unfortunately for the store, he said, many students would then return their books after finding better deals, leaving the second shipment plus all the returned books in stock.

The return policy will undoubtedly encourage more shopping elsewhere for books, but that doesn't mean local bookstores should be overlooked.

"I believe we have good pricing," Levin said. "We understand if a student gets the wrong book by mistake and needs to exchange it. We will work with them to make sure they get the right book."

Manhattan High alumni plan to share history

By Laura Noll
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan High School alumni have developed plans to honor their alma mater.

The nearly one-year-old MHS Alumni Association is pursuing an idea to create an alumni center and museum in an existing room on the school's east campus.

Talk of organizing an alumni center and museum began after the basic idea, credited to Don Pady, was presented to the MHS Alumni Association.

Dave Fiser, MHS Alumni Association President, said the idea then grew as the association considered the many requests that had been submitted through the past for class information. Fiser said the alumni center would open a new way to communicate with alumni.

Fiser also said the MHS Alumni Center and Museum will house alumni records, news articles, pictures and memorabilia while acting as a historical reference to Manhattan High School.

Randy Martin, USD 383 Board of Education president, said planning for the project has yet to hit the Board of Education level. To his knowledge, current development of the project is in the hands of volunteers and the MHS Alumni Association.

There are many people in the Manhattan area that take pride in having graduated from Manhattan High School, Fiser said.

The alumni association has received outstanding feedback from the community concerning the project, Fiser said.

"I think it's a great idea to help keep in touch," said Ben Fenwick, MHS Alumna and 2005 K-State Graduate.

The alumni association, though young, has about 170 members and has yet to have its anticipated membership drive. Fiser optimistically predicted that in the future, membership would grow to 1,000 alumni or more.

In addition to the development of the alumni center and museum, Fiser said the alumni association's future projects include hosting a Homecoming Social for past MHS graduates and organizing a parade in which each class of Manhattan High School graduates would be represented by a vintage car.

Alumni wishing to help with the organization process of the MHS Alumni Center and Museum can join the MHS Alumni Association online at www.mhsalumniassociation.org. Fiser added alumni can also aid the development of the museum by donating memorabilia to be displayed.

The association's Web site also provides links to information about alumni, class announcements, and additional alumni association information.

"We're interested in any ideas to strengthen our support and the support of Manhattan High School," said Fiser. "The sky is the limit."

Those interested in joining the Manhattan High School Alumni Association should visit www.mhsalumniassociation.org.

K-State attendance policy requires students attend first day of classes

- The Jan. 12 edition of the Collegian stated that K-State's attendance policy is that instructors may drop students from a class if they are absent at the beginning of the first day of the class without making contact with the instructor before the absence.
- More than 100 students were dropped from classes on the first day of fall 2004.
- Student Senate and Faculty Senate discussed making changes to the policy in spring 2005, but the changes were not passed.
- Student objections stem from the possibility of family emergencies, of getting lost, of illness or other reasons for absence from a class. Also, some instructors are listed as "staff" on the course schedule, giving students no one to contact about an absence on the first day of class.

SGA to address online T-Vals, library bond

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

New programs and funding are major issues the Student Governing Association will address this semester.

ONLINE TEACHER EVALUATIONS

Online T-Vals were a major issue in 2005, and now it seems they might become a reality.

Student Senate Chair Tyson Moore said SGA and Faculty Senate have worked on plans and will submit their ideas at the beginning of the semester.

Michael Burns, student body president and senior in Agricultural Economics, said the Wildcat Information Network, the online student portal, will likely house the T-Vals.

Currently, paper surveys are filled out by students and processed electronically.

Burns said the T-Vals should be up and running by the end of the semester.

"We just want to make sure we work with Faculty Senate, so they have the opportunity to have their say," he said.

KANSAS BOARD OF REGENTS

More than 40 recommendations were made by the Regents to the state regarding funding and other issues, Burns said.

The Student Advisory Committee supports 11 of the recommendations and opposes one.

The recommendations include the state allocating 15.5 percent of its budget for higher education, increasing building maintenance funding, increasing financial aid in connection with increasing tuition and creating a community and technical college system for community colleges and post-secondary technical institutions.

SAC does not support increasing out-of-state tuition.

HONOR'S PROGRAM

An university-wide honors program was another big issue in the student presidential race last semester.

Burns and Moore said SGA will work with Provost Duane Nellis to establish an university-wide program.

K-State doesn't have an university-wide honors programs, but each college has its own program.

HALE LIBRARY BOND

Each semester, students pay $10.27 in fees toward bonds used to fund Hale Library construction. Those bonds will be able to be paid in full sooner than anticipated and SGA is going to look at possible options for that money.

Students voted against spending the money on a Center for Student Activities in the Spring.

"We're going to see what the state of the bond is and what the next step should be," Moore said.

SAFERIDE

Moore said Senate will look at giving more funding to SafeRide, so it can serve the students as fully as it has been.

SafeRide is a program that runs Thursday through Saturday 11 p.m. to 3 a.m. offering students a safe, free ride home by showing their student ID card. Its number is 539-0480.

Students attend dinner, dance

By Kyle Lauridsen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The dorms finally began to calm down yesterday as students finished moving into their rooms.

The community assistants of Haymaker and Ford halls had a full schedule planned to welcome students to the complex.

To begin the agenda, many of the floors had mandatory meetings where resident assistants went over the rules and regulations for living in residence halls.

Also, members of the hall governing boards took time to explain their purpose and how they can benefit students residing in the halls.

Residents endured long lines to be served hamburgers and hot dogs cooked by their resident and community assistants.

"The picnic was a way to welcome back students to the dorms and let people interact while eating food," Angela Whay, freshman in art, said.

For many, the gathering was a way for residents to not only meet new people, but reconnect with old friends.

"I got to hang out with people I know from high school," Sam Fahrenholtz, freshman in physics, said.

"It's good to catch up on people you missed all summer."

Rounding out the night, students made their way over to a dance staged near the residential parking-lot.

"The dance wasn't what I expected it would be," Justin Williams, freshman in business, said. "I thought it would be a lot bigger and more people would have come."

"[The dance] was magical," he said.

"The lights reflecting off of the happy faces of new students' faces filled me with pride and joy as I embark on my college career."

TO THE POINT

Policy will force students to find books elsewhere

K-State students are wilting under the burden of increased tuition and rising textbooks costs, and now the screws are being put to them once again.

Varney's Book Store and the K-State Student Union Bookstore announced a new textbook return policy this fall – or rather, the enforcement of one that has been in place for years.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

No longer can students go to class, decide which books are needed, and return the rest of them. Instead, a professor's note stating the books are in fact unnecessary or the class has been cancelled must accompany the returns, or a student must show proof they have dropped a class.

One of the reasons for this policy is to prevent students from purchasing their textbooks and then shopping around for a better deal.

Welcome to capitalism, baby. Welcome to a free-market economy.

This policy is going to adversely affect local businesses by driving more students to online booksellers. If they are afraid of the competition, then local bookstores need to find ways to lower their prices.

Professors can do their part as well.

Students shouldn't be forced to go to local bookstores to find out what textbooks are required for the semester. Instead, reading lists should be available via listservs and on the Web before the start of class.

That would help alleviate problems with students purchasing books at local bookstores and then finding better deals elsewhere.

Regardless, students should have the right to return textbooks in new condition during a reasonable amount of time for any reason.

Old school learning

Peter Jennings proved success is possible without secondary education

CHRISTINA FORSBERG

Most of us face a constant struggle to figure out what we want to do and how to find our place in the world.

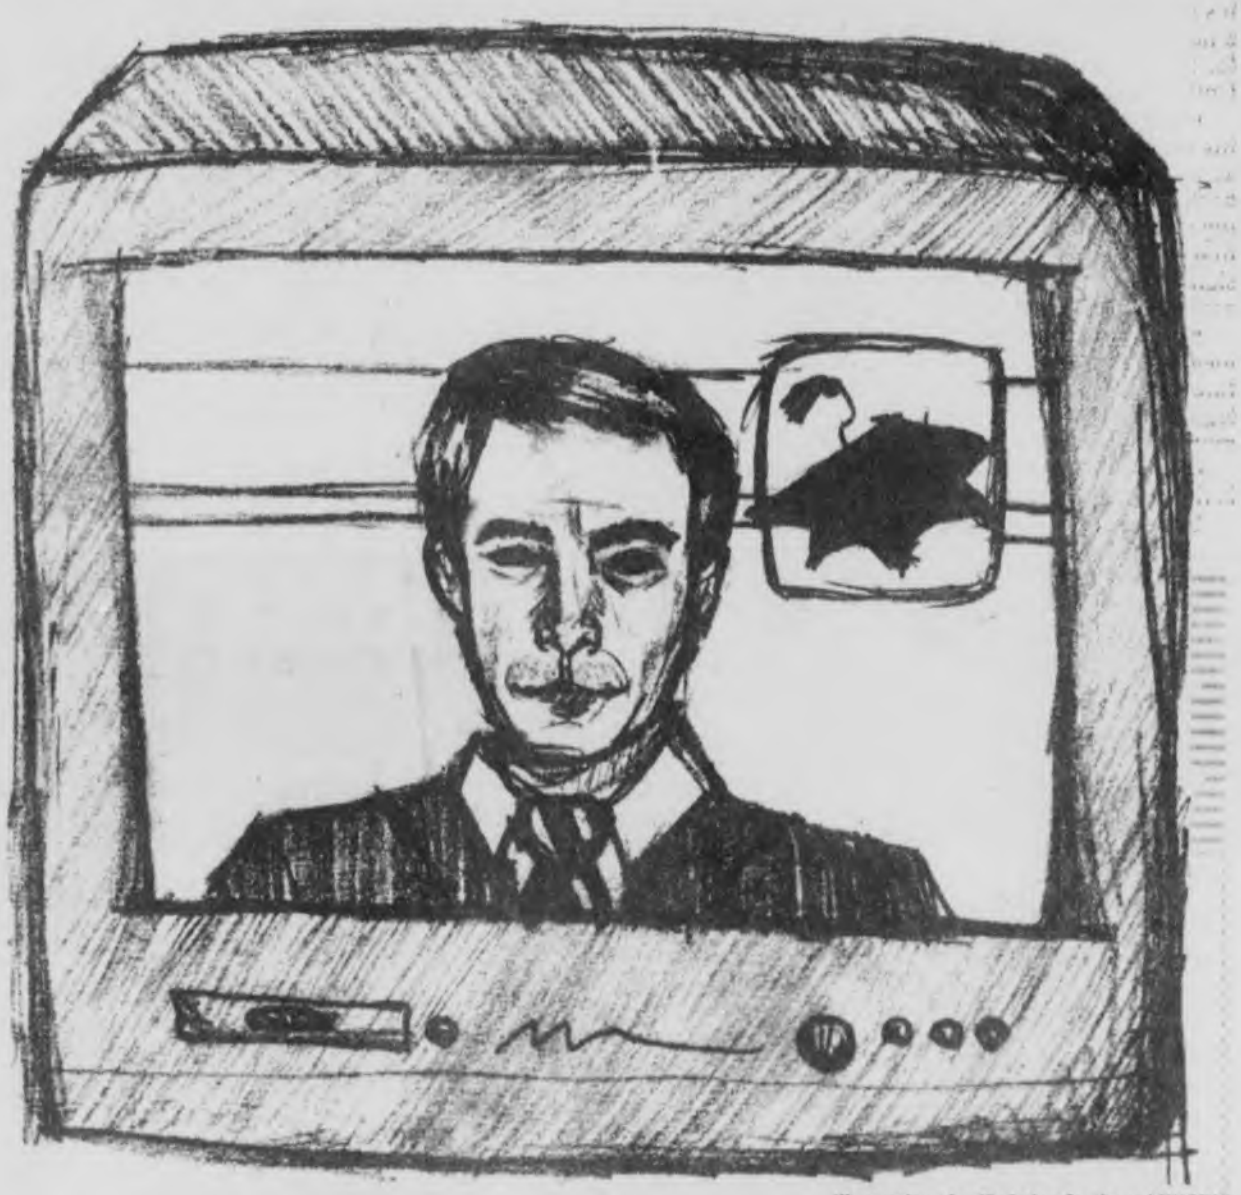
This underlying battle remains as much a part of the fall semester as enrollment and moving back to start school. It's why many college students nationwide change majors three or four times.

We've all heard the calls from the "real" world to get an education, especially a college education, in order to even be considered for a job these days.

Yet if you listen closely, you'll also hear countless professors and other mentors reminding us that an education is supposed to equip us with so much more than qualifications for a better job.

One of the great ironies of being a college student today is that too often learning takes a backseat to "getting an education."

It becomes dormant in the rhythms of our school routines of making it through classes and to the next weekend.



Education doesn't have to be this way. And it took the recent death of someone who had never finished high school let alone attended a university, to remind us of that.

Peter Jennings, a native Canadian, who rose to become one of the finest foreign correspondents and arguably the best network news anchor in the history of ABC, died of lung cancer a few weeks ago.

Jennings became a great and well-trusted reporter largely on a relentless passion for journalism and a natural ability to tell a story.

His character on and off air and his intense curiosity for news and people provided him incredible opportunities in what proved to be a remarkable career.

Yet Jennings was also highly self-conscious of his success in spite of the lack of formal educational credentials and devoted as much of his career to learning more about the world he covered as he did reporting on it.

Illustrations by Christina forsberg | COLLEGIAN

Jennings recognized learning continues through all stages of life, and he worked constantly to compensate for his disadvantage, often warning younger generations to finish school, and not enter the workforce the way he did.

He's right about that.

The odds of launching a similar career today under the same circumstances are much slimmer. Still, Jennings taught us something far more important without ever setting foot on a college campus.

And that is educational credentials alone mean little in the face of great curiosity and a lifelong passion for learning.

We all come to college with some natural abilities. We come to learn how to harness and develop those abilities.

And whether we know what we're striving to achieve or hope to stumble upon in college, it's really the passion and persistence behind those abilities that determines our success.

Peter Jennings taught us that perhaps the most important thing we're supposed to learn here is our education is not supposed to stop when we leave K-State. It's something we're supposed to continue for the rest of our lives.

Thank you, Professor Jennings.

JONAS HOGG

Despite all of my objections, denunciations and fits of sobbing in the night, it would appear summer is over and school is beginning.

For those of you who are overcome with joy at seeing me back after my grand exit last year with these words: "Jonas Hogg is getting recalled to the Army in June. Really this time. Absolutely 100 percent for sure. He's all out of appeals. Kiss him goodbye while you have the time," let me assure everyone that I did, in fact, go.

I was there for a few weeks before I was told that I was "unfit for worldwide deployment." Boo-hoo.

Because I will not be forced into working for the government, I shall continue the grand tradition of making fun of it, this time as the Collegian opinion editor.

I intend to provide a voice to the conscious of the university. These are complicated times with complicated issues in them, and even though it is impossible to equally represent all points of view it is still worth working toward that goal.

The purpose of this page is to expose more viewpoints than those of the American liberal or conservative; it will have guest columns by leaders and members of foreign student associations and religious groups. Anyone with a unique perspective on new issues is welcome to contact me about writing an op-ed piece.

Universities are supposed to be mind-opening experiences; let us attempt to leave behind our own viewpoints for some new ones.

Now that there is, in fact, a new sheriff in town, and he is, in fact, me, I think that it is only prudent that we dispense with the pleasantries and get down to the business of the day.

Letters to the editor about opinion columns, the news, or anything in particular always welcome. Anyone is encouraged to write to me at opinion@spub.ksu.edu. Because of our own content limitations, we cannot guarantee that every letter will be published. What we can guarantee is that every one will be read.

To maximize your chances of being published, you should follow a few guidelines: Your full name and major or title should be included – anonymous comments are for the fourum. Keep your letter concise, because even short letters will be edited for size and writing me an essay causes heartburn. Finally, using strings of four letter words in your letter is most assuredly not the best way to plead your case.

If a full-blown letter to the editor is not quite your speed, then feel free to call the fourum at 532-4444.

The fourum is an anonymous call-in system designed specifically for that fabulous one-liner you just can't keep to yourself. However, we live in a society with a few too many laws and we must remain ever vigilant lest the Federal Communication Commission carpet-bomb the Collegian into the Stone Age. It is for our continued existence that we set forth the following rule: Racist, sexist, or any other sort of hate-speak, along with obscene or libelous comments – making something up about someone – are not allowed.

The fourum has been a source of discomfort in the past, so let us make this semester the Tempurpedic mattress of fourum comfort.

As always, common sense rules the day. If you think something is not suitable for the paper, it probably isn't. Help keep a poor soul who's not even good enough for the back door draft from having to work too hard.

LETTER FROM THE EDITOR

Editor in chief welcomes feedback

Dear readers,

MATTHEW GIRARD

For most of you, today is the start of a new school year and whether you've been dreading it or embracing it, the bottom line is it's here.

And like you, it's the start of a new semester for the K-State Collegian.

It is an exciting time for us as we welcome back returning staff members and several first-time editors, reporters, designers, photographers and our new adviser Kimetris Baltrip.

Everyone has brought fresh ideas and are ready to incorporate those ideas into the Collegian to give you, the reader, a more enjoyable experience.

One change you will notice is the back page.

On Mondays during the upcoming K-State football season, sports will move to the back page to bring you rabid Wildcat fans full color images from Saturday's game.

On Fridays throughout the semester, The Edge will also make appearances on the last page, so you can see the colors of a certain fashion, how a piece of art looks or have a color photo of your favorite local band.

Another change we have made to the Collegian, is having more interactive features on page two.

Not only will the crosswords and cryptoquips still be there for you to kill time with, but we will also have poll questions, quizzes and a "crazy captions" feature for readers to send us their best captions for the odd pictures our photographers take.

For you online junkies out there, the Collegian's Web site will feature upcoming movie times, news and sports poll questions and photo galleries.

Although, we try our hardest to make the paper as mistake-free as possible, we are human and occasionally don't get everything right. Please let us know when we don't.

We encourage you to send us any feedback in the form of emails, the fourum or letters to the editor.

And as always, the Collegian will be there to cover the diverse range of students and activities associated with the K-State campus. So if your club is having an event, we will be there. If your greek house is having an event, we will be there. And if you're having a party – watch out, because we will probably be there too.

Sincerely,

Matthew Girard

Intramural sign up open until Friday

By Nick Dunn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The fall 2005 intramural season at K-State will begin shortly after semester classes start.

The intramural program provides an opportunity for students to interact with their peers. Intramurals are a tradition that have been going on for over 80 years at K-State, and Steve Martini, Associate Director for Recreational Services, said they are only gaining in popularity.

"Over 20,000 different students participated in the intramural program last year," Martini said. "Intramurals at K-State are very popular for the size of school we have."

A wide variety of sports are planned for the fall season.

The deadline for flag football and soccer is Friday, along with several individual and dual sports. These include singles badminton, one-on-one basketball, singles tennis, doubles volleyball, singles three-wall handball, singles three-wall racquetball and singles horseshoes.

Students wishing to participate in any of these sports can sign up today through Friday between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. at the intramural office in the Peters Recreation Complex.

Ultimate frisbee and four-on-four sand volleyball are also planned for the beginning of the semester. The sign-up period for these sports is Sept. 6-9.

The intramural program is planning several one-time events that will take place in the coming months. A Punt, Pass and Kick competition will be this Saturday, and a miniature golf tournament is scheduled for Sept. 25 at Wildcat Creek. The popular student golf meet will be played in mid-October at Stagg Hill Golf Club, with the sign-up deadline being Oct. 6.

In addition to these events, a wrestling meet, sports trivia contest, swim meet, and three-point shootout are also planned for later in the fall.

With the broad range of activities the intramural program offers, a few sports are more popular than others, John Wondra, Assistant Director of Intramurals, said.

"Flag football remains the most popular sport, with volleyball being very popular among the students as well," Wondra said. "Tennis singles and doubles volleyball tend to be the most popular individual and dual sports in the fall."

Martini said he's ready for the semester to begin.

"We're very excited for the semester to get going," Martini said. "We have lots of new members and programs."

Taking a new approach

Re-energized Wildcats ready improve on 4-7 season

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When the K-State football team assembled for the first meeting of the 2005 season, coach Bill Snyder had a simple message for his team.

"The first thing he really told us was that we want to be better every day than we were last year," senior fullback and team captain Victor Mann said. "Each day, you want to get better, you want to be better today than you were yesterday, and so on and so on."

To be better than last season may not take much from the Wildcats, who stumbled to a 4-7 record, the worst under Snyder since 1989 when K-State went 1-10.

However, many of the problems that plagued K-State last season were not because of a lack of talent on the field, Snyder said.

Instead, the coach, entering his 17th season at K-State, said a lot of problems could have been reversed had his team played with more emotion, enthusiasm and heart.

BILL SNYDER

At the beginning of fall camp, Snyder revealed he had seen a change in his team's attitude.

"It's all about getting better," Snyder said. "You've heard me talk about the spirit of our football team last year and the intent to become a more spirited football team, and I honestly think that has taken place. A number of things that are necessary for us to become a better football team are starting to take shape."

"We are certainly a long ways away, but I do think we are making some headway," Snyder said.

Nowhere was the downfall more prevalent last year than on defense.

After spending eight consecutive seasons in the top six defensively in the nation the K-State defense surrendered 349.6 yards per game last year to fall to No. 43.

Also, K-State's pass defense gave up 201.4 passing yards per game, the worst mark in program history.

Senior linebacker and captain Brandon Archer said he believes the Wildcat defense will be better in 2005.

"I think there is definite improvement to our defense," Archer said. "The secondary, throughout the spring, stepped it up and did some great things out there. As far as the spirit, the emotion, the enthusiasm, those types of things, it's definitely improved."

Not only will the Wildcats look to improve defensively, but they are also faced with the task of replacing running back Darren Sproles, K-State's all-time leading rusher, who is now with the NFL's San Diego Chargers.

Alsup said the players are confident whoever starts will be able to carry the Wildcats' rushing load.

"Among the four running backs that we've got, I believe that each one of us could end up being the guy," Alsup said. "All we've got to do is go in there and get the job done. Not everybody is expecting great things out of this group. We are just trying to fill some shoes."

While questions remain who will step up at quarterback, the youth on the offensive line and depth along the defensive line, the Wildcats are ready to learn from the mistakes made in 2004 and build off of them.

"First, the main thing was learning what we did wrong and moving it aside and saying 'OK, this is what we did wrong. Now we've got to correct it,'" linebacker Maurice Mack said. "I just think our whole attitude is different than it was last year. We're going to be a better team and surprise a lot of people."

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Senior fullback Victor Mann runs over a Lousiana-Lafayette defender last season. Mann will return this season as a captain and try to improve on the Wildcats last season's 4-7 record.

Jayhawks should be punished for NCAA violations

Well, well, well, it turns out our neighbors to the east aren't as squeaky clean as they would have you believe.

MICHAEL ASHFORD

After years of hearing its fans and alums tout the University of Kansas as the "Harvard of the Midwest," while poking fun at the K-State football program for its use of junior college recruits, the "Flaw on the Kaw" is in deep academic and athletic trouble, or at least they should be.

In case you missed it, over the summer the Kansas Athletic Department made public a report of an internal investigation into NCAA violations committed within the athletic department. The report gave details of numerous academic violations, which included football coaches who helped junior college recruits – yes, junior college recruits – pass exams to become eligible to play for the Jayhawks.

Mangino would like you to believe all of this happened without his knowledge; that he is just an innocent victim of his staff's incompetence and corruption.

In the report, Mangino is cited as saying he didn't know the violations were taking place, yet the university still felt it necessary to send Mangino and an assistant coach a letter of admonishment for the violations.

C'mon, are we really supposed to buy that?

There are two possibilities here: either Mangino actually had no idea such violations were happening – which shows he lacks a certain level of control over his program – or he is lying.

The amazing thing about this situation is the lack of media outcry.

Where are the cries of wrongdoing? Where are the calls for people's jobs? Where is the scrolling news alert at the bottom of SportsCenter?

After all, it happens to K-State at the slightest hint of wrongdoing.

Remember Ell Roberson and the alleged rape at the Fiesta Bowl in Jan. 2004, and the public outcry for coach Bill Snyder to bench Roberson, even after it turned out that all Roberson was guilty of was breaking curfew?

Or last year, when Snyder recruited junior college linebacker David Dixon to join the Wildcats. Snyder was ripped by the media for offering a scholarship to Dixon, who had been involved in the death of an acquaintance a few years prior.

When Snyder decided to rescind Dixon's scholarship offer due to Dixon's past, he was again blasted by the media, this time for not giving Dixon a second chance.

The only member of the media who dared to ask questions about Kansas' violations is Kansas City sports radio talk show host Kevin Keitzman. Keitzman was carrying the flag with this situation, but even he has backed off.

It is simple: The University of Kansas cheated – a lot.

Football wasn't the only sport guilty of violations at Kansas. The university also reported the men's basketball and women's basketball programs were, at times, guilty of gross misconduct.

The NCAA has launched its own investigation of the violations, but that could take months, even years.

If the media hasn't already lost complete and total interest in the story, by that time, their interest will be shot. The NCAA's report will surface quietly, and Kansas will come out unscathed.

Sure, the Kansas Athletic Department self-imposed penalties after it's findings were made public, but none of the penalties fit the crimes.

Kansas should be forced to forfeit games, lose scholarships and be placed on a lengthy probation.

After all, the same would be expected of any other school across the country.

OAKLAND, Calif. — Some members of the Royals speak optimistically about following their club-record 19-game skid with a winning streak.

But the fact is that every other team in the major leagues is better than Kansas City, and the final month and a half of the season could be just as frustrating as the previous three weeks for this inexperienced club.

After Sunday's series finale in Oakland, the Royals headed home for three games against the Boston Red Sox before a trip to New York for three games at Yankee Stadium.

"Now we've got to wait another year to go on that losing streak," pitcher Jose Lima joked after Kansas City defeated the Athletics 2-1 Saturday night.

The Royals stopped their streak two shy of the American League record, also snapping a 12-game road losing streak that tied the franchise single-season mark.

MLB | Rolen to undergo season-ending surgery

ST. LOUIS — All-Star third baseman Scott Rolen will have surgery on his left shoulder and miss the rest of the season, the St. Louis Cardinals said Sunday.

Rolen

Rolen, 30, has a torn labrum and was told he will need at least six months to rehabilitate it after surgery. He is expected to return sometime during spring training. Had he waited on surgery, he could have missed considerable time in 2006.

Cardinals team medical consultant Dr. George Paletta will perform the surgery with assistance from Cincinnati Reds medical supervisor Dr. Timothy Kremchek. A date has not been set, but the surgery is expected to take place this week.

NFL | 49ers await word on cause of lineman's death

DENVER — Shaken San Francisco 49ers teammates awaited word Sunday on what caused offensive lineman Thomas Herrion to collapse in the locker room and die shortly after an exhibition game against the Denver Broncos.

Herrion

The 23-year-old guard collapsed after coach Mike Nolan spoke to his team following the game on a relatively cool Saturday night. Medics administered CPR on the 6-foot-3, 310-pound player before an ambulance took him to a Denver hospital.

The coroner's office said it would be no earlier than Sunday afternoon before any information is released on the cause of Herrion's death.

TEN | Federer beats Roddick to win Cincinnati Masters

Unflappable Roger Federer won his 22nd straight final on Sunday, beating the exasperated American 6-3, 7-5 for the Cincinnati Masters championship and his ninth overall title this season.

Federer

Federer improved to 10-1 against Roddick, who tried every tactic but still came up short. Federer has won the last six times they've met, including the last two Wimbledon finals.

CBB | U.S. men golden at World University Games

IZMIR, Turkey — Boston College's Craig Smith scored 16 points and Duke's Shelden Williams added 15 points and 14 rebounds Sunday, leading the United States past Ukraine 85-70 for the basketball gold medal at the University Games.

The U.S. men finished with an 8-0 record and won their 13th basketball gold at the University Games since 1965, but first since 1999.

With the U.S. women defeating Serbia-Montenegro for the gold medal Friday, the United States recorded the first basketball double at the event since 1997.

It's that time of year again and expenses are adding up fast for students. By the time students check off their expenses, they find little remains of their financial aid checks. Then it's time to buy books.

With pricey textbooks at local bookstores, some students said they don't mind spending extra time hunting good deals online.

Jacob Lowery, senior in French, has bought textbooks online for three semesters.

This semester didn't work out time-wise for Lowery to purchase online, but he has never regretted buying textbooks over the Internet.

"Sometimes I save a lot, and sometimes not, but I feel like I've always saved when I've bought online," Lowery said.

After he is finished with his textbooks, Lowery lists them online to sell. Once he has a buyer for a book, he packs it and ships it.

The two Web sites Lowery uses the most are Amazon.com and Half.com. Both sites provide individual listings of books, and allow the seller to provide a description.

They also have condition categories, from brand new to acceptable.

"If you have any questions about the book, you can e-mail the seller," Lowery said.

As far as shipping goes, some Internet sites provide free shipping if the customer spends more than a specified amount. On other sites, shipping may be added for each book.

"After classes start, people change a lot of their classes. Our returns are quite heavy," Levin said. "If they bought a cheaper book and it's not the right one, that's no advantage. Plus, if they bought from us, they don't have to pay return postage."

An estimated 10 percent of books sold each semester are exchanged or returned.

Another new textbook option can be found at the store's Web site, www.varneys.com. Safari X provides a direct line into one of the publishers. The online versions of its books claim to have the same content as the print version but half the cost.

Varney's Book Store is also developing a system to deliver used books directly from its wholesalers to its customers.

"We made ourselves successful based on good pricing and a lot of used books, and that's what we continue to do," Steve Levin, Union Bookstore manager, said.

He also notes that unlike the online stores, Varney's contributes back to the community and K-State. A portion of sales at Varney's goes to fund two scholarships.

One scholarship is for a part-time or non-traditional student. The other is awarded to the Union Program Council president. Both scholarships are administered by the Union director's office.

As of July, Varney's had contributed $108,480 in scholarship money since the five-year contract with K-State began.

Summer celebrity gossip

The weather is warm, the clothes are hot, and celebrities are out in full swing. Here's what you may have missed in celebrity gossip during the past months.

Brad Pitt and Angelina Jolie's new movie "Mr. and Mrs. Smith," the film that sparked their romance during filming, was released in June. Pitt and Jolie continue to deny a romance, but they were pictured together at Jolie's estate in England. As Jolie watched, Pitt rode a dirt bike with 3-year old Maddox, Jolie's adopted son (socialitelife.com.) Their summer continued to be newsworthy. In July, Pitt was hospitalized with viral meningitis (www.msnbc.msn.com), and Jolie adopted another child, a baby girl she named Zahara. (news.softpedia.com).

Ben Affleck and Jennifer Garner were married June 29. After months of speculation that Garner was pregnant, the couple's publicists confirmed after the wedding they are expecting their first child together in the fall. The couple, often known as Bennifer 2 (Affleck and Jennifer Lopez, who had a very public and high-profile romance and engagement, were called Bennifer) have kept their romance low-key and were married in a private ceremony with very few guests present (www.cbsnews.com.)

Jude Law admitted publicly he cheated on his fiancé Sienna Miller with his childrens' nanny. After Daisy Wright told a tabloid she had an affair with Law while he was filming "All the King's Men," Law released a statement saying, "I am deeply ashamed and upset that I've hurt Sienna and the people most close to us."

Wright was the nanny for the three children Law had with ex-wife Sadie Frost, until she was fired when Frost discovered the affair. Although Miller has not been wearing her engagement ring and family and friends have called for her to not take Law back, Miller and Law have been talking and were pictured together on Aug. 18 (courtesy of www.thesuperficial.com).

Singer Madonna was thrown from a horse and injured on Tuesday, Aug. 16, while riding at her home in England on her 47th birthday. She was knocked unconscious and broke her hand, her collarbone and cracked three ribs. Her publicist said she does not know if the star will be touring to promote her newest CD in November as previously scheduled (www.handbag.com.)

Britney Spears, who is expecting her first baby with husband Kevin Federline, is reportly having a boy. The singer, who shows off her stomach as much in pregnancy as before, spent $10,000 on clothes for infant boys and is said to be thinking of naming the baby Preston (www.msnbc.msn.com.)

After months of rumors that she is pregnant, (by the third trimester, she should be showing) Demi Moore told Harper's Bazaar Magazine that she and Kutcher want to "expand our family." The 42-year-old actress said she and her 27-year-old boyfriend are soul mates but they don't feel the need to marry. "I feel that we are and that we don't need something formal, so to do so isn't a big deal one way or the other. It's not like we're holding out." (celebrity.aol.com.)

New Xbox 360 release delayed

By Wade Zarosinski
DAILY EVERGREEN
WASHINGTON STATE U.

The Xbox 360 is coming.

Microsoft announced Wednesday that it would be releasing two versions of the highly anticipated Xbox 360, its new gaming console scheduled for release later this year. Microsoft will release a premium version which will cost $399.99 retail and will include a detachable 20GB hard drive and a wireless controller. The standard version will cost $299.99 and will not include a hard drive but will include a standard controller.

The new console is set to have a wide range of optional peripherals available upon its release as well, which will include a TV remote and a headset for the Xbox Live online service.

The original release date of the 360 was set to be Aug. 27 but was recently changed to an unannounced date in the holiday season, according to a Microsoft press release Wednesday. The release did not detail the reasons for the delay, but the buzz is that it's likely to maximize holiday sales and to give hardware manufacturers more time to meet the demand.

Nov. 2 looks like the target release date, according to IGN.com, a leading game magazine Web site.

Microsoft has announced a wide range of release titles, heavily focused on the First Person Shooter genre, with titles including "Quake 4" and "Perfect Dark Zero." So far Microsoft seems to have many of the American developers busy with a very large assortment of games, while the Japanese developers are focusing more on the upcoming Sony PlayStation 3.

Sony has also pushed the release date of their next generation system back to 2006. The PlayStation 3 boasts powerful hardware and some of the most critically acclaimed games on the market such as the "Final Fantasy" series and the "Metal Gear Solid" series. The relative power of the PS3 compared to the 360 is still unknown, but it should be comparable.

Former Garden City mayor to run for Morris' seat

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GARDEN CITY, Kan. – The city's former mayor plans to take on the Kansas Board of Education member who is opposed to educating the children of illegal immigrants and once falsely accused him of being in the country illegally.

But Tim Cruz insisted the decision to seek Connie Morris' seat on the board wasn't personal.

"I don't think our voice is being heard very well on the state board," said Cruz, a Democrat. "My intention is to get around to the schools in the district – especially in Garden City, in our own community – and be able to represent our community, southwest Kansas."

Morris, a Republican, is from St. Francis in northwest Kansas. She has already said she plans to run in 2006.

Cruz has not officially filed for the seat but sent a letter of intent to the state on Friday.

Morris' 2002 campaign platform included attacks on public education for the children of illegal immigrants. Garden City, like most of southwest Kansas' larger towns, has seen its Hispanic population increase dramatically in recent years.

In 2003, Morris accused Cruz – who was born in Garden City to native-born citizens – of being an illegal immigrant himself. She later apologized, and both have said they consider the incident closed.

"The apology has been made, and Mr. Cruz and I have visited, and I'm sure he's accepted my apology, and that's the end of that, as far as I'm considered," Morris said.

Cruz, now the assistant manager of a Sears store in Garden City, also said he didn't want Morris' allegation to overshadow the larger campaign issues.

"Hopefully that incident won't be played on," he said. "I would really hate to get back into that. It was a tough time for me, and I tried to put that incident behind me, and hopefully we can keep it behind us."

Cruz also stayed away from attacks on Morris' anti-evolution stance. The main issue, he said, is responsiveness to the western Kansas district's concerns.

"I think just being a voice for the community is a big thing, and the way you do that is by asking questions and listening to people," he said.

Republican Sonny Rundell, a moderate who lost the 5th District primary to Morris in 2002 and then mounted an unsuccessful write-in campaign in the general election, stopped short of endorsing Cruz's challenge but said he's glad Morris is being challenged.

Woman sentenced for falsifying grades

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DODGE CITY, Kan. – A woman who admitted she falsified grades as a community college secretary has been sentenced to 18 months probation.

Dawn Kortz, 31, said she gave credit to seven Dodge City Community College football players for coursework they didn't complete, though prosecutors said the fraud went deeper.

Ford County District Court Judge Leigh Hood sentenced her Friday to the probation and eight-month suspended jail terms on each of two charges she entered a plea agreement on: forgery and making false information.

They are to be served concurrently.

Kortz, who now lives in Hendersonville, Tenn., worked for the college from 2001 to 2004.

School officials say they linked her to 18 instances of grade falsification, some upward, some downward.

Kortz has said she didn't change grades for money, but to win approval from those she helped.

"There's no excuse for what I did," she said at the sentencing. "I apologize. I just want it to be over with and try to be a better person from this time forward."

The woman's attorney, Linda Eckelman, was not so placid. She said her client was being a made a scapegoat and that other improprieties at the school had been ignored.

"I am absolutely appalled to be a member of a community that would punish this woman so viciously and let those other people go," Eckelman said.

Glenn Kerbs, a lawyer for the school, rejected the allegations. He said the school had dismissed an employee for irregularities in class rosters, but that prosecutors determined it was not a criminal matter.

Kerbs said the school would investigate any further allegations but that he was simply happy to have the current case completed.

50th anniversary of movie 'Picnic' recalled

By Kathy Hanks
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HUTCHINSON, Kan. – It was 1955, and meaty issues such as the rise in polio cases and strange weather phenomena occupied the minds of most residents that spring.

"Devastating dusters" reminded residents of the Dirty '30s and Dust Bowl days that left western Kansas in a sea of dust. Other areas of Kansas were plagued by floods in 1955, and the odd weather patterns kept residents on their toes.

Those imminent concerns, though, were about to be set aside for Hollywood. And it was just the kind of escape concerned mothers and frustrated farmers sought.

Kansas needed a picnic.

The small newspaper ad in April 1955 sought "extras" for "Picnic," a movie Columbia Pictures planned to film in Kansas. The ad encouraged people to apply for roles at the Hutchinson Chamber of Commerce.

The casting call created a buzz among area residents. Entire families applied for roles in the picnic scene.

By May 20, when director Joshua Logan and cinematographer James Wong Howe decided to use Halstead's Riverside Park for the picnic scene, The News reported that an estimated 300 "hopefuls were lined up in front of the city hall by 8 a.m. all ready to sign contracts which would give them work as extras."

The movie's story line revolves around a Labor Day picnic and is based on William Inge's 1953 Pulitzer Prize-winning play. Inge was a Kansas playwright who had lived in Independence. He sold the film rights to Columbia for $350,000, according to biographer Ralph Voss.

Logan, a successful Hollywood director, also had directed the Broadway production of "Picnic."

But when scouting locations in Kansas, Logan and Howe bypassed Inge's hometown. They found what they needed in Hutchinson and surrounding communities, including Sterling, Nickerson and Halstead.

"Independence has a nice park and a river, but it didn't have all the stuff they wanted and the logistics of the filming were simply easier in central Kansas," Voss said.

And they were closer to the Wichita airport and the Santa Fe railroad.

But there may have been another reason Logan chose central Kansas, Voss said.

Inge and Logan had artistic differences over the ending of the play and movie. Inge's version didn't have heroine Madge Owens, played by Novak, follow handsome drifter Hal Carter, played by William Holden.

Voss speculates that ending might have been too disappointing for "happily ever after" audiences in the 1950s. Logan changed the ending, Voss said, and Inge held a grudge against the director.

Novak preferred the original ending.

"I think that Bill Inge's ending made more sense," she wrote in a recent e-mail response to questions about her time in Kansas.

"Yet I could see her (Madge) wanting to live out a fantasy. ... I cannot see how their love could have survived the test of time. Their values and lifestyle were too different."

By late May 1955, heavy rains and flooding replaced dust storms as filming began in Hutchinson at the Security Elevator at the corner of Fourth and Halstead.

From Hutchinson the crew moved to Halstead's Riverside Park, then shot scenes in Nickerson and Sterling.

Folk artist performs at anti-war protest

By Angela K. Brown
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CRAWFORD, Texas – Iraq war protesters camping out near President Bush's ranch are getting support from a prominent figure in the anti-Vietnam war movement: folk singer Joan Baez.

Baez planned a free concert in Bush's adopted hometown Sunday that was expected to draw more than 1000 people on a 1-acre lot offered by a landowner who opposes the war. Not far away, protesters continued a camp-out started by grieving mother Cindy Sheehan.

Meanwhile, more Bush supporters arrived at a downtown pro-Bush camp. As of Sunday afternoon, more than 150 people had visited the large tent with "God Bless Our President!" and "God Bless Our Troops" banners and a life-size cardboard cutout of Bush.

"When we saw this, we said, `Thank God you're here'," said Frances Lee, who arrived in Crawford with her Douglasville, Ga., neighbor Brenda Bohanan. They planned to hold pro-Bush banners down the street from the protesters.

"We said, `We wanted y'all to know that there are people from all over the United States that care'," Lee said.

His father, Gary Qualls of Temple, said the anti-war demonstrators are being disrespectful to soldiers.

Sheehan's 24-year-old son, Army Spc. Casey Sheehan, also died last year in Iraq. He is among more than 1,800 U.S. soldiers killed since the March 2003 invasion.

Sheehan, of Vacaville, Calif., started the anti-war demonstration on Aug. 6 and vowed to remain until Bush agreed to meet with her or until his monthlong vacation ends Sept. 3.

She flew to Los Angeles last week after her 74-year-old mother had a stroke but is expected to return to Texas in a few days.

Bush has said he sympathizes with Sheehan but won't change his schedule to meet with her.

She and other families met with Bush about two months after Casey died, before she became a vocal opponent of the war.

In addition to the "Fort Qualls" camp, a few Bush supporters have stood with signs in the ditch across from the demonstrators' camp.

Down the street, another group of about a dozen set up tents and pro-Bush signs on private property over the weekend.

Sweet dough

Students find treats at bakery

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It may be one of the causes of the freshman 15, but that doesn't seem to hinder business.

The Bakery, located in Derby Dining Center, sells everything from cinnamon and pecan rolls to monster cookies and Rice Krispies Treats to hungry students in three shifts a day.

She said the morning shift is probably the busiest, with about 30 customers.

Six full-time bakers and 17 students work not only to fix the retail items, but also to prepare food for the campus dining center.

They are responsible for the baked goods for three meals at Derby and Van Zile Dining Centers, as well as pizzas, subs and cookies for Kramer Dining Center.

The food is transported by satellite trucks.

The staff is divided into three crews in order to handle the amount of food required.

At Derby alone, the Bakery cooks for 600 students at breakfast and 1,300 at both lunch and dinner, Jenn McCown, coordinator of The Bakery, said.

"That's where we get a majority of our revenue," McCown said.

Special orders can be made for personalized cakes, goodie bags, cookies and other items. Deliveries are free on campus, including fraternity and sorority houses, and are made from 3-4 p.m. Monday through Friday.

She gathers ideas from magazines, the Internet and restaurants. Then she tests them and makes sure the recipe can be made in bulk without sacrificing taste.

After 30 years with the Department of Housing and Dining Services, Mayfield said she enjoys finding menu items students like.

"I'm looking for trendy things," she said. "I get bored with same ol', same ol'."

They guessed they spent at least $100 there last semester.

"It's fabulous," said Simmons, whose favorite items are the pecan cinnamon rolls and cream cheese pretzels.

"We have to be on campus a lot of the morning, so we stop by."

The Bakery
Open 9-11:30 a.m., 1-4:30 p.m. and 7-11 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 9-11:30 a.m. and 1-4:30 p.m. on Fridays.

Senate to vote on garage

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A vote by Student Senate on an $18.8 million campus parking garage may be as soon as Sept. 1.

Student Body President Michael Burns said that at its first meeting of the semester, Student Senate will review plans for a garage to be located south of the K-State Student Union.

Burns said he will draft a resolution at the meeting to support the parking garage, which he hopes will get voted on and approved.

The garage will provide 1,406 parking stalls, for a net gain of 966 stalls.

Supporting a campus parking garage was something Burns and vice-president Grant Groene considered during elections in the spring.

"We were in favor of supporting parking garages on campus as outlined in the 50-year University Master Plans," Burns said.

The purpose of the University Master Plans is to guide the long-term development of the campus for the next 50 years.

Four parking garages are proposed in the plans. They will be located north of Rathbone Hall, north of Justin Hall, west of Memorial Stadium and south of the Union.

Darwin Abbott, director of parking services, said construction on a parking garage south of the Union could begin as soon as May 2006 if plans can be presented to the Kansas Board of Regents in October.

However, before plans are presented to the Board of Regents, Gary Leitnaker, assistant vice president of human resources and parking services, said support for the garage is needed from Student Senate, Faculty Senate and Classified Senate.

"We are just trying to educate all of the various groups on campus," Leitnaker said.

Burns said even if the Board of Regents approves the plans, it is unlikely that construction would begin so soon. He said construction would probably begin in May 2007.

Regardless of when construction begins, Abbott said once it is underway no parking will be available south of the Union for about 18 months.

In the meantime, a bus system will be in place to shuttle people in from the KSU Stadium parking lot.

The parking garage will be funded through parking fees over a span of 20 years. Student permits will increase $25 a year for three years,

Fossett to attempt second record, wants to use Salina

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Millionaire pilot Steve Fossett may include K-State-Salina once again when he attempts another aviation record in the Virgin Atlantic GlobalFlyer.

In January or February, Fossett will take off from the Salina Municipal Airport for "The Ultimate Flight" and try to set an aviation record for distance traveling in a fixed-wing airplane or balloon.

The flight plan includes a 29,000-mile trip that will depart from Salina, Kan., circle the globe and land in Europe.

In March, Fossett became the first person to fly solo around the world without refueling.

K-State-Salina students were included in the first record attempt. They helped prepare the plane for take-off and worked in mission control during the flight.

K-State-Salina Dean Dennis Kuhlman said he hopes to know in a month if Fossett would once again like to include students in his record attempt.

Steam pipes repaired, replaced during summer break

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Crews are going to a lot of trouble to keep students warm this winter.

During the 2005 spring break, steam pipes broke in a tunnel from Anderson Hall to McCain Auditorium, and since then, Division of Facilities has worked to remedy the problem.

The construction to fix the pipes in front of Hale Library is on a tight schedule, said Dale Boggs, project manager for the replacement of all steam pipes from Hale Library to Nichols Auditorium.

Buildings affected
Currently

Previously affected halls
Holtz, Holton, Kedzie, Anderson and Fairchild and the east side of Seaton, as well as McCain Auditorium and All Faiths Chapel.

The pipes have been in place since the 1930s and aren't even being made anymore, Boggs said.

Facilities coordinated with the Kansas Department of Health and Environment to remove the asbestos surrounding the pipes and hired asbestos contractors Chevron/Texaco to do the removal.

Once the asbestos was removed, the Kansas State Public Safety Department cleaned up the pipe and Waldinger Corporation of Wichita and Kansas City, Mo. was hired to replace the pipes.

"All the piping into the buildings will be replaced," Boggs said.

The smoke is from the welding of the six- to eight-inch steel pipe that is replacing the older pipe.

Boggs said the pressure-reducing systems will be closer to the buildings and the piping will be insulated, which will pay for itself in 20 years.

All piping had to be pulled out of the tunnels and new piping put in place before students came back. The whole process must be done before the weather turns cold and the steam heat must be used, Boggs said.

This summer, several

Corrections and clarifications

On Monday, junior college linebacker David Dixon was incorrectly identified in a sports column as a player recruited by K-State, who then had his scholarship revoked. That player was junior college linebacker Marcus Raines. The Collegian regrets the error.

Donations fund new scholarships

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The KSU Foundation is the recipient of several new scholarships and enhancement funds, totaling more than $2 million.

These scholarships will benefit students and faculty in the Department of Architectural Engineering and Construction Science and the College of Agriculture, and one scholarship will be available to students in any curriculum.

One donation of more than $1.73 million will benefit students in any curriculum and also be used to establish a faculty chair for the Department of Biology.

According to a news release by the Foundation, the Chris and Kimberly Hess Construction Science Scholarship will be open to students enrolled in the architectural engineering and construction science department.

The recipients must be construction science majors, have acceptable academic performance, and show industry leadership potential.

The Chris and Kimberly Hess Architectural Engineering and Construction Science Department Education Enhancement Fund will be used to promote academic excellence through financial support.

Chris Hess is a 1984 K-State graduate. He and Kimberly Hess donated a total of $100,000 to the College of Engineering.

The Lusardi Construction Company Scholarship will benefit a student in the architectural engineering and construction science department who is majoring in construction science.

The Lusardi Construction Company, located in San Marcos, Calif., donated $25,000.

Both A.N. and Ethelyn Oser were residents of Osage City, Kan., where A.N. was a farmer and Ethelyn was a homemaker. Neither graduated from K-State.

This scholarship totals $238,000.

Kevin Donnelly, assistant dean of agricultural academic programs and secretary for agriculture scholarship activity, said this is "very meaningful and useful gift for us because it's open to everyone."

The College of Agriculture made the decision to put the gift toward a scholarship.

It was already designated by the estate as a scholarship for the College of Agriculture, but the department decided what kind of scholarship it would be and at what level.

Theoretically, Donnelly said, it could also be used for graduate students.

The Edwin G. and Lillian J. Brychta Endowed Scholarship is a gift from the estate of a brother and sister who were residents of Blue Rapids, Kan. It will benefit a student in any curriculum.

Bosco said this gift allows K-State to recognize outstanding students who would otherwise go unrecognized.

"This is one of our largest gifts ever, and we couldn't be more thrilled," he said.

Fant appointed new assistant director of Greek Affairs Office

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Greek Affairs has a new assistant director.

Lisa Fant, May 2005 graduate of James Madison University in Virginia, was hired for the position.

She has a master's degree in counseling psychology with a concentration in college student personal administration.

She found out about the position through the Fraternity Advisers Association on the Internet.

"Lisa had an outstanding set of experiences and came well-recommended by those she worked with," Scott Jones, Greek Affairs director, said.

She said her plans for her position include starting a Panhellenic Council honor society and her primary responsibilities will be working with the Panhellenic students.

He said Greek Affairs is in a state of transition. It has hired a full-time director, one assistant director and one administrative support person. The office is still searching for an additional assistant director.

Students set up shop to sell cheaper textbooks

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

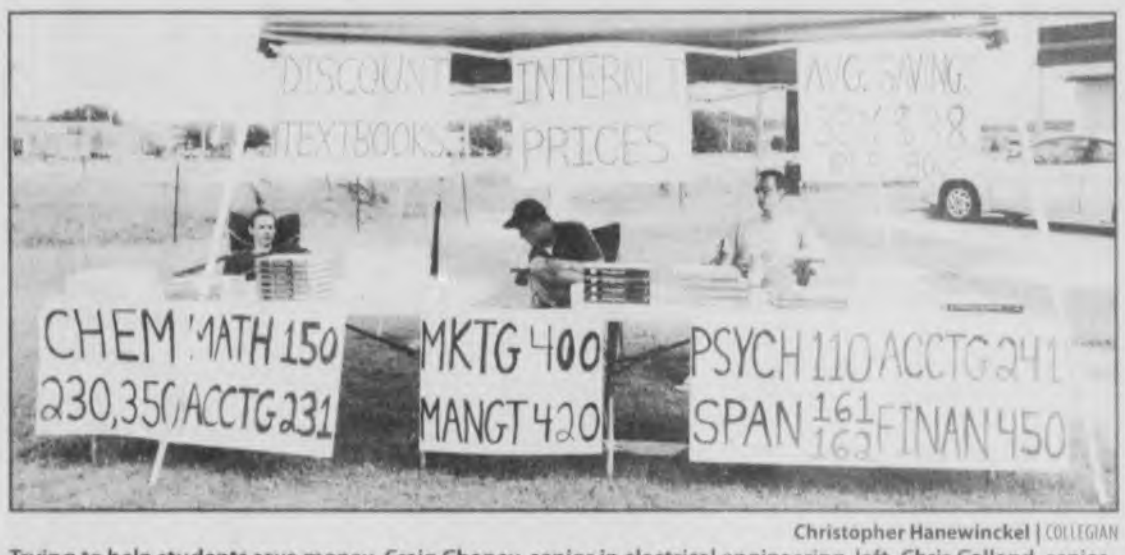
A small group of students set up shop at the corner of Tuttle Creek Boulevard and Bluemont Avenue Saturday and Sunday, hoping to provide some students with low-priced textbooks.

Two months ago, Chris Calland, senior in computer science, had the idea of selling books to students as cheaply as possible.

"The fact that everybody complains about book prices, and the Internet prices are so low, but people don't want to go to that trouble," Calland said. "People want an actual, physical site."



Calland and his friends Craig Chaney and Adam Brooks, both seniors in electrical engineering, sold books for eight classes, including Chemistry I, Plane Trigonometry and General Psychology.

In order to purchase the 75 books for sale, Calland spent around $3,000 of his own money, purchasing the books from several different Web sites.

Calland said this year was more of an experiment to see if students would be interested.

"We did things pretty small this time, just to see if it would even work," he said.

Calland said the response from students had been good. Several would stop by to make sure that the books were the right edition and to check out prices.

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Trying to help students save money, Craig Chaney, senior in electrical engineering, left, Chris Calland, senior in computer science, center, and Adam Brooks, senior in electrical engineering, sell books off the side of the road on Bluemont Avenue and Tuttle Creek Boulevard. The students had 75 books from different classes offered for Internet prices.

Amber Duncan, senior in business administration, stopped by the stand Sunday to buy a book for an accounting class. After seeing the stand, she stopped by Varney's Book Store to compare prices, and said the students were selling the text for less.

"I was really attracted by the cheap prices, plus I saw that they had my book," she said.

The students say they are selling their books for 33 percent less than Varney's and the Union Bookstore on average.

In order to keep the prices low, Calland decided to mark up the books an average of $5 more than the price he paid.

"We aren't out to make a huge profit," Calland said.

Though the books are cheaper, the students are not able to offer many of the services Varney's and the Bookstore offer.

Steve Levin, manager of the Union Bookstore, said there are several problems students should look for when purchasing books, whether from a friend or online. They should make sure the books have all the pages and any accompanying CDs.

"We know that students are going to sell books," he said. "There's just a lot of potential problems that students should be aware of."

Also, since Calland and his friends don't have a physical store or a way of tracking who they sell books to, they can't accept any returns on books.

"Students are going to shop around, but they need to make sure they are going to get their money back if it's the wrong book," Levin said.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Fossett should again use Salina resources

When Steve Fossett touched down in Salina, Kan., to complete his around-the-world flight in the Virgin Atlantic GlobalFlyer last March, he was greeted by a purple haze of K-State students.

That haze may have been a smokescreen, though.

Despite shedding a positive light on K-State and generating national headlines, Fossett and his team used only a few K-State-Salina students during the attempt, leading to complaints from much of a student body that generously donated its time and resources.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Now the millionaire adventurer, along with entrepreneur Sir Richard Branson, is planning to set an aviation record for distance traveled in a fixed-wing airplane or balloon. Once again, the Salina campus could house mission control for the 29,000-mile flight.

While a decision on whether to use the Salina campus and its students won't be made until later this year, choosing both would be wise. They were integral parts of the first attempt and the endeavor provides the next generation of aviation pioneers a valuable learning opportunity.

Hopefully, this time more students will be able to take advantage of it.

Birthday Binge

21 shot ritual not only dangerous but unnecessary, unwise

JACI BOYDSTON

Today is my 21st birthday.

It's okay if you didn't remember – it happens to the best of us. However, since I know you'd feel terrible if you got me a present I didn't want, here's one thing that's definitely not on my birthday list: shots.

I never understood the appeal of spending a 21st birthday slumped over on the bathroom floor of Rusty's Last Chance, half-conscious while idly wondering if there's a cheap way to get vomit out of Ugg boots.

Except for those who have already perfected the art of underage drinking (tsk, tsk), or are built like the K-State defensive line, this is what's likely to happen when attempting the 21st birthday ritual of drinking 21 shots.

In fact, there are scarier consequences to binge drinking than vomiting in the SafeRide car or forcing your friend to clean vomit out of your ear. At the risk of sounding like someone's mom, 21 ounces of hard liquor is enough to kill people – and it has.

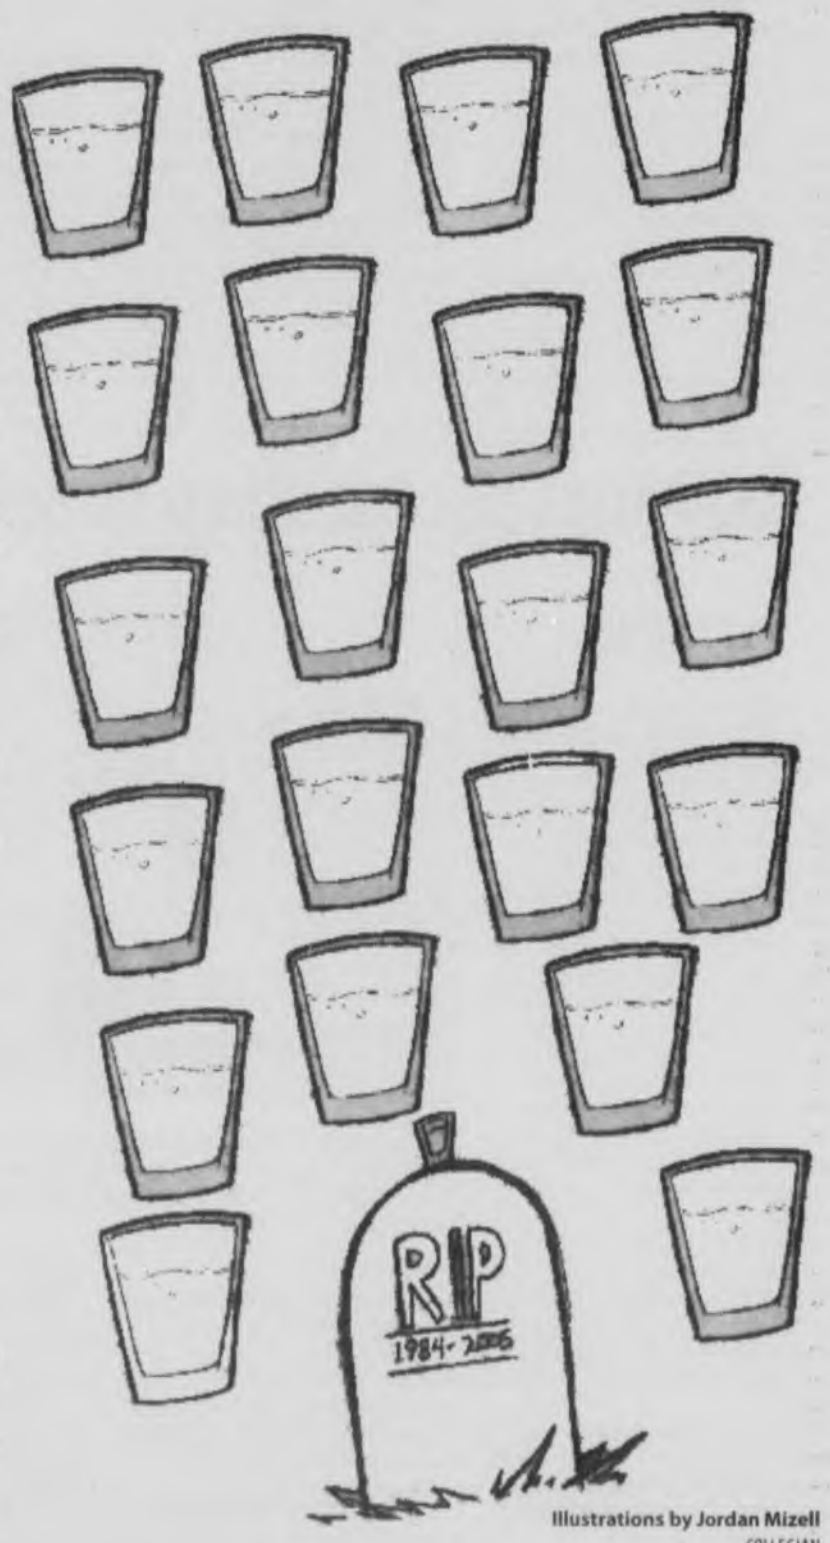
I tried to find a couple really poignant stories of 21st birthday celebrations gone awry, but there were just too many to choose from. The Virginia Polytechnic Institute, the University of Colorado, Colorado State University and dozens of other schools have lost students from alcohol poisoning in the past year alone. It's become so common among college students that we barely even blink when another one meets the same fate.

Some people, however, are starting to get concerned. Legislators in Texas have proposed the "Cinderella bill," a law which would prohibit bars from serving liquor to 21 year olds before 7 a.m. on their birthdays. North Dakota and Minnesota have already passed similar laws, effectively raising the drinking age in those states to 21 years and eight hours.

These laws aim to put an end to power hours, where students try to squeeze 21 drinks into the short window of time between midnight on their birthdays and whenever the bar closes, often only one or two hours.

Although these lawmakers have good intentions, legislation just isn't the answer here – self-control is. Students need to be more responsible. Can anyone think of something good that could come from imbibing 21 ounces of liquor in 60 short minutes? Unless you like the idea of waking up to obscenities scrawled on your face in permanent marker, or, perhaps, not waking up, there's no reason to even attempt something so dangerous.

Okay, maybe there's one reason. If students (OK, female students) don't at least attempt the 21-shot rite of passage, they don't get to make those cutesy little birthday scrapbooks with the names of each drink and the autographs of all the bartenders. As (ahem) "adorable" as those books are, I'm certain that drinking moderately rather than stupidly will alleviate the need for using external props to remember the evening.



The bottom line is binge drinking is dangerous and unnecessary, and trying to consume 21 shots in a single night, let alone one or two hours, will send a person to the bathroom, the hospital or the morgue.

I don't want to spend my birthday in any of those places.

So, I'll see you in Aggieville tonight, but I'll be celebrating responsibly. And if I look like I've had too many, tell me to stop.

I don't want to be the student who adds K-State to the long list of schools that have suffered alcohol-related tragedies.

Mandatory first day attendance

LUCAS MADDY

The 360 sprint cars that race all around our nation are special machines. These ATV-sized racers are little more than a fully-enclosed roll cage and a high-tuned engine. A gaudy, oversized wing turned upside down provides enough downward force to maintain marriage with terra firma as they rocket into corners at more than 100 mph, sliding completely sideways and spraying the crowd with tiny clods.

The ability to harness such power is almost impossible to comprehend. Without a doubt, these cars are designed to orbit the track and nothing else. Some cars have over $100,000 invested. For that price, you would think they would be able to do back-flips and cook pancakes in a hot tub. Wrong... in fact, they even lack a starter! Each car must be push started by a bumper truck before every race. Absurd, you say? Functional, says I.

Look at it this way. The majority of K-State students will invest more than $25,000 in an education from our great land-grant university, and going faster helps us none at all! Most of us have sprint car attitudes, too: we prefer not to dilly-dally and would rather just jump into the fray; the challenge of a ruckus incites success. Accordingly, threatening students with removal from a class just because it slipped their mind to attend on the first day is a bucket shy of being a steaming bucket of fertilizer. Each fall and spring I return from first day of classes looking for a pig (or KU student) to kick because of the frustration of wasting an entire day. There are a few exceptions, but what do we usually gain from our first day? We come home with four separate syllabi and five copies of the K-State I-won't-get-caught-cheating code.

Maybe we play a keen game to learn names and exchange e-mail addresses, but honestly, the only people who use those addresses are the ones who willingly attend 7:30 am classes on Fridays.

Why not treat college class like it should be? Pop quizzes are fair game, but mandatory attendance makes no sense. Here we are, one of the top agricultural schools in the nation, requiring students to make a campus cameo when hay is down in the field, cattle need to be moved, and fall harvest is peeking around the corner. Apologies to the non-farm and ranch student population for excluding examples of what you all would do given the option of attending first day – I just don't know. Honest, I'm not lying. Tell me. I bet it's more fun than working during the summer.

Careful with your judgement. No one is saying summer jobs are more important than an education: our enrollment is proof of that. Simply said, make it worth our while to show up or don't make us show up at all. Raise the bar on that first day and teach something. Shock our systems, make us cry. I have yet to take a class from K-State that I needed to attend in order to pass, so until then, you can look forward to seeing me arrive fashionably late – like January.

And if I ever own a sprint car or a college, I'm adding something to both: cupholders.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Varney's return policy fair

Dear Editor,

I am writing in response to Monday's "To the Point" article regarding the "new" book return policy at the Union this year. While it is true that many people lament the ever-rising book costs, I disagree with not only the opinion of the newspaper, but the spirit of the article. The article rendered a scathingly bleak picture of the local bookstore and how the "screws" are out once again. To give everyone a recap: many students buy books for ALL their classes early, therefore taking all the used books and making Varney's rush order more from the wholesaler. When they decide a class is easy enough without the book, or there is a better deal somewhere else, they decide to return it to Varney's expecting a full refund. Varney's is stuck with an excess of books. Students are stuck with the new books. The people who take the used books with little interest in keeping them force us all to go without or to pay more for newer copies. With this "new" policy, Varney's is trying to prevent the selfishness and provide for all.

The people selling books on the corner and online places like Amazon don't have any reason to carry all the books for K-State. They don't even take returns, let alone returns because you "thought the class was easy enough without the book." They only need to carry books they know will sell. Specialty books (senior level) will get rare and expensive. Scholarships will dry up. After all, "that's capitalism, baby."

Teachers who believe their books unnecessary should list their books as optional. Teachers should decide on their books early in the year and not change right before school starts. Or rather, students who are trying to save money by buying a few books instead of all should wait until the first day of class to determine if the book is really necessary or not. It's exactly like enrolling in 5 sections of the same class to decide later which you'd rather have; meanwhile other students can't get in because it's full. Thanks.

Where: 412 Leavenworth St.

Ramsey said some items of interest at the sale for students are vacuum cleaners and coffee pots.

"If you like the retro look, there will a lot of that sort of thing," she said.

Vicki Gwartney, activities coordinator, said proceeds from the sale go towards programs and services for Seniors Service Center.

Ramsey said the goal is to raise $1200 from the sale. She added 40 percent of the center's funding comes from sales.

"To do the kinds of things we want to do, we need fundraisers such as this one," she said.

Murrell, Hund, Broce hired by Foundation to help raise funds

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The KSU Foundation has several new development team members who will assist in raising funds for various departments within the university.

Murrell will be the director of development for Diversity and International Programs. Murrell graduated with a degree in general management and entrepreneurship from K-State in 2003 and completed a master's degree in business administration at K-State in 2005.

According to a Foundation press release, he created, organized and chaired the Diversity in Action conference held in March 2005.

Hund has been named director of development for the Livestock and Meat Industry Council and Animal Sciences and Industry.

He earned a bachelor's degree in animal science from K-State in 1996.

Hund plans to further the Livestock and Meat Industry Councils in the College of Agriculture at K-State.

He said it is one of the best programs, and the efforts to further the councils are a collaborative effort between the College of Agriculture and the Foundation.

He also has several projects in the works, including plans to enhance the equine teaching department and beef feedlot research.

He has been in Manhattan since the end of May and said he is enjoying working at K-State.

"I love it," he said. "It feels like home."

Broce is the new director of development for the College of Architecture, Planning and Design.

He is currently working on a dissertation on cultural anthropology at Temple University in Philadelphia. This dissertation will be based on his position in anthropology for the Truth Commission of Panama. He worked at that position from 2001 to 2002, investigating human rights violations by the previous leaders of Panama and the recompensation of victims.

While Broce's degrees and teaching have been in the Department of Anthropology at both Temple University and the University of Vermont-Burlington, he said architecture has always been an area of interest. His studies in visual anthropology built environments will aid him in his work.

In planning for his new position, Broce said personal and professional connections helped him choose K-State. He plans to work with Dennis Law, dean of the College of Architecture, Planning and Design, on initiatives to increase scholarships and endowments.

Wildcats looking to fill voids with young roster

By Chris Patch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's men's and women's cross-country teams are entering the 2005-06 season with young rosters and voids left to be filled after the departures of All-American Mathew Chesang and All-Big 12 performer Trisha Culbertson.

The men begin the season with seven freshmen and the women with five, to complete one of the youngest K–State rosters in recent history.

More than the challenge of youth, the K-State men will have to find a way to fill a void left by Chesang.

Chesang graduated after a senior campaign where he finished third at the Big 12 Championships and 12th at the NCAA Championships.

While there is no clear replacement for Chesang, both the men's and women's squads have young talent head coach Mike Smith said he hopes leads to a foundation for the future.

Wichita State Gold Classic
When: 10 a.m. Sept. 3
Where: Wichita State

"They may struggle this year with the transition in the competitive Big 12," Smith said. "The big change will be that young people will lead to depth.

"What we hope to do is get better at the No. 5 spot, and then be better at four, and be better at three," Smith said. "I think that is possible this year, to be better at three, four and five. Whether that translates to a better Big 12 finish or not remains to be seen. But I think down the road we will certainly be in a better position."

Smith said he views the meet as a chance for his squad to get its collective feet wet, before the schedule becomes more difficult as the season progresses.

"I view this as an opportunity to get started," Smith said. "Really, the outcome there isn't that critical. How we do there isn't important to me, hopefully the conference is where we are going to direct our focus."

Smith said he directs his team's focus for the latter part of the season.

"Everything leads up to the conference meet," he said. "I think if you look at that schedule, things progress in terms of level of competition, from this first meet on down to the conference meet."

At Wichita State, K-State will be running the meet shorthanded.

"We won't run everybody there," Smith said. "We will just run people that either want to race there or need to race there for one reason or another."

The Wichita State meet is just the beginning of a season on the road for K–State. The Wildcats return home after their opener for the KSU/KU dual, the only home meet of the season.

The Cats then travel to Nebraska, Oklahoma and Arkansas for meets before the Big 12 Championships in Waco, Texas on Oct. 28.

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Angie Lastra laid a solid foundation her freshman year on the K-State volleyball team.

She was named the 2004 Big 12 Libero of the Year, became the first libero to be honored as Big 12 Player of the Week and was one of 11 freshmen selected as a "Rising Star" in college volleyball by CVU.com.

"That award helped me as motivation to keep working hard," Lastra said of returning as Big 12 Libero of the Year.

"Basically, I need to focus every day in practice and pay attention to what the coaches are telling me."

Now in her sophomore year, Lastra, a native of Carolina, Puerto Rico, is looking to build on her foundation. The award is now a thing of the past for Lastra, and although it is a source of inspiration, she said she is now focused on the upcoming season.

After losing four seniors – including All-American Vali Hejjas – Lastra, a libero and defensive specialist, has been challenged to assume a heftier leadership position this season for the younger Wildcats.

"What we're asking Angie to do now is not necessarily skill-oriented things," coach Susie Fritz said.

"We're asking her to be a more vocal leader, to take charge of our back-row defense and our back-row passing. We're asking her to take a stronger leadership role at this point."

Suzie Fritz
VOLLEYBALL COACH

In response, Lastra – whose 2004 credentials also include such notable achievements as appearing in all 113 games, setting school records in digs and service aces and ranking 14th in the nation with a 0.59 service aces per game – worked to sharpen her skills over summer.

"Not only did she have a terrific season with us, but she spent the summer representing the Puerto Rican Junior National Team," Fritz said. "She spent the summer in Brazil, and she was in Turkey playing in the Junior World Championships.

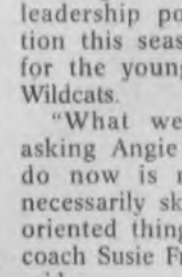
Lastra's improvement is reassuring for Fritz and the rest of the Wildcats. With only two seniors on the roster – outside hitters Katie Stanzel and Agata Rezende – and a tough schedule ahead, Lastra will be an important asset to the team.

Rezende said she is confident in Lastra's abilities and recognizes the need for her as a leader.

"She just continues getting better every day," Rezende said. "She's really fast, and she's a key player for us this year."

Still, Lastra is taking the pressure in stride.

"I'm looking forward to this season because we are a young team, but we are playing so hard," Lastra said.



In addition, Lastra said she thinks the difficulty of the schedule could translate into success for her team.

"We need to play great teams to be a better team," Lastra said. "We're excited and looking forward to those games."

While the capability of this year's team has been questioned by outsiders, Lastra said she is, once again, not concerned.

"We don't care about what other people say," Lastra said.

Woods maximizes his game to stay ahead of competition

CEDRIQUE FLEMMING

Anyone who has watched even a little golf has heard of Tiger Woods.

Many consider him the greatest golfer to ever play.

Woods knows he is an extraordinary player, yet he continuously strives to be better, which is what we as fans should expect from the best.

In early 2003, Woods decided he needed to alter his swing in order to maximize his game and stay ahead of the rising level of competition.

During his swing change, Woods had a difficult time winning tournaments. Even though he broke the record for most consecutive cuts (142), he went 10 consecutive majors without a win, which lasted from the 2002 British Open to the 2004 PGA Championship.

This was a big deal for him because, prior to the change, he won at least one major every year since 1998, when he was in his second year on the pro tour.

His so-called "drought" sparked critics, who began speculating whether or not Woods made the correct decision to alter his swing. Many wondered why Woods would change his game after winning four majors in a span from the 2000 U.S. Open Championship to the 2001 Masters, adding another two majors in 2002.

Woods said he changed his swing because he did not want to watch the competition pass him by. Woods felt by adjusting his swing he would stay ahead of everyone else.

Based on his results so far this year, it is clear Woods made the right decision. Anyone who thinks otherwise needs to take a look at the stats this man has put up.

In majors this year, Woods won the Masters, took second at the U.S. Open, won the British Open and tied fourth at the PGA Championship.

At the end of last year, Woods lost his No. 1 world ranking to Vijay Singh, but has since regained the ranking, and now has a stranglehold with the help of his recent success.

In the process of increasing his lead as No. 1 in the world, Woods has earned more money than anyone else on tour. So far this year, Woods has taken home more than $8.5 million – $1.3 million more than Singh, who ranks second on the tour in money earned.

According to www.pgatour.com, Woods has 10 top-10 finishes with five victories – including last weekend's WGC-NEC Invitational – three second-place finishes, and two thirds.

Woods is completely dominating the Tour this year, and therefore, is a lock for Player of the Year. He has done all of this while playing in just 17 tournaments, while Singh, the No. 2 player in the world, has played in 24 tournaments.

I never doubted Woods would complete his swing change and dominate the tour.

So sit back and enjoy as Woods rewrites record books and solidifies himself as the greatest golfer of all time.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The father of first-round draft pick Alex Gordon said he did not attend classes at Nebraska on Monday, which would have caused the Kansas City Royals to lose his rights.

Gordon

The Royals, who made the slugging third baseman the second player taken overall in the June draft, had said they were confident he would not attend classes even though he had enrolled for what would have been his senior season.

Royals' scouting director Deric Ladnier had said Sunday night that Gordon did not intend to go to class. There had been concern among Kansas City fans when it was learned the two-time Big 12 player of the year had enrolled.

GLF | Woods has another record on the horizon

AKRON, Ohio — Tiger Woods has been chasing Jack Nicklaus' record of 18 professional majors ever since he won his first Masters, a pursuit that has defined his career.

Woods

But that isn't his only target.

Six months ago in the parking lot at Doral, he was asked what records meant the most to him.

"The same ones as always," Woods said. "Majors. And total wins."

He rarely mentions any other record than the majors, although it was clear he had done his homework. Woods was asked if he knew the career victory record held by Sam Snead, and he quickly replied 81. Then he stopped himself.

"Wait a minute. It's now 82," he said.

CFB | Former players, coaches make up new poll

Terry Bradshaw, Lou Holtz, Steve Largent and Anthony Munoz are among the 114 panelists voting in a new poll the Bowl Championship Series will use this season to determine which teams play in college football's four major bowls, including the national title game.

The Harris Interactive College Football Poll panel is comprised of former college football players, coaches and administrators, plus some media members. The names of its voters were released Monday.

The Harris Poll replaces The Associated Press Top 25 media poll as one of three components in the BCS standings. The USA Today coaches' poll and a compilation of six computer rankings make up the other two-thirds of a team's BCS grade.

SPT | At least 40 hurt in Mexican bull run

Hundreds of would-be bullfighters crowded the streets of the city of Huamantla to participate in Sunday's event, which authorities said drew more than 100,000 spectators from Mexico and foreign countries.

The angry bulls ran through the streets for more than two hours, goring numerous participants, the Tlaxcala newspaper El Sol reported Monday.

Injuries also resulted from several street fights that erupted among observers and participants, many of whom had been drinking throughout the day, the newspaper said.

OLY | Atlanta Olympic bomber gets life sentence

ATLANTA — Victims of Eric Rudolph's bombs confronted him in court Monday, describing him as a small man who cowardly fled the carnage he created.

Just before a judge sentenced him to life in prison, Rudolph apologized to the victims of the 1996 Olympics blast in Atlanta, saying "I would do anything to take that night back."

He said he had wanted to anger and embarrass the federal government because it does not prohibit abortions, and he wanted to harm only government workers.

"I can't begin to truly understand the pain that I have inflicted on these innocent people," Rudolph said, reading a statement.

Snaith reaches new heights

"The Milk of Human Kindness"

Album review by Mark Sibilla

Canadian artist and producer Dan Snaith has had an interesting career thus far with only three proper albums under his name. In 2001 he released "Start Breaking My Heart," a pleasant album of IDM ('intelligent' dance music) as Manitoba.

Manitoba released "Up In Flames" in 2003. A huge leap from his debut album, "Up In Flames" had Manitoba embracing blissed-out psychedelic-pop/electronic romps.

Things took a strange turn for Snaith last year when the (long forgotten) Dictators' front man, Handsome Dick Manitoba, sued Snaith for trademark infringement. In a curious ruling, Handsome Dick prevailed and Snaith was forced to change his name. He adopted the moniker Caribou and earlier this year released "The Milk of Human Kindness."

With all of this complication in his life, one would think Snaith's music would suffer. Wrong. As Caribou, Snaith made another leap with his sonic palette; although not as obvious, this change proves to be toward a more accessible and enjoyable sound.

Keeping the core of his sound, "The Milk of Human Kindness" finds Snaith reaching out toward other areas of rock 'n' roll's history; the most obvious being Krautrock; bands such as Neu!, Can, Faust and, to a lesser extent, Kraftwerk are used as a template.

At its best, "The Milk of Human Kindness" is like a lively, pulsating organism.

"The Milk of Human Kindness" is the type of album that sounds wonderful on the stereo, but its true self isn't revealed until one listens to the album on (quality) headphones. The production and arrangements are meticulously crafted so one would think the album feels cold and calculated, but in actuality, the album feels warm and very organic.

"A Final Warning" opens with waves of synth washes before a steady beat is placed and the track is propelled forward. "Lord Leopard," a short interlude of lively hip-hop beats and unchained piano melody follows. This is followed by the wonderfully bouncy Krautrock-influenced, "Bees."

The interlude, "Hands First," is a spastic drum attack that sounds as if all the previous sounds and styles on the album become sucked into themselves and leave only the sparse guitar and quiet tics of the Simon and Garfunkel influenced "Hello Hammerheads."

"Brahminy Kite" follows. It is a heavily percussive track that sounds like a psychedelic drum line. The transition from the quiet "Hammerheads" to this track can be jarring at first, but once "Brahminy Kite" picks up steam, any quibbles are forgotten.

Dan Snaith has done it again. By creating a lush, dense album, he allows the listener to come back to it numerous times and still hear something new.

Do you have the hangover BLUES?

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sometimes drinking can lead to a major headache.

"Your head is throbbing and you feel like you want to throw up," Nicole Buzan, sophomore in open-option, said, explaining how a hangover feels.

This feeling is called the hangover blues.

People may feel normal the night before, but when they wake up the next morning they wish they hadn't had so much to drink.

The hangover blues can have a variety of effects depending on a person's situation. Some people get the hangover blues when they have to be at work or in class, typically early the next morning. Some people don't have anything to do but lay around and wait to drink the next night.

"I got really drunk the night before the Band Day Parade and the next morning I arrived at McCain Auditorium in full uniform and then I threw up in the bushes," Chris Exum, junior in music education, said. "It was everywhere."

So what does a person do when he or she gets a hangover?

Drinking plenty of water, taking aspirin and sleeping are the usual cures.

"When I get a hangover, I stay in bed and drink water all day," Shaniell Johnson, sophomore in pre-nursing, said. "I also heard that drinking the last drink you had the night before and a glass of water to follow it helps."

Exum offers a different remedy.

"Before you go to sleep take a vitamin C capsule and orange juice. It really works," Exum said.

One remedy that is popular among many student athletes is a drink that is comparable to Gatorade, but 10 times stronger. This hangover treatment is called Rehydrolites.

Another solution students shared is eating in the morning because drinking too much water will begin to make one feel drunk again.

According to "Six levels of a hangover," at about.com, there are six levels that you can be in while having a hangover, level one being the lowest and six being the highest.

The first level doesn't involve pain, but a feeling of illness. Your mouth feels parched; and you can't sleep very well.

The third level is a slight headache and an uneasy stomach. A dry mouth and problems going to the bathroom are also along for the ride.

The sixth level, worst, is waking up next to someone you don't know, with the taste of vomit in your mouth.

There is no scientific cure for a hangover but different remedies seem to work for different people.

NEW RELEASES

"The Wedding Date" (2005)
In a romantic comedy that immediately evokes "Pretty Woman" — for its plot, at any rate — Kat (Debra Messing) and Nick (Dermot Mulroney) play a seemingly mismatched pair who, after beginning their acquaintance on a purely commercial basis, end up falling for one another.

"Sin City" (2005)
Robert Rodriguez, Frank Miller and Quentin Tarantino all had a hand in bringing this hyper-stylized, panel-by-panel vision of Miller's celebrated noir-punk comic to big-screen life. With Bruce Willis, Clive Owen, Rosario Dawson, Jessica Alba and a host of other indie and big-budget stars moving at a slam-bang pace through the intricately interconnected storylines, the film has a breathless quality that meshes nicely with the primal themes it explores and exploits: lust, vengeance, rage and regret. And even though the film's depictions of brutality are, in all senses of the term, "cartoonish," they also, very occasionally, verge on the tiresome.

"The Brown Bunny" (2003)
Vincent Gallo's controversial sophomore feature has become the stuff of Hollywood legend, although its infamy derives mainly from what happened offscreen rather than on. A quiet, deeply personal tale about a motorcycle racer's cross-country trek in his battered van, harboring a pain and memories of a lost love so sharp that only the desolation of America's endless highways can adequately represent it. The graphic sexual act that Gallo and Chloë Sevigny engage in at the film's end has been called shocking — mostly by those who have never seen the film — but in the age of the Internet and cable TV, the only thing truly shocking about it is that it's real.

"The Simpsons: The Complete Sixth Season" (1994-1995)
Twenty-five episodes, including "Bart of Darkness," "Lisa's Rival," "Another Simpsons Clip Show," "Itchy and Scratchy Land," "Treehouse of Horror V," "Bart's Girlfriend," "Homer Bad Man," "Bart's Comet," "Homie the Clown," "Bart Vs. Australia" and more. Commentary on every episode by Matt Groening, David Mirkin, Mike Scully, Dan Castellaneta, Yeardley Smith and others. Animation showcase including illustrated commentary and storyboards. The television special, "Springfield's Most Wanted."

"The Office: Season One" (US Version) (2005)
The mockumentary-style show focuses on a group of 9-to-5 office workers at the fictional Dunder-Mifflin paper-supply company. As in the Brit original, the show's humor stems from the characters' idiosyncrasies and often deeply awkward interactions with one another — and none are more idiosyncratic or awkward than the incompetent regional manager, Michael Scott, played to a smarmy tee by Steve Carell.

Columnist to shed light on sex in Manhattan

HOLLY KRAMER

This year, I want to deflower Manhattan.

In a town where the churches outnumber students and flashing is classified as a Class C misdemeanor, one question remains: Is there a harder core in the Little Apple?

In the past year, we've acquired enough sandwich shops to feed a small country, but failed to allow a single sex shop or strip club within the sacred city limits.

If one were to stroll down Moro Street in Aggieville on a Thursday night, they'd be greeted with the typical, if not stereotypical, drunken debauchery of any college town.

However, as certain as the sunrise, our fair city is back to its pristine Midwestern ways in the morning.

This year, I challenge the student body to question this paradox. In Manhattan, where the local economy is mainly fueled by student purchases, where are the sex shops, the strip bars and the male version of the Beauty on the Beach contests?

I know I can't be the only one who takes the journey to Lawrence or Topeka to purchase personal products (for research purposes only) or wants to see Speedos instead of bikinis at Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon.

On a less theatrical, more practical side, I want to say which sex scenes in certain movies changed my life. I want each and every one of the students at K-State to know what the clitoris is.

Above all, I hope to examine the perils and intricacies of boyfriend/girlfriend communication and demystifying the world of women. I want to let guys in on girl-speak, as in what we actually mean when we say something.

I want to be a fly on the wall, observing what makes a relationship fulfilling or what makes some people want to find fulfillment elsewhere.

I want to come face to Facebook. We are the most technological and sophisticated generation yet, but we find ourselves most confused by relationships with others. Whether it deals with finding another person, or just a fancier electronic device, I hope this column will be a helpful guide.

As for the sex shops, I guess I'll be exiled to another town for now, with good friends and hard-earned cash in tow.

New online system to issue hunting licenses

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks' new system for issuing hunting and fishing licenses is bringing the state further into the 21st century, but first it needs to work out a few bugs.

Riley County Clerk Rich Vargo said the old system, which used pre-printed pads issued to vendors from Pratt, was being replaced with an Internet-based one that speeds up the entire system.

With the new system, sportsmen and women can use any vendor of their choosing to buy their licenses or tags, or go online to the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks Web site.

To pay for the online system, a fee of $1.15 is added to every sale, and an additional 2.5 percent will be charged for sales through the Web site.

Karen Beard, chief of licensing for the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks, said the new system has several advantages over the old one. It saves time for vendors, allows for a standardized database of all license sales and prevents hunters from buying more game tags than allowed by law, she said.

The system gives vendors two options for issuing licenses and tags, Beard said. They can use a PC and connect it to a special printer for sales, or they can use a standalone machine that communicates with the main office through a phone line.

The former is completely up and running at the Riley County Clerk's office, all Wildlife and Parks offices, and at every Wal-Mart in Kansas, she said. The latter is another story.

Vendors statewide expected to have their phone line-based systems working Aug. 12, and Riley County vendors were supposed to have it June 1 as part of a pilot program, but technical problems have set that deadline back.

Beard said their printers could be working within a few weeks. Meanwhile, dove season starts Sept. 1, and with only one-third of all vendors operating, she said it's almost certain many vendors will miss sales.

Kansas quarter to be recreated in farm field

By Carl Manning
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA – Artist Stan Herd figures he'll be busy this week getting his latest crop-art project in shape for its viewing. It is a 200-foot replica of the quarter commemorating Kansas, carved in a field near Hutchinson.

Herd said Monday he's about halfway through the project under way in a 1-acre field not far from the Kansas State Fairgrounds, where the quarter will make its state debut on Sept. 9. Gov. Kathleen Sebelius plans to lead the celebration for the official launch of the coin.

"I'm working in the field now," said Herd, "I've got a hard week ahead of me. I'll have a dozen people working with me on this, and we're creating it mainly with a Weed Eater, shovels, hand gardening tools and a Roto-Tiller. No tractor this time."

Herd plans to have his project completed Saturday, and employees of the sponsoring organizations can be photographed standing on the border of the artwork. A poster-sized aerial photograph of the project will be on sale at the fair.

For nearly 25 years, the Lawrence artist has been known for turning fields into portraits, still lifes and commercial advertisements to be viewed from the air, using natural elements such as crops, rocks and flowers.

The commemorative quarter's reverse side shows the front view of a standing buffalo and three sunflowers nearby. At the top is "Kansas 1861," the date the state joined the union.

Herd said he started in a field of 8-inch alfalfa, cutting the images out of that. The alfalfa will be the coin's background with dirt, mulch and stones to create the buffalo and sunflowers.

The buffalo will be brown with light tan and its shadow will be dark earth.

"I kind of put my own spin on the buffalo. The way the critter is standing is the same, but I added my own flair to it ... an artistic flair," Herd said.

As for the sunflowers, they probably will be the same color as the buffalo, although that might change.

"I'll get to the sunflowers later this week and they may be yellow," Herd said.

He said his $7,000 fee – about one-third what he normally charges for such a project – is financed mainly by SBC of Kansas, the Kickapoo Tribe of Kansas, the Topeka Community Foundation and the Kansas Museum of History Foundation.

Silt decreases lake capacity

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE – Sediment in the state's major lakes and reservoirs may affect both the quality and quantity of the water supply without costly rehabilitation.

Kansas has 93 reservoirs that supply drinking water for about 60 percent of the state's population. Major ones such as John Redmond, Perry and Tuttle Creek have lost from 23 percent to 30 percent of their water capacity because of silting.

"Fifty years ago, people thought ahead to build these lakes; now we have to do something to keep them up," said Edward Martinko, director of the Kansas Biological Survey.

"This is potentially a huge problem that is going to confront the state in the next 20 to 40 years," Martinko said.

The storage capacity of Clinton Lake has declined only 6 percent because of sedimentation – still a faster rate than expected – while Mission Lake near Horton has so much silt that it can't be used as a public water supply.

"The bottom line is that the situation with respect to Clinton is that it has been sedimenting in faster than has been anticipated. The original life expectancy was 100 years, and now it is projected at only 70 years," Martinko said.

Lakes require maintenance "just like we fix old streets and sewer lines," said Tracy Streeter, executive director of the Kansas Water Office.

Horton residents, who use wells, have approved $4 million in bonds to dredge their lake, which was built in the 1930s.

Horton Mayor Dale White said the city would like to be part of a pilot project on rehabilitating lakes proposed by the Kansas Water Office. The office is seeking legislative approval to use $400,000 to conduct the project.

Number of rabbits doubles in plains

By Amy Bickel
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DIGHTON, Kan.– Longtime farmer Rod Bentley recalls getting out of school to participate in community jackrabbit drives during the Dust Bowl era. When he was a teenage farm boy, his family's west-central Kansas crop suffered from pests.

After drives killed thousands of rabbits, along with colder winters, the big-eared, black-tailed jackrabbit became a rare hare on the arid terrain.

Now, amid a multi-year drought, the jackrabbit is making a strong comeback to this region of the Great Plains.

"You see a lot more along the roads," said Bentley, an 84-year-old who still lives on his family's Shields-area farm. "I think we have at least double the rabbits of a year ago."

The black-tailed jackrabbit was thick during the 1930s drought, eating wheat and grass down to the ground.

Neighborhood drives were organized to eradicate the rabbits.

"A baseball bat worked real good, or a limb about 4 inches in diameter," Bentley said. "But I could never make myself get in and club rabbits to death."

He saw jackrabbits increase again during a drought period in the 1950s, then didn't see the numbers again until recently.

Their good eyesight and speed are a plus in thin vegetation caused by drought, said Randy Rodgers, a wildlife biologist with the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks.

"There is no question their populations have seemed to increase during extended periods of dry weather," he said. "There's a significant increase, but we are by no means near the levels that occurred in the '30s and the 1950s."

doubling the current fee to $150.

Faculty and staff permits will increase $34 a year for three years doubling the fee to $202.

Abbott said the fee increases may be implemented as soon as fall 2006.

The 300 student parking stalls could possibly have a fee of $17 a month.

The unaffiliated stalls will be similar to the metered parking in place now, Abbott said. However, instead of meters, students will be able to pay for parking by the hour when they exit the parking garage.

Visitor parking will also be included in the unaffiliated stalls. Abbott said this will open up more parking in the Memorial Stadium lot because there will be no need to block off parking spaces.

Leitnaker said the parking garage is about looking at K-State's future needs.

"We have a dire need for parking spaces, and this is our solution to try to address that," Leitnaker said.

include he can begin the selection process.

For the first GlobalFlyer flight, Kuhlman said he had very little time to select students, so he asked for faculty recommendations.

However, Kuhlman said he hopes he has more time to select student assistants for this attempt and wants to have an application process.

The students who were part of the previous record attempt may or may not have an advantage, depending on what Fossett wants.

"If they want experienced students, it would probably be the students from before," Kuhlman said.

"At this point no one is guaranteed the slot but that could change depending on what they want."

In the meantime, preparations for "The Ultimate Flight" have already begun, Tim Rogers, executive director of the Salina Airport Authority, said.

Rogers said a team of engineers and mechanics with the company that built the plane, Scaled Composites in Mojave, Calif., has made modifications to the aircraft and corrected a problem that caused the GlobalFlyer to lose 3,000 pounds of fuel during its first flight around the globe.

PIPES | Steam pipes to be ready in time for winter

buildings lost hot water because of the pipes breaking. The halls include Eisenhower, Holtz, Holton, Kedzie, Anderson and Fairchild and the east side of Seaton, as well as McCain Auditorium and All Faiths Chapel.

Facilities took care to ensure student safety in the process of replacing the pipes because the steam inside the pipes can be deadly.

Boggs said that when going down into the tunnels, some workers carry boards in front of themselves to determine where the steam is. Although it is audible, if a person were to step in front of the steam, the power could cut a person in half.

"The steam is nothing you play with," Boggs said.

During the summer, Waldinger Corporation parked its company vehicles near the construction site in front of Hale Library. It was required in the contract, Boggs said, that the company remove those vehicles shortly before school started in order to keep students and workers safe.

"They are pulling air out of the tunnels so the workers don't have to breathe the smoke," Tony Pierpoint, union contract worker, said.

Research will develop tools to identify terrorist threats

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With aircraft security a new priority since Sept. 11, K-State dedicated a new center for researching the safety of in-flight air quality Tuesday.

The Federal Aviation Administration Center of Excellence for Aircraft Cabin Environment Research will develop tools for the in-flight identification of airborne biological or chemical terrorist threats in airplanes.

"The threat is real," President Jon Wefald said. "This war on terror is a war that we are in now, so we can't be doing too much to be safe."

Research for the center is being conducted in the basement of Seaton Hall until a more permanent location that can accommodate the needed equipment is found. No new building will be constructed on campus, but the center will simply occupy a current building.

The center receives federal funds and has received about $300,000 for start-up and research costs.

Tenant fees may be illegal

By JP Wilson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Owning a pet can be more expensive than buying it food and basic necessities.

Many apartment complexes in Manhattan charge tenants a half month's rent for a pet deposit, while some tack on non-refundable fees and even charge rent for the pet to live in the apartment.

Jim Compton, senior in history, said he will have to wait until he graduates to get a puppy because he can't afford to pay an extra $300 to $600 a year in fees for a pet.

"When I lived outside of Manhattan, apartments only required a pet deposit of half a months rent," Compton said. "It wasn't a fee, so you got it back. I can't imagine very many students can afford these fees. How could you?"

Considering deposits and fees for pets, in addition to deposits and other fees landlords charge tenants, the costs add up quickly.

For example, a student renting a one-bedroom apartment at Chase Manhattan would pay about $500 a month and a deposit of one month's rent. But if the student owned a pet, they would pay an additional $200 deposit and a $200 non-refundable fee.

Chase Manhattan Apartments manager Bryce Carrol said they didn't want to charge tenants a monthly fee, which is why they have a deposit and a fee up front.

"That way, instead of breaking it out [over a year], we do one rate," Carrol said.

But breaking the fee down over a year may prove more expensive for tenants, especially when one considers they are non-refundable.

Park Place Apartments charges tenants a half month's rent for their pet deposit and $25 each month for the pet to live in the apartment. Over a one-year lease, the monthly charges add up to more than $300.

Westchester Park's monthly fees are more expensive, totaling $600 during a one-year lease.

According to the Kansas Residential Landlord and Tenant Act, "a landlord can not demand more than one month's rent for an unfurnished apartment." If the rental agreement includes a pet, the landlord can demand an additional security deposit "not to exceed one-half of one month's rent."

Even though tenants would be reimbursed deposit money if there was no damage, the Kansas Residential Landlord and Tenant Act does not allow landlords to charge $600 for a deposit on an apartment that rents for $500 a month.

New greeks meet at Greek 101

By Megan Green
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Greek 101 began before its scheduled 7 p.m. start time.

Organizers decided to take a new route with Greek 101. Instead of a lecture-style atmosphere, the event was geared more toward having the new members interact.

The introductions of the members of Panhellenic and Interfraternity councils, the presidents of each house and a presentation for the philanthropy Up 'Til Dawn preceded the main event.

The speaker, Newton Kaneshiro is an employee of Playfair, a company based in Louisiana. He travels to college campuses across the country in August and September to get new members excited about being a part of the greek community.

"My goal is to make the new members realize that they can work together and not against each other," Kaneshiro said.

The new approach was decided on in order to teach new members they are not only a part of a greek house, but also a part of an entire greek community.

"It's tradition for new members to attend the first Greek 101. It gives them the opportunity to meet other members of the greek community and to understand that they are all a part of one community," Andy Kowal, senior in management, said.

Greek 101 gave new members a chance to meet each other. Kaneshiro led games and had attendees break into different groups – by eye color, by birthday, by shoe style – several times during the event.

"I wanted the K-State greek community to recognize that they all have common goals and interests," Kaneshiro said.

Beer sales denied at KU Student Union

LAWRENCE – University of Kansas administration decided students will not be drinking beer at the Kansas Union any time soon.

The Office of Student Success rejected a proposal Friday by the University of Kansas Memorial Corporation Board to serve beer in the union. A petition Student Senate passed last February spearheaded that proposal.

Jason Boots, University Senate Executive Committee chairman, who worked on the petition and on the Memorial Corporations Board, said he was disappointed the proposal was denied.

"It would have been a great opportunity for the University to show students how to drink responsibly," Boots, Plainville, Texas senior, said.

Marlesa Roney, vice provost for student success, said her office was concerned that selling alcohol in a place that allows minors might cause the University to accidentally serve underage drinkers.

"I had hoped we could make it work, but the risks were too high," Roney said.

The petition to investigate selling alcohol in the union passed through senate in February. It said the university should look into selling 3.2 percent alcohol-content beer on campus to teach students to use alcohol responsibly. The petition noted that other Kansas Board of Regents institutions serve 3.2 beer, and the Kansas Union sold beer until 1997.

The union quit selling beer after an off-campus car accident involving two KU students. The union was not at fault for the accident, but stopped its beer sales as a result.

The petition went from Student Senate to a committee of students, faculty and union administrators to be developed into a proposal, said David Mucci, director of Memorial Unions.

The KU Memorial Corporation Board approved the proposal on May 7. The proposal included the sale of 3.2 beer in Jaybowl and in Milton's Coffee Shop from 4 p.m. to 10 p.m. Alcohol consumption would be allowed only on the first floor of the Kansas Union in the Hawk's Nest and the bowling alley.

Mucci said the proposal allowed the area where alcohol would be served to be open to minors as a way to help downplay the use of alcohol.

U. NEBRASKA TUNING IN TO 'TOMMY'

But it was more for wiping feet than parading through throngs of paparazzi.

The crowd also witnessed the acting debut of Matt Ellis, Lee's roommate and Lincoln's newest star.

"It's been a lot of fun, a once in a lifetime experience," said Ellis, who could only name four Motley Crüe songs when put on the spot. "College itself is full of once in a lifetime experiences, but this has been a great way to go out."

Ellis graduated from Nebraska in December with a degree in political science and currently works at the legislature for Sen. Deb Fischer of Valentine.

But he used to work at Iguana's, so arranging the guest appearance was not a difficult task.

During commercial breaks, Ellis served 50-cent shots and got the crowd of about hundred people riled up, only to have them simmer down once the show came back on.

Ellis felt the show did a good job portraying college life: Showing how challenging classes were while proving how much fun the college experience can be.

"I think everyone thought (Chancellor Harvey) Perlman was taking a big risk," Ellis said. "But I think he knew what he was doing. The first couple of (panoramic) shots of campus looked awesome."

UFM provides common ground for students, community members

Christopher Hanewinckel | Collegian

Third degree black belt student at Sun Yi's Academy, Ellaine Morgan, freshman in business administration, helps George Wang, 11, with Tae Kwon Do moves Tuesday night in Ahearn Fieldhouse. The Tae Kwon Do group meets every Tuesday and Thursday evenings.

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Swimming, scuba diving, archery, fly-fishing, canoeing, belly dancing, Tae Kwon Do – these activities are no longer simply for pleasure.

UFM was founded in 1968 by a group of K-State students and faculty as a way to bridge the communication gap between the university and the Manhattan community.

"(They) wanted a neutral ground where they could talk about issues and get to know each other," Linda Teener, UFM executive director, said.

In 1968, UFM offered seven classes and enrollment totaled 150 students. In the last fiscal year, which ended in July, 5,596 K-State students took classes through UFM, and more than 14,000 students total enrolled.

The number of classes offered at UFM has increased substantially since the beginning. Last spring, UFM offered 561 classes. While numbers for this year have not been finalized yet, there are at least 300 classes available for recreation only and 50 to 75 are available for college credit.

UFM classes are also available to K-State-Salina students.

"I think we offer things that you can't find anywhere else," Marcia Hornung, UFM education coordinator, said. "The other good thing about our classes is that they're pretty short, so you can try a lot of things without investing a large amount of time or money."

With such a variety of classes offered, the students enrolled also vary dramatically.

"We offer classes for anybody who's interested in it," Teener said.

In alignment with UFM's slogan, "everyone can teach and everyone can learn," students are not the only people who vary in age.

The youngest UFM professor to date was six years old. She and her older siblings taught a course on how to care for rabbits.

The oldest professor, who was 98, taught a course on healthy dieting.

"I think the classes that they offer are so amazing," Kelly Marshall, senior in kinesiology and human nutrition and dietetics, said. "I've never seen a place that offers so many crazy classes."

Marshall teaches hip-hop dance classes through UFM. She has also taught dance classes in the Kansas City area.

"As a teacher, I like the array, the wide spectrum of students, that I get in there," Marshall said. "I get the best crowd, the best energy, the best everything from UFM."

In addition to offering classes, UFM also facilitates the Lou Douglas Lecture Series.

The first of the three lectures scheduled for this year will take place at 7 p.m. Sept. 29 in the K-State Student Union Ballroom.

Patricia J. Williams, an author, a law professor and a cultural commentator, will lecture on "Civil Rights in an Era of Social Wrongs."

Freshmen receive scholarship

By Ben Spicer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Five K-State freshmen have been awarded a one-time academic scholarship recognizing students who have shown potential for success in a variety of different areas.

Jamie Ball, Rebecca Bush, Megan Dwyer, Leann Kearney and Josh McGinn all received the Nancy Landon Kassebaum Scholarship, granting them $5,000 worth of academic aid their first year.

The students selected participated in a rigorous academic curriculum during high school, were actively involved in serving their communities and excelled in such science and math, all while demonstrating a potential for leadership.

"The scholarship was a huge decision factor in me attending K-State," Ball said. "It was quite an honor being chosen."

Ball received information about the scholarship through the mail, but was notified she had won by a phone call from Pat Bosco, dean of student life.

"Dr. Bosco called and spoke about how difficult it was to notify those that hadn't been chosen and had me very worried," she said. "He then told me I wasn't one of those people and that I had, in fact, received the scholarship."

Dwyer, freshman in engineering, said she already planned to attend K-State when she found out about the scholarship.

"Knowing I was going to come to K-State already and then to find out about this, it was icing on the cake," she said.

Jim Hohenbary, scholarship advisor in the College of Arts and Sciences, said the recipients are an important part of the K-State campus.

"At any given time there are around 25 to 30 award winners on campus contributing to the university in a variety of ways," he said.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Students must understand tenant rights

When searching for an apartment complex that is willing to take Fluffy or Fido, beware of being scammed.

According to the Kansas Residential Landlord and Tenant Act, a landlord cannot charge more than a half of a month's rent for pet deposit.

Some Manhattan apartment complexes could be charging more than their fair share when it comes to tenants with pets.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

While it is the responsibility of the landlords to follow the Kansas Residential Landlord and Tenant act, it is up to the tenants – which is often K-State students – to know the law.

The Housing and Credit Counseling Inc. answers questions about the act for landlords and tenants alike.

Also, don't be afraid to confront your landlord. You are – in fact – paying money to live in the establishment, so you deserve a word or two with the landlord about whether the fee is reasonable or not.

So be wary of landlords who either don't know the Kansas Residential Landlord and Tenant Act or don't think they should follow it.

You never know. Your pet could be costing you more than you thought.

Seaside Resort

Guantanamo Bay full-service island paradise now taking reservations

KODY COOPER

Have you committed acts of sedition and/or terrorism against the United States? Do you serve Allah by murdering Western infidels? Don't you deserve a vacation? Sign up now. Rooms are filling up at the All Inclusive Guantanamo Bay Resort and Spa: your tropical getaway from the stressful life of jihad.

We've got all the amenities at Gitmo! Down here, the sun always shines on our state-of-the-art outdoor recreational facilities. Are you looking for soccer, volleyball and ping-pong? We've got it! And the views of the Caribbean are breathtaking.

Our seven day forecast calls for low 80s and nary a cloud in the sky. Why not catch some rays at Guantanamo Bay? With the plangent waves crashing on our sandy white beaches, relaxation is just a terrorist act away.

Had some bad experiences with "All-Inclusives" before? No need to worry! At Gitmo Resort and Spa, we have recently contracted an impenetrable Halliburton-made high-rise security wall. You'll be safe at Gitmo!

Or perhaps, if Caribbean food is a too turbulent for your turban, our infidel chefs will prepare every meal with the utmost cultural sensitivity according to Koranic Law mandate. You will enjoy such dishes as orange glazed chicken with steamed peas and rice pilaf. At Gitmo, you'll eat like a mullah, and feel like one too!

Yes, I said mullah. Sign up for an extended stay, and we'll add in a Koran and prayer rug, courtesy of American taxpayer money. Since the infidel staff isn't allowed to touch your new Koran, we will hand it to you shrink wrapped when you arrive. Your hand-woven prayer rug will be waiting in your room.

Hypocritical? How dare you? Providing Gitmo guests with a Koran and five-star meals doesn't have anything to do with American schoolchildren. Just because we tore down the Ten Commandments – the last refuge of instruction about our Judeo-Christian heritage – and serve kids sloppy joes doesn't necessarily mean we treat Gitmo guests better than our children. Besides, all guests at Gitmo are only fighting against the 'Capitalist Christian Crusaders'.

A guest favorite at the Gitmo Resort is the interrogation room. Here our guest attendants will ask you some questions about your heroic terrorist activity. Whatever you do, resist! I promise you'll be in for a treat. You'll get to hear the latest 'tortuous' rock and rap music straight from the United States. Is there anything we don't do here at Gitmo?

There is one thing we don't do – hinder your religious freedoms. In every guest's room, an arrow indicates the direction and distance to Mecca.

Did you know some liberal elites want to close our resort and move our guests to Ft. Leavenworth, Kan.? They must not realize that Gitmo guests are living better than they ever did in their Middle Eastern homelands.

Quit complaining about gas prices

Illustration by Kelsey Childress | COLLEGIAN

KELSEY CHILDRESS

As of Aug. 21, the average unleaded gasoline price was $2.59 per gallon in Manhattan.

Think that's expensive? Try living in California.

According to the American Automobile Association's (AAA) Web site, the state average for California was $2.79 per unleaded gallon. AAA also states that the national average is $2.60 per gallon, which is the highest recorded in U. S. history.

In times like these, you may find yourself wanting to complain to your friends and moan to your parents about this sudden surge in prices at the pump, but this is totally useless.

For the average consumer, gas prices don't make a considerable difference. My 1995 Mercury Mystique has a 14 gallon tank, and it currently costs me around $32 each time I fill up. When people weren't griping – when gas was $1.09 a gallon – it cost me $15. That is a $17 difference or about $36 a month. I think I can let go of $36, especially when I cannot control the gasoline market.

For me, I cut out fast food once or twice a week, which is something I needed to do anyway. You can also look back and think about where the $50 that you spent at the bars last week went and think about sparing your liver and saving your wallet.

I am very much aware you want that $50, but unless you can convince your parents your alcohol budget should take precedence over your gas budget, I'm afraid you are out of luck.

The point I'm trying to make is the fact most of us have to drive somewhere at some point in time. All you have to do is quit complaining, make some sacrifices, and pay what they want.

If you truly can't afford it, again, stop sitting there whining and dust off your bike or organize a carpool. I know not all of our parents are able to send us money while we are away at college, but this is going to help you remember that you are an actual adult who sometimes has to deal with financial issues.

Blaming the Iraq war isn't going to help. It happened; we are "fighting the war on terror" or whatever they're calling it nowadays. I find it semi-humorous the very thing we truthfully went to Iraq for in the first place – crude oil – is backfiring on us.

However, that is probably the start of an entirely different column, and the point of this one is we just have to deal with it. There are tons of things we can do to conserve gas, and while I don't really want to spend time finding out what those are, you have to remember this is all your choice. No one told you to commute or live across town from campus.

I also don't think anyone pointed a gun and made you buy a fifteen mile-per-gallon SUV. I know it makes you look cooler than the rest of us who drive boring sedans, but at least I only use two tanks of gas every month.

Maybe you didn't have a choice in what kind of car you bought, but I don't believe that gives you an excuse to complain about it or how much it costs to drive place to place, especially if your parents are paying for it.

So, take a deep breath, give the cashier your credit card, and thank your lucky stars we don't live in California.

Activists want words added to ordinance

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There is no local law protecting all Manhattan residents from discrimination based on sexual orientation. At least, not yet.

The Flint Hills Human Rights Project is wanting to add a few words to the city anti-discrimination ordinance making it illegal to refuse to hire, serve or rent to someone because of their gender identity or sexual preference. The issue was discussed at their meeting Tuesday night at the First Congregational Church.

"Intolerance is gonna be a fact of life, but it can't be allowed to dictate whether a person gets a job or not," member Clyde Mattson said.

The group stressed this was not just to protect gay, lesbian or bisexual persons. This would also outlaw discrimination based on the perception of them having a different sexual orientation. That is, if a straight person were mistreated because someone thought they were gay, they would also be protected.

Christopher Renner, the organization's chair, said they will propose the commission add in the words "sexual orientation and gender identity/expression" to the current ordnance, which was put into effect in 1993.

"Our request, first of all, is that they study the issue," he said.

The organization is working on gathering personal accounts of such discrimination to present to the City of Manhattan Human Rights Commission on Sept. 22. They are also going to be asking other community organizations for their endorsement of the change.

Renner said the lack of reported instances of such discrimination is similar to the low number of rapes reported in Manhattan in that victims are often afraid to speak up. Renner said he had several confidential accounts of violence in Manhattan against several persons due to them being gay or a perception and hoped to discuss some at the commission meeting.

There is concern over resistance from parts of the Manhattan community spurring from views on the morality of homosexuality, but the members are prepared to debate it.

"Some people think gambling is a sin, should you be able to fire someone because you know they went to Las Vegas?" member Alley Stoughton said.

Renner said some entities have clauses in their hiring policies forbidding discrimination based on sexuality, like Home Depot and the federal government, but only with civilian hires. Also, any company that does business with the government is banned from doing so.

Renner said persons wishing to come forward with a personal experience of discrimination violence based on sexual orientation should call Parents, Families and Friends of Lesbians and Gays (PFLAG) at 785-410-3130.

New assistant dean of life at home in Manhattan

By Maria Nilges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Heather Reed, the new assistant dean of student life, spent much of one afternoon this week assisting a grieving student.

The student wanted to attend the out-of-town funeral of her grandmother.

"If the student comes through our office first it can make it so much easier on the professor and the student because the absences will be verified," she said.

Reed currently serves on committees such as the Staff Development Committee and the Extraordinary Student Awards Committee. She also is an adviser for the Student Governing Association.

However, Reed said her favorite part of the job is working with the students and helping them through rough times.

"The work I do directly with students is really fulfilling and enjoyable work for me," she said.

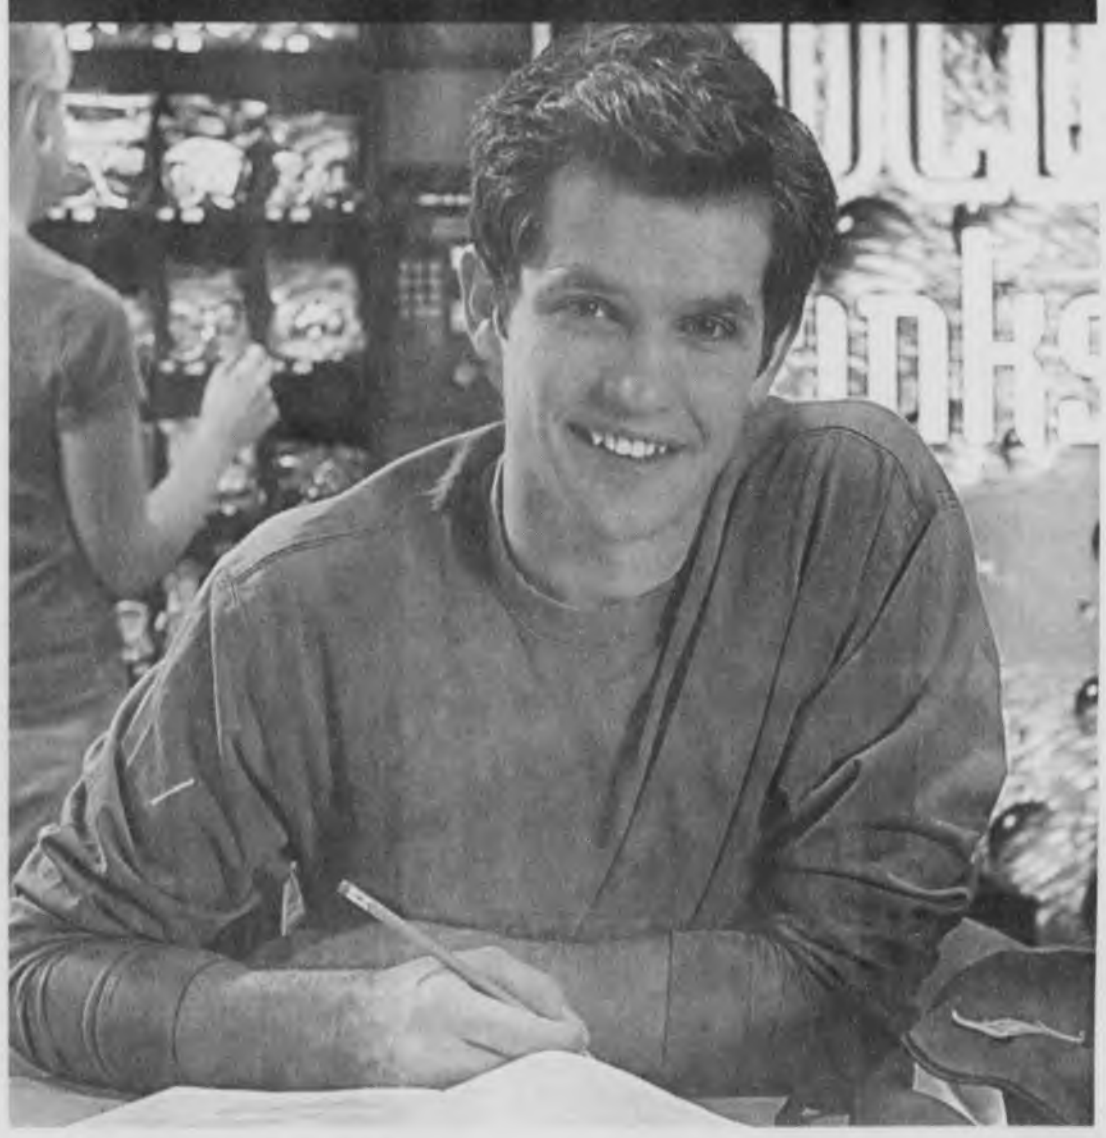
Carla Jones, assistant vice president of student life, said Reed brings plenty of experience to the position.

"She has had experience working with young people for many years," Jones said. "She has been a mentor and a problem solver."

Prior to working at K-State, Reed was the counseling director at Garden City High School for 14 years. She also taught kindergarten through 12th grade music in Manhattan at Woodrow Wilson Elementary School in the 1980s.

She said she was excited to come back to Manhattan and work for K-State since she enjoys the area and her parents live in Manhattan.

"I just love Manhattan and the surrounding Flint Hills," she said. "Plus my daughters, parents, sister and husband went to K-State. We are big Wildcat fans."



Reed received a master's degree in counseling from Fort Hays State University and a bachelor's degree in education from Saint Marys of the Plains.

The Office of Student Life, 102 Holton Hall, serves the student body in a variety of ways. It offers students assistance with their transition to college, religious issues, seeking aid through K-State's Counseling Services and grade grievance issues. The office responds to any racial, ethnic or sexual harassment claims with strictly followed policies.

A league of their own

ANTHONY MENDOZA

Step away from steroids.

Back away from Balco.

These have been common topics related to baseball this past year.

But now, it's time to talk true baseball.

Fans should turn their attention away from the large, glamorous, big-league ballparks with luxury suites, and onto Williamsport, Pa., to the Little League World Series, where the only supplements these little leaguers are taking are cola and a candy bars.

Sure, like every sport, it has problems.

Coaches cheat, players falsify their birth certificates and 12 year olds throw wicked curveballs that put so much stress on their elbow, by the time they reach adolescence they won't be able to throw.

But beyond those reasons – and the select crazy parents who live their athletic dreams through their children, pushing them to the brink of craziness with their narrow minded thoughts of the their child being the next great star – it's baseball at its purest.

Either you, a sibling or someone you knew suited up every Saturday morning or afternoon to take the hill, ride the pine or pull the dandelions out in lonesome right field.

Each league had the three-inning player who one day would catch a fly ball or get a hit and the rest of the team would celebrate as if they just won their league.

There was also the stud player.

He did it all: pitcher, shortstop and everything in between. He was the one everyone thought was going to be the next big thing, but never quite panned out.

Then there are players like Kalen Pimentel of Vista, Calif.

In one weekend, he completed what most players only dream of.

Not only did he strike out every batter he faced in one game, which had not been done since 1979, the next day, he broke a 3-3 tie with a grand slam.

Not only are analysts breaking down each move they make while coaches scout out every weakness, but they also have to deal with mom and dad, who are sitting in the stands yelling slurs at the umpire, supposedly to help motivate their son to play better.

Through it all, the Little League World Series keeps a sense of purity, unlike its professional counterparts.

After all, you will not see these kids in front of a congressional hearing, but some of them will make it to Washington D.C. to visit the White House and the President, whether they win the championship or not.

Starting quarterback position up for grabs

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Allen Webb or Dylan Meier? Meier or Webb?

That was the question many K-State fans asked at the beginning of last year's football season and during the year. The same can be expected this season.

With the season opener against Florida International on Sept. 3, the quarterback carousel has continued to go round and round, but Coach Bill Snyder said the team will have a starter and backup set by kickoff.

"The intent will be to have a No. 1 guy, and a No. 2 guy who plays when he's needed," Snyder said. "There is no intent at this time to use two guys and utilize one guy one way and the other guy another way."

Last year, during an injury-riddled season, Meier finished with nearly a 60-percent completion percentage and a quarterback efficiency rating of 121.5.

Similarly, Webb completed 52 percent of his passes, but had 126 fewer attempts then Meier. Webb was also the second leading rusher on the team, finishing with 418 yards, 147 came against Nebraska when he rushed for four touchdowns as the starter for an injured Meier.

Snyder said Webb and Meier, despite the statistics, have comparable capabilities when it comes to running the Wildcat offense.

"I think most people see the two being (different) in the way they do things, but I don't see it that way," he said. "I think they are very similar in the things that they do. They're not clones, but they are somewhat similar."

While Meier nursed a shoulder injury throughout the spring, Webb was elevated to No. 1 on the depth chart, and took most of the reps during practice along with redshirt freshman Allan Evridge.

Webb said the increased repetitions he received in the spring benefited his game.

"I'm a smarter quarterback, a more confident quarterback because I have more knowledge of this offense," Webb said. "Leadership, I believe, has gone up. I think I've become more accurate as a thrower also, but still have some improvement

YTH | Volunteer coaches needed for fall sports

The Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department is currently seeking volunteers interested in coaching a youth sports team this fall.

Leagues offered include soccer (grades 1-8), flag football (3-8) and volleyball (4-6).

Practices begin the week of Sept. 5, with games starting the week of Sept. 18 and running through Oct. 30.

Volunteers must be able to commit four to six hours per week for practices and games, with schedules determined by each coach.

Those interested should contact Mike Buchanon or Adam Dolezal at (785) 587-2757.

CFB | Missouri football player died from meningitis

COLUMBIA, Mo. — A University of Missouri football player who collapsed following a workout last month died of viral meningitis, a family attorney said Tuesday.

Boone County Medical Examiner Valerie Rao told the family of Aaron O'Neal and then the Tiger football team about her findings Monday, said St. Louis attorney Bob Blitz.

O'Neal, 6-foot-3 and 220 pounds, started to struggle during conditioning drills about 45 minutes into the July 12 session, during which players wore shorts, T-shirts and football cleats but no helmets or pads.

The backup middle linebacker, 19, slumped to the ground after the final drill and was helped off the field by a teammate. He was pronounced dead at University Hospital at 4:05 p.m., or just over 90 minutes after the workout ended.

CYC | French newspaper reports Armstrong took EPO

PARIS — A French newspaper says Lance Armstrong used the performance-enhancing drug EPO to help win his first Tour de France in 1999, a report Armstrong vehemently denied.

L'Equipe devoted four pages to its allegations, with a Tuesday front-page headline "The Armstrong Lie." The paper said signs of EPO use showed up in Armstrong's urine six times during the '99 race.

Armstrong

However, the Tour de France's director said Tuesday that L'Equipe's report seemed "very complete, very professional, very meticulous" and it "appears credible."

Jean-Marie Leblanc said any disciplinary action appeared unlikely, based on the L'Equipe account.

NFL | Pentagon to review Tillman investigation

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon's inspector general is reviewing the Army's probe into the friendly fire death of former professional football player Pat Tillman, a spokesman said. Tillman's parents welcomed the decision.

Tillman

"The other investigations were frauds," Tillman's father, Patrick Tillman, told the San Francisco Chronicle.

In response to an inquiry from the newspaper, the Pentagon confirmed that the Army had requested the investigation be reviewed.

Pentagon inspector general Gary Comerford did not provide further detail, but said elements of the military frequently seek such reviews.

NFL | Herrion's family had history of heart ailments

San Francisco's Thomas Herrion, who died early Sunday after collapsing in the locker room following a preseason game, had a family history of heart ailments.

Herrion

According to The New York Times, Herrion's father died at age 52 last year from a stroke, which was complicated by diabetes. His mother has had high blood pressure and hypertension, the paper said.

Love Savior, who at 32 is Herrion's oldest brother, said he was told Herrion's autopsy showed "just regular things," according to The Times.

Local shops see increase in customers as school begins

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Thousands of K-State students returned to Manhattan this month to begin the fall semester, and Aggieville business owners are happy to see them.

After a quiet summer, many of the entertainment district's shops and restaurants look forward to a dramatic change in sales driven by returning college students.

Cunnick said while her store does have a regular customer base of locals, sales are significantly better while classes are in session.

Adrienne Ralston, a designer at Thread on 12th Street, also said she has observed an increase in customers.

"It has really picked up this past week," Ralston said.

"The more people in town, the more t-shirt orders and good ideas we have coming in here."

Ally Enderby, assistant manager of Kite's Bar and Grill, said the bar saw a significant increase in customers.

"We had a good summer, but students coming back definitely makes a difference," she said.

Even after students have settled into their new schedules and routines, campus organizations and sports teams often continue to create a demand for certain products or services well into the semester.

Talon Hutchens, screenprints manager at Ballard's Sporting Goods on Moro Street, said while business had picked up over the past two weeks, demand for screen-printing services would increase after classes were underway.

"Rec leagues and intramural teams will come in and order shirts, probably sometime next month," Hutchens said.

Shops and restaurants often have sales or special events to encourage students to visit.

Kite's is throwing a beach bash on Aug. 24 to welcome back students.

Enderby said the bash will include beach decorations and a costume contest for best beach wear.

Many local businesses, including SOS Music, are offering discounts in a coupon book, available at Varney's locations on North Manhattan Avenue and inside the K-State Student Union.

Novelty buttons adorn the counter at Threads in Aggieville. Threads sells shirts, hoodies, skirts, underwear, tank tops and dog shirts that can be decorated with an array of designs.

Cunnick said the best part of classes resuming for Aggieville businesses is the prospect of new customers.

"I love it when a new student comes and discovers our store," she said.

"I like talking with them, finding out their tastes in music, and what they're listening to back at home."

Collaborating artists deliver enjoyable albums

"Get behind me Satan"

The White Stripes, composed of Meg and Jack White, come off of its latest album, "Elephant," released in 2003.

"Get Behind Me Satan" finds The White Stripes moving away from its patented guitar/drum blues-rock revival formula to a more varied sound. "Satan" still features Jack's squealing guitar, but most of the songs are formed from piano and marimba hooks.

Opener, "Blue Orchid," sounds like nothing else on the album. It builds from drums into a killer guitar hook and Jack's accusatory falsetto. Jack chides an ex-lover for his broken heart. He uses the metaphor of the orchid wonderfully: "You took a white orchid and turned it blue!"

Courtesy art

Most of the songs on the album deal with women that were loved, lost and lusted after.

"The Nurse" is a song based around shakers and a marimba hook.

Throughout the track, there are bursts of Meg's drums and squeals of Jack's guitar that sound as if things are going to explode, but The Stripes coolly keep the song tense and tethered.

"Take, Take, Take" has Jack fantasizing about 40's and 50's actress and sex symbol, Rita Hayworth.

It pays homage to his fascination with her as well as reproaching those who place too much of their lives on worshiping the famous.

"Little Ghost" is a rollicking Appalachian-folk flavored song that is both hilarious and melancholy. "Little Ghost/Can you scare me up a little bit of love/I'm the only one who sees you/And I can't do much to please you/But it's not yet time to meet the Lord above," Jack cries over a quickly strummed guitar and Meg's steady beats. It is one of the best songs on the album.

At its best, "Get Behind Me Satan" feels just like sitting on the front porch on a hot July day with Jack's guitar and croon to comfort you (with a piano, marimba and Meg's drum set, of course). Though "Satan" is a wildly varied transitory album, after a few listens it turns into one of The White Stripes' most enjoyable albums.

"Superwolf"

Album review by Mark Sibilla

Will Oldham, as his alter ego Bonnie "Prince" Billy, and Matt Sweeney (credited with 'words' and 'music,' respectively) have collaborated together and released "Superwolf" earlier this year.

"Superwolf" is full of the usual lyrical Bonnie-isms: gallows-humor songs about death, love, and body parts.

The album opens with "My Home is the Sea." Oldham's first words are darkly sardonic: "I have often said/That I would like to be dead . . .in a shark's mouth." Sweeney's guitar work sounds like a lost Grateful Dead track complete with mind bending guitar solos.

The first three songs on the album are excellent primers for what to expect. "Beast for Thee" shows Oldham's self-deprecating humor. Sweeney's guitar work and harmonizing vocals gel impeccably with Oldham's quirky vocals.

Oldham and Sweeney save the best for last. "Blood Embrace" has Sweeney plucking a truly menacing guitar hook as Oldham tells his lover he would leave her rather than fight her lover for fidelity. The song ends with a film sample that only increases the tension of the song and is truly chilling.

"Superwolf" is the definition of a grower – an album that will take multiple listens in order to realize its full potential. But that is in no way a disclaimer; "Superwolf" is an album filled with wonderfully dark lyrics, subdued singing, and great instrumentation.

Once its nuances are unlocked, "Superwolf" becomes a truly idiosyncratic masterpiece, the type of album that is perfect for long, lonely nights spent drinking.

The uniting of Will Oldham and Matt Sweeney has created a delightful album that gives one hope for future collaborations between the two.

Hale exhibit features Western book publishers

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students who venture to the top floor of Hale Library this month will get a rare treat.

For the first time, K-State is housing the 63rd annual Western Books Exhibition.

"We've never had the exhibit before," Roger Adams, rare books collector for K-State Libraries, said. "It's a chance to see some of the best books by Western publishers."

The exhibit features 32 books, all printed by Western publishers. It is on display and open to the public on the fifth floor of Hale. Some of the books are from mainstream publishers, while others are from private presses.

"These (private publishers) are individuals who still set type one letter at a time," Adams said.

The exhibit is organized by the Rounce and Coffin Club of Los Angeles and has traveled around the country, stopping at K-State for the month of August. One of the different aspects of the display is all of the books are available for purchase from the publishers.

The exhibit has been receiving positive reviews from visitors, and luring people upstairs since the beginning of August.

"We've seen a lot of students and professors, some people who were just in the library," Adams said. "I've gotten some really good feedback on it."

Hale hosts many exhibits throughout the year and has been the temporary home to displays by the Smithsonian Institute and the National Library of Medicine. Books owned by K-State Libraries are also commonly shown.

"We try to have something in the exhibit cases at all time," Lori Goetsch, dean of Hale, said. "People really seem to like to come up and look at what we have on exhibit."

In September, Hale will feature a display on Clementine Taddleford, an internationally known food writer. The display marks the opening of her papers to the public.

Internet service providers give students many options

By Jonas Hogg
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Company	Pro Setup Fee	Monthly Cost	Equipment costs
Cox Communications	$99.95	$39.95-$54.95	$15/month rent cable
SBC Yahoo!	$200.00	$14.95-$59.99	$99 DSL
KansasNet	$59 in some areas	$26.95-$209.95	$59 DSL
SysMatrix.net	None	$6.95	No dial-up
KansasNet Wireless	$198	$35-$99	$99 Wireless

Students who live off-campus looking to wire in this semester are faced with many options. With several Internet service providers (ISPs) providing subscriptions trying to decide between dial-up, broadband, DSL, cable, wired or wireless connections can be a difficult task.

Before deciding on which particular service to subscribe to it is important to understand the capabilities of each, what one can use it for, and, important for many, how much it will cost.

Dial-up Internet, the slowest option, is offered by many providers both local and national. For the frugal web-surfer, dial-up is the most affordable option, with seven dollars a month and no extra equipment to rent or buy, providing you already own a modem.

However, a dial-up modem will tie up the phone line, resulting in missed calls and angry roommates. Surfing the Internet will still work, but uploading a picture heavy Powerpoint presentation complete with music and a five-minute movie will be a several hour ordeal.

If the Internet will be used for heavy graphic use, gaming, or hosting it will probably be necessary to upgrade to a broadband connection. The million dollar question now is- cable or DSL.

DSL – or Digital Subscriber Line service – is mostly available through two providers locally. KansasNet competes with Yahoo!SBC, and a few other national providers like AOL and Earthlink for local business.

Prices depend on the desired connection speed; with year-long contracts starting at $14.95 per month.

Although the monthly price can be competitive with dial-up, using DSL requires equipment that can cost over $100, and installation fees can go up to $200.

Through DSL, though, the phone line remains free and clear. In addition you can connect multiple users to the Internet at one time.

The other high speed option is cable Internet. While slightly faster than DSL there is a drawback; cable bandwidth is shared with other subscribers. Essentially, for the average E-mail checker, cable will work fine.

According to Cnet.com, some cable providers have even started putting limits on the amount of data you can download, and charging extra if you exceed your limit.

The only game in town for cable Internet is Cox Communications. Monthly subscription fees start at $39.95, but that's only if a cable or digital telephone service has been purchased as well. Professional installation is $99.95 and there is an option to rent a cable modem as opposed to buying.

For those who despise having cables underfoot KansasNet offers a completely wireless solution.

Rather than using a phone or cable line it uses an antenna tower to send and receive the signal. Prices start at $35 dollars a month and installation is $99.

Wireless Internet is not available in all areas though, and servers or anything that would create a lot of inbound traffic to a computer is not allowed.

"Broadband is usually the way to go for most students," Nathan Beemer, telecommunications employee, said.

"DSL is definitely important for my major," Catie Carpenter, sophomore in interior design said, "especially because of all the graphics we deal with and we have to download things off of the Internet."

Being able to play games, talk on the phone, send an Instant Message, and download the latest module from K-State online have become almost mundane task for some.

"It's pretty integrated into my lifestyle," Chris Young, senior in architecture, said.

Director of the Information Technology Assistance Center, Rebecca Gould, said many students will be able to get by with dial-up and many of the services offered by K-State such as Webmail and K-State Online will work well with either.

But, encouraged students to go to www.ksu.edu/infotech and www.ksu.edu/infotech/welcome for more information.

K-State Recycles!

Since mid 1987, K-State Recycling has collected and diverted from the waste stream almost five million pounds of materials, four million, nine hundred and ninety thousand, seven hundred and seventy three pounds to be precise. That's over two thousand, four hundred, and ninety five tons. But we need to do more.

K-State Facilities Recycling celebrated Earth Week 2005 by kicking off the desk-side recycling program in the Durland/Rathbone/Fiedler engineering complex. We have since added Throckmorton to the program, and are currently working on getting Edwards, Ackert and Chalmers on board as well. We have already collected and diverted from the waste stream over two tons of paper through our desk-side recycling program.

K-State Facilities Desk-Side Recycling Program

WHAT WE PLAN TO DO:
Facilities Recycling wants to provide a convenient, cost effective way to recycle office solid waste materials. We will initially collect three products: office mix paper, newsprint, and magazines.

WHO WILL BE INVOLVED?
We will need the help of office occupants and custodial specialists, cooperating for success.

HOW WE WILL DO IT:
We will place a three compartment recycling container in each office. This is where we will need the help of office personnel to sort the three types of paper into the three compartment containers. The existing trash can is still for trash, and the three compartment recycling container will be filled with office mix; bond paper, envelopes, copy paper, computer paper, etc. in the large center container, newspapers in one saddle container, and magazines in the other. (or in any configuration you wish) Then we will need the help of custodial personnel to empty the containers for transport to an appropriate recycling facility. The custodial specialist in your area will coordinate with the recycling personnel to pick up one type of recyclable paper one day, another the next, trash the next, in whatever order and frequency is needed to maintain an orderly flow of material out of the building. Trash will still be emptied daily from class rooms and rest rooms.

WHAT CAN YOU DO TO HELP?
Any time you need to discard a piece of paper, look and see if it can be recycled. If so, then place it in the appropriate compartment in the recycling container. Please continue to take your home recycling directly to a recycling facility such as Howie's Recycling Center. This program is designed to reduce the solid waste that we currently haul to the Riley County Transfer Station.

WHAT IF SOMETHING GOES WRONG?
If you have questions about recycling or the service we provide, please call 532-6446, or contact your building recycling coordinator. You are also encouraged to recycle white bond paper, office mix paper, computer paper, shredded paper, cardboard, newspaper, magazines, telephone books, plastic bottles, aluminum cans, wooden pallets, computers and other electronic equipment (with appropriate signed DA-110s) at campus collection sites or by calling 532-6446 for special pickups. You may also visit our website at: http://www.ksu.edu/facilities/recycling/.

Zoo shares plans for new building

Tentative budget calls for $650,000

By Matt Peterworth
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Plans are underway for a new educational building in Sunset Zoological Park.

Sunset Zoo employees and the Manhattan community met Tuesday to discuss the development of a new educational building of the zoo, which will serve as a new entrance to the zoo and it will also host a gift shop.

"The idea for a new building has been need driven," Scott Shoemaker, director of Sunset Zoo, said.

He said the education department has been turning people away from programs the zoo offers, which is why Sunset Zoo is in need of bigger and better facilities.

Tuesday, architects from WDM Design of Wichita met with the Sunset Zoo staff and the Friends of the Sunset Zoo Board and Trust to brainstorm what needs to be in the new building. There was also a meeting open to the public where the architects summarized the ideas from the brainstorming and let those in attendance offer feedback.

Craig Rhodes, principal architect for WDM Design, said the new building would be designed with "practical ecology" in mind and sustainable design where affordable.

An example Rhodes gave was using recycled and recyclable materials.

WDM Design is now going to develop a document with the needs of the building prioritized. The tentative budget is $650,000, with $400,000 coming from a potential bond initiative through the city of Manhattan and the rest through fundraising by the zoo.

This document will then be taken to the City Commission and the Parks and Recreation Advisory Board in October for approval. If it is approved, then WDM Design can start on the final project drawings. Once the drawings are finished, they go back to the City Commission for approval, who then issues a bond, which would probably go through next summer.

Terry DeWeese, director of Manhattan Parks and Recreation, said once all of this happens, construction can start in 2007 with the new building potentially being finished by the end of 2007 or beginning of 2008.

Another public meeting is scheduled for tonight from 6 to 7 p.m. at the Senior Center, 412 Leavenworth.

Research will be lead by Mohammad Hosni, department head and professor of mechanical and nuclear engineering, and Byron Jones, director of the College of Engineering Experiment Station and professor of mechanical and nuclear engineering.

Hosni said the center also will research how everyday air quality and flow affects passengers.

"Right now we are looking at if someone would sneeze, would it move forward, backward or to the side and not contaminate many people," Hosni said.

Rep. Sydney Carlin, D-Manhattan, said although it may not be at the top of someone's mind, air quality in airplanes is highly significant.

"When you come home from traveling and you have a cold, you might think 'I wasn't around anybody sick,' but then you would realize 'Hmmm, I was on that airplane,'" Carlin said.

Jon Jordan, Federal Air Surgeon with the FAA, said air travel is something most people take for granted.

"We take for granted that it will be comfortable, efficient and certainly that it will be safe," Jordan said.

APARTMENT | Students must challenge unfair tenant fees, deposits

Housing and Credit Counseling Inc. is a free service for tenants and landlords that answers questions dealing with the Kansas Residential Landlord and Tenant Act.

Debbie Ubanks, a counselor at HCCI, said she advises landlords that charging nonrefundable fees and monthly pet charges is unreasonable. According to HCCI's handbook, "the legality of these is questionable primarily because of interpretations of the law regarding security deposits."

"All landlords can legally charge is rent," Ubanks said. "The pet is not the tenant, and if they don't pay the pet rent, are they gonna kick the pet out?"

K-State's Legal Services for Students attorney Sarah Barr said the only way to find out if these fees are allowed is for a student to challenge these fees in court.

As a student's attorney, she represents students on numerous issues in court, but said until it is challenged, it is unlikely the fees will stop.

"It is going to be, however, the judge that interprets what they are doing," Barr said.

"Whether the judge says it is a deposit or whether the judge will say it's not a deposit, because you have no chance of getting it back," Barr said.

For more information

1. Confront your landlord in a peaceful manner
2. Get a copy of the statute from Sarah Barr's office in the Union for your landlord
3. Mail your landlord a copy of the statute
4. Seek help from Sarah Barr at 532-6541

QUARTERBACKS

Webb has the edge to start the season as No. 1 on the depth chart

to make there."

Because of Webb's improvement, he remains in the No. 1 spot and will likely be the starter heading into the season.

Offensive coordinator and quarterbacks coach Del Miller said Webb is more knowledgeable of the system than he was a year ago, and by taking most of the snaps during spring practice, Webb has become a more mature quarterback.

"What we'd expect out of Allen Webb, or whether it be Dylan Meier or if it is Allan Evridge, any of those guys, we expect them to go out and play winning football for us, it's my job to get them to that point," Miller said. "I think Allen has got a little bit of an edge right now, just simply because he went through spring ball. How much that advantage holds up, we'll have to see."

However, Miller did not completely shut the door on Meier or Evridge taking the reigns at quarterback.

"It depends on when we get the pads on, how much Dylan progresses and how Allen progresses," Miller said. "Don't forget about that third one stepping in there. Evridge is a talented young man who is very athletic."

Woman faces 2 counts of homicide

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Randolph woman surrendered Monday in connection with a 2003 traffic accident that killed a K-State student and another man, the Manhattan Mercury reported Tuesday.

Victoria Jean Desjardins, 39, faces two counts of vehicular homicide and two felony counts of aggravated battery in connection with the accident. A warrant for her arrest was issued Aug. 16 by the Riley County Police Department.

According to a police report, the Riley County Police Department arrested Desjardins at 1:45 p.m. Monday. She was released on $2,500 bail.

"I'm just happy that the process is moving along," said Donna Logback of Manhattan, who was injured in the accident. "I'm just happy that we're going on to the next step."

Riley County Attorney Barry Wilkerson, who will prosecute the case, said Desjardins is the only person charged in relation to the accident, and expected the trial to begin in five to six months at the soonest. Her first court appearance will be Sept. 7 at 10 a.m. at the Riley County Courthouse.

On Nov. 14, 2003, Kevin Armstrong, then a junior in economics, and Jeffrey Tryon of Waterville died in a three-car accident on U.S. Highway 77 near Randolph. Armstrong was going to Lincoln, Neb. to watch a game between K-State and Nebraska with three other students, Eric Lovig, Mollie Delph and Evan Riordan, who was driving.

Part-time job fair opens today

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students looking for jobs this semester or just wanting to see what kinds of jobs are available in Manhattan will be able to browse 51 local businesses today.

Career and Employment Services will put on its annual Part-Time Opportunities Fair in hopes of connecting students with potential employers.

Career and Employment Services can help students find part-time jobs on campus and in the community

"If they are looking for a part-time job or a volunteer opportunity, it's a great one-stop shopping opportunity for them," Kerri Day Keller, CES director, said.

The fair is an opportunity for students to talk with local businesses and nonprofit organizations that are looking for either employees or volunteers, Jennifer Brantley, assistant director of experiential learning, said.

"Students should also attend the fair

A NEW VISION FOR JARDINE

The end of an era as Jardine complex makes preparations for demolition

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After housing K-State students for almost 50 years, buildings in the Jardine Apartment Complex will be demolished next month.

Buildings A, B and C will be torn down Sept. 6 as part of the $102 million Jardine Redevelopment Project, said Skyler Harper, assistant director of the Department of Housing and Dining Services facilities management.

The Jardine Redevelopment Project will be completed in two phases over the next 10 years.

Phase one includes the demolition of Jardine buildings A, B and C to make way for the construction of new buildings that will open in fall 2007.

Phase two will begin after the completion of phase one, and Jardine buildings H, J, K, T, S, V and Y will be demolished to make way for more new buildings scheduled to open in fall 2010.

Remodeling of the remaining Jardine buildings will begin this year and continue until 2015.

Phases one and two will offer 1,470 one-, two- and three-bedroom apartments in styles such as studios, lofts and townhouses.

Harper said the combination of new and renovated buildings allows for different price levels.

"It gives us two levels of rental rates so we can have options for families and grad students who may not have as much income," he said.

By the time construction and remodeling is complete in 2015, the number of residents housed in the complex will nearly double – from about 1,000 in 2004 to about 2,000.

Advantage Card offers discounts to more than 30 businesses

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Frequent visitors to Aggieville, and others, now have more incentive to shop there.

Aggieville Advantage Cards are for sale.

Cheryl Sieben, director of the Aggieville Business Association, said the cards are fundraisers for area organizations.

Money from the cards goes to K-State Athletics, Lady Deuces Basketball, Little Apple Soccer Club, Manhattan Arts Center, Manhattan Elementary Schools, Manhattan Middle Schools, Manhattan High School, Manhattan Rowing Association and the Aggieville Business Association's Christmas light fund.

Rick Colmenero, assistant manager of Chipotle, said he has noticed a change in business because of the card.

"You can tell there's more flow," he said. "The numbers coming through the door have been higher. More people are actually knowing we are here."

However, not all participating businesses are experiencing a positive change since the card was introduced.

How to get an Aggieville Advantage Card

When: Can be purchased anytime. Expiration date is April 1, 2006

Where: 1. Aggieville Business Association
1125 Laramie St., Suite C
2. Digital Shelf 706 N. 11th St.

How much: $7.50

Few people have used the discount card at Acme Gift, assistant manager Jenny Yankey said.

"This is probably due to not a lot of people knowing about it," Yankey said.

Erin Herbert, junior in family studies, said she would consider buying a card because she frequently visits Bluestem Bistro.

"I think the cards are a good idea as long as students go to Aggieville often and shop there," Herbert said.

Colmenero recommended the card to new students especially.

"They don't know where anything is and this card will help them get acquainted with Aggieville," he said.

Expo showcases free, fun student activities

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Union Program Council and the Office of Student Activities and Services will kick off the semester today with the sixth annual Union Expo and Activities Carnival.

Along with several free events – local bands, movie showings, a balloon artist, Body First massages and airbrush tattoos – the carnival will include booths and tables for 175 student organizations.

"It's a chance for freshmen especially, but really any student, to come and browse what is available and hopefully find some way of getting involved this year," Bill Harlan, assistant coordinator of student activities, said.

The student groups will be set up in the K-State Student Union and outside in the Bosco Student Plaza and will be recruiting new members for the semester.

"It's a rare opportunity to meet so many student organizations in such a short amount of time and find out what they are all about," Harlan said.

This year's Expo is called K-State Paradise, and features a tropical theme. There will be drawings for strapless sandals, UPC gifts and 20 collapsible beach chairs.

"If for no other reason, students should come to the carnival because there are going to be a lot of fun things to do and it's all free," Kelly Brannin, sophomore in kinesiology and Expo co-chair, said.

Along with the fun and games, Austin Meek, the 2004 K-State Idol winner and a junior in mass communications, will perform at 6:15 p.m. and local band EWB will play at 7:45 p.m. in the Bosco Student Plaza. At 9 p.m. the movie "Sahara" will be showing in the Bosco Student Plaza, with free ice cream provided by Campus Crusade for Christ.

Ben Hopper, UPC program adviser, said students are encouraged to attend, whether they are returning students or new to K-State.

"It's a great way to kick off the year and it helps get students excited about the semester," he said.

Part-time job opportunities available

By Laura Noll
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Searching for a job can often seem like a job itself, especially once the majority of open positions have been filled.

Luckily, local students still have some time to catch those final openings among campus and community businesses.

"Opportunities are still available," said Kerri Day Keller, director of Career and Employment Services.

While openings are becoming more scarce each day, Keller encourages students to be proactive in finding employment.

Sam Harris, freshman in mechanical engineering, said he is searching for an on-campus job because it would be convenient to walk to and from work and his dorm.

Keller said college departments "realize academics are first priority and are flexible when working with students."

While community jobs are sometimes less flexible than campus jobs, working off campus can "provide students with great work experience," Keller said.

Student financial aid, loan funding still plentiful

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There's $150 million waiting for K-State students to claim.

And today is not too late to make a run for this money.

Despite popular belief, there are still quite a few options for students, Larry Moeder, director of Student Financial Assistance, said.

"Money from most of the campus programs (is) gone, given to students who applied and met our March 1 deadline," he said. "Grant, loan and campus employment is opened year round."

The process for applying for university aid is quite simple, Moeder said.

"It is one application that they have to fill out, and it's called the Free Application for Federal Student Aid, commonly known as the FAFSA."

"That application at this point would allow students to apply for the Federal Pell Grant, Stafford Loans and parent loans," he said.

According to the financial aid Web site, seven out of 10 students are awarded financial aid, with $6.5 million in scholarships, and the rest of the $150 million fund is in grants or loans.

University grants range from $400 to $4,000, with student loans reaching as high as $5,000 at a low interest rate.

For other type of loans, Judy Bonjour, Kansas State Bank assistant vice-president, said their bank offers loans for students, both educational and personal. Yet, at this point in the year, students are limited to mostly personal loans because of financial aid deadlines.

"Kids can go to any bank and apply for personal loans," Bonjour said. "However, those payments start immediately."

TO THE POINT

Jardine redesign good alternative for Manhattan

The Jardine Apartment Complex was built in the 1950s, just as the Cold War was beginning to heat up.

The first phase of a 10-year redevelopment includes the destruction of three buildings beginning next month, and when the final project is complete, Jardine will house about 1,000 additional students.

It comes at no better time, too.

With an influx of soldiers expected at Fort Riley and students already flooding into houses and apartment complexes across town, Manhattan housing is becoming scarce.

A renovated Jardine Apartment Complex will provide necessary on-campus housing, which will appease community members who grow frustrated by college students living next door, while creating a more visually appealing backdrop for prospective students.

It's about time K-State addressed its on-campus housing problems.

After all, the Cold War has been over for nearly 20 years.

College Fever

Freshmen should be wary of going wild

GRANT REICHERT

Welcome to college, home of the mascot!

I am aware of the difficulties facing incoming freshmen; therefore, I will be your metaphorical Sacagawea, a helpful guide to what you need to know to succeed. Sure college seems daunting now, but with my help, before you know it, you'll catch college fever – also known as meningitis.

My first piece of advice: you might want to get a shot two weeks ago.

Meningitis can be pretty serious stuff. If you get it, the usual method of treatment is stop, drop and be put in a hole.

Besides that, there's not much you can do about it. Well, I guess you could seek medical treatment, but c'mon, what's modern medicine got on the drop-and-roll method? Dropping without rolling? Some sort of standing roll? It boggles the meningitis-addled mind to even think about it.

But don't worry, there's more to college than meningitis. For example, tuberculosis, gangrene, the Black Wailing Death and Derby Dining Center. And there's the free stuff.

In college, you've got to learn to pick up all the freebies you can. For example, I've had eight free pregnancy exams so far; totally confidential, same day results – who can argue with that?

Besides being free, there's also always the hope I'll be blessed with a little blessed blessing of blessedness (bless his/her blessed little heart). Last time I tested I got a false-positive, which sent me on a roller coaster of emotion: elation, anger, frustration, blessedness, pity, anguish, I think I lost my hat.

It did seem weird I got even a false-positive, but of course there was a logical explanation – turns out, as often happens, I had just ingested a whole baby the night before.

Which brings me to my next point: now that you're in college, it's time you learned how babies are really made. At first, I naively believed that a stork was involved. But, thankfully, this sordid tale of bestiality turned out to be an urban legend; actually, the baby-makin' process is virtually stork-free.

Okay, quick recap: meningitis bad, random baby infestations inevitable but curable... am I missing anything?

Oh, yes, the total freedom thing. You're free now. Rebel, go nuts, whatever. Personally, I totally went wild when I got down here. I became a heavy drinker. All my childhood I had to drink skim milk – never again. Now it's 150 percent whole milk plasma, stirred with a stick of butter, garnished with fresh cow's nipple.

Go wild. Don't worry about the repercussions; most of you freshman will die in the first cold snap anyways. Oh, sure, now you come to class all prim and proper with the "Look-at-me-I-don't-reek-of-industrial-waste-products-and-Wal-Mart-cologne" – but just you wait.

Before long you'll be wearing a pair of soiled swimming trunks to class, newspapers wrapped haphazardly around your swollen feet, clutching a glass of lumpy milk in your arthritic claw of a hand in which to store your scurvy-ridden lost teeth, abdomen distended with an advanced baby infection.

Oh, and did I mention Frisbee golf? There's that, too.

Grant is a junior in political science. Please send your comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

Required books list should be online

ZACHARY T. ECKELS

With smaller book stores such as Claflin Books & Copies and endless options on the Internet, it is hard to call Varney's Book Store a monopoly when it comes to buying textbooks.

But when you try to buy books elsewhere, you quickly find that it is as close as a business can get to one.

After getting frustrated with having to go to Varney's, or their accomplice, the K-State Student Union Bookstore, I looked up the online bookstores from all six state universities listed by the Kansas Board of Regents. As I expected, K-State was the only one that does not let you look up your class and find out which books you need.

Giving Varney's a second chance, I looked on their Web site and was nearly proven wrong. At www.varneys.com, you are able to look up the books you need, just like other colleges allow – almost. Upon trying out this feature, I found the odds of just one of your classes being listed on the site are very slim.

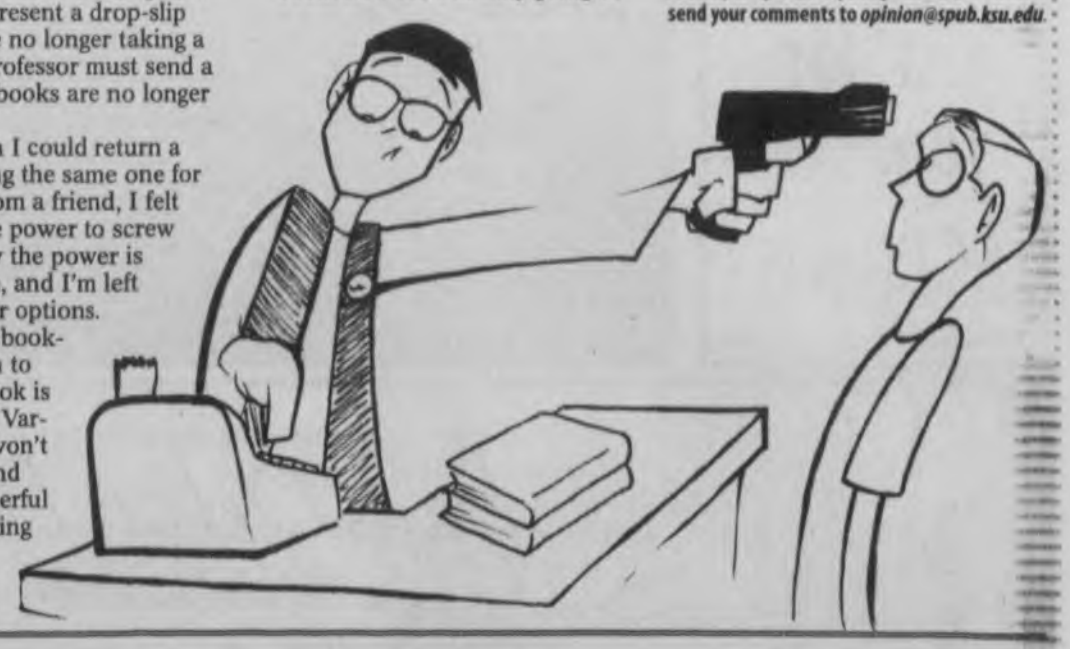
With the Web pages already up, just entering the rest of the information couldn't be that hard. Plus, unless the price difference is more than $10, I'll most likely be lazy and get the book while I'm at the book store.

To make matters worse though, not only do you have to go to Varney's to find out which books are needed for your class beforehand, but returning them has become more difficult this year.

Instead of getting your books while you are there and returning the ones you find for a better price, you now must present a drop-slip to prove you are no longer taking a course, or the professor must send a note saying the books are no longer necessary.

At least when I could return a book after buying the same one for half the price from a friend, I felt like I had a little power to screw the system. Now the power is completely gone, and I'm left looking for other options.

Since a third bookstore big enough to sell every textbook is improbable and Varney's probably won't change their mind about this wonderful new policy, posting a list on the K-State Web site of required texts is the least K-State could do for us.



At least if I know paying $90 for a textbook I rarely open isn't just another case of highway robbery, I can deal with it.

To be fair, not all of Varney's prices turn out to be overzealous. A few of my books this year were actually cheaper to buy there, after figuring out shipping costs. My real problem is that I have to take two trips there in order to figure that out.

From now on, I'm only going to take one trip to the book store. Whether this means I have predetermined knowledge of what the book should cost, or just to look the books up and order them online, regardless of price, is up to K-State.

Even if this results in the unlikely scenario of spending more money to order textbooks, at least I'll probably still save a little money in the end with the price of gas these days.

CAMPUS FOURUM | 395-4444 -or- Fourum@spub.ksu.edu

The Campus Fourum is the Collegian's anonymous call-in system. The Fourum is edited to eliminate vulgar, racist, obscene and libelous comments. The comments are not the opinion of the Collegian nor are they endorsed by the editorial Staff.

Hey Kody, good job on shedding some insights about Gitmo. I hope the BTK killer gets to be the next distinguished guest over there. What says you?

Jaci, K-State has already suffered alcohol-related tragedies. Last night I went home with an ugly guy.

Hey Childress: What average college student could afford to lose $36 a month and NOT complain? And who are you to talk about sparing livers?

I love cake.

Giggity, giggity, giggity.

Yeah! Thanks for giving us the same Cryptoquip crossword puzzle two days in a row. You big jerks.

I just thought I should let everyone know that Pheta Xi is spelled phe taxi. You know, I just thought I'd put that out there, you can think what you want. Bye.

I love Scotch. Scotch, scotch, scotch.

The guy that puked in the bushes that went everywhere. Yeah, he's my roommate.

Is it just me or do strip-malls seem to pop up overnight here in Manhattan.

Uh-oh, Facebook got all professional looking. I wonder how long we have before they start charging.

I stayed up 'til 2 a.m. waiting for the online Fourum. But, I guess I got stood up.

No parking between 2 a.m. and 9 a.m. without a permit? What? What a bunch of malarkey.

If Kelsey Childress has $36 a month to just throw away she should send it to me.

Use the crosswalks, people, don't just walk wherever you damn feel like.

I'm somewhere between a one-night-stand and a long-term-relationship with the key of A flat major.

Hey, Kelsey Childress. Yeah, the article about the price, the gas prices. What's the cost of living out in California? Yeah, there's not that many people living in Kansas. So, uh, you should do a little more research instead of writing articles about quit complaining and stuff like that. Or get a Frisbee or something.

Uh...

The reason everybody's complaining so much about spending so much for gas is because the money we were going to use for gas is now spent on books.

Remember kids, it's down the street, not across the block. Might as well do something right for once in your lives.

Bernard had it coming.

Hey Kelsey Childress, will you pay for my gas?

I pooped in Varney's.

To all the K-State football players — you are not that cool.

You will bow to me.

I'm a cat. I'm a kitty cat. And I dance, dance, dance. And I dance, dance, dance.

To the guys who stole our porch furniture last week, I hope you get crabs. Really big ones.

Pets become integral members of local businesses

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Businesses in Manhattan keep pets along with the merchandise.

Romeo, a white domestic short hair who was approximately 17 years old, "left for kitty heaven on Thursday, May 19, 2005," a sign hanging by the front door of On The Wild Side, 1128 Moro St., stated.

"I bought Romeo and the store came with him," owner Julie Stutheit said.

When Romeo died from old age and probable renal failure, the store was without a cat. For customers, this wouldn't do.

"We had an influx of people wanting to give us cats," said Megan Stutheit, daughter of the store owner.

Finally, the United Parcel Service delivery man, who had land near Randolph, had a young cat who was attacked by an animal. She lost her right front leg, and disliked other cats so intensely, Megan Stutheit said, she wouldn't come out of the basement. So Diva came to live at the store.

Diva is a grey and white tabby who is three-and-a-half to four years old, as estimated by her owner. She is updated on all shots. The owners are unsure as to whether she is spayed or not.

On The Wild Side also has fish in a tank as an added attraction.

"We use the fish to distract from the cat," Megan Stutheit said, speaking of children who enter the store.

Rockstar & Rogers Clothing and Costumes, 715 N. 12th St., has two 10-week-old tabby kittens and a black and white 18-year-old cat, Lucky.

The store relocated from Poyntz Avenue to Aggieville this summer, and Lucky came from a home where she lived with two elderly people.

The kittens, however, are out and about in the store, and get carried around a lot by customers, said Rebecca Christensen, co-owner of the store. The kittens are named Emma and Eric.

Emma and Eric have found a friend in a baby who comes to work with Christensen. The baby's name is Sophie Lynn, and she and the two kittens sleep in the crib together.

"They think she's part of their posse," Christensen said.

Vet students help owners cope after pet loss

By Tessa French
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State hired a new professor to teach veterinary medicine students, but this professor doesn't have a degree in the program.

Mcarthur Hafen, Ph.D., has a master's degree in family and human development as well as a Ph.D. in marriage and family therapy. He teaches students how to help clients who are grieving the death of a pet.

"Pet loss is often misunderstood and discounted by the public," Hafen said. "For many people, the strongest bond they have is with their pets. The time of their loss can affect them greatly, as it can be devastating. We are helping them begin the healing process."

In the past five years, the Marriage and Family Counseling Program has staffed the job Hafen does now.

He described his position as teaching students how do deal with various responses to difficult situations, providing support for veterinary faculty members and discussing challenges experienced when interacting with others.

"I take small groups to the vet hospital and we problem solve different situations," Hafen said. "My job is to train and improve interpersonal skills to better handle tough situations. However, if we think a client needs professional therapy, we do not take that on ourselves, but rather refer them to a professional."

Jamie Kofoid, senior in pre-pharmacy, said she remembered when both of her animals were put to sleep. She struggled with the concept for a while, she recognized Hafen's teaching as positive when she remembered her difficult time.

"Having an understanding vet is especially good for kids who grew up with their pets like us – we considered our dog a part of the family," Kofoid said.

"Healing from pet loss can and does happen," Hafen said. "It's an honor for me to witness the healing process that begins, and then to see a client take on a relationship with a new animal is rewarding, as it shows their healing."

Hafen teaches basic principles to students, beginning with how to understand the grief process. He builds on that with practical skills such as showing empathy, resolving concerns and conflict management.

At other universities, this type of learning is featured in an actual class.

"With the trend going this direction, an elective class will more than likely be available in the future for willing students to participate in," Hafen said.

Some students, like Brett Crow, junior in animal science, would not be interested.

"It's almost a waste of time," he said.

Sarah Buttenhoff, senior in agriculture education, and Morgan Buttenhoff, sophomore in animal sciences and industry, agreed, saying they are more calloused toward loss since they have been around it all their lives. Raising and showing lambs, steers and calves, both girls have dealt with the death of animals.

But, they said it can be an advantage for those with a single pet.

Hafen said responses to this new type of learning were positive.

"As preparation for future life, they anticipate facing bad situations with owners where they disclose bad news," he said. "This can be a challenging situation to deal with, and students recognize this as a part of the job. I think they value the knowledge they gain in learning these strategies."

Cassie Benz, sophomore in animal sciences and industry, agreed. "Anything that helps a veterinarian assist their clients is a good thing," Benz said.

Tips for surviving the Rec

KENT HILDEBRAND

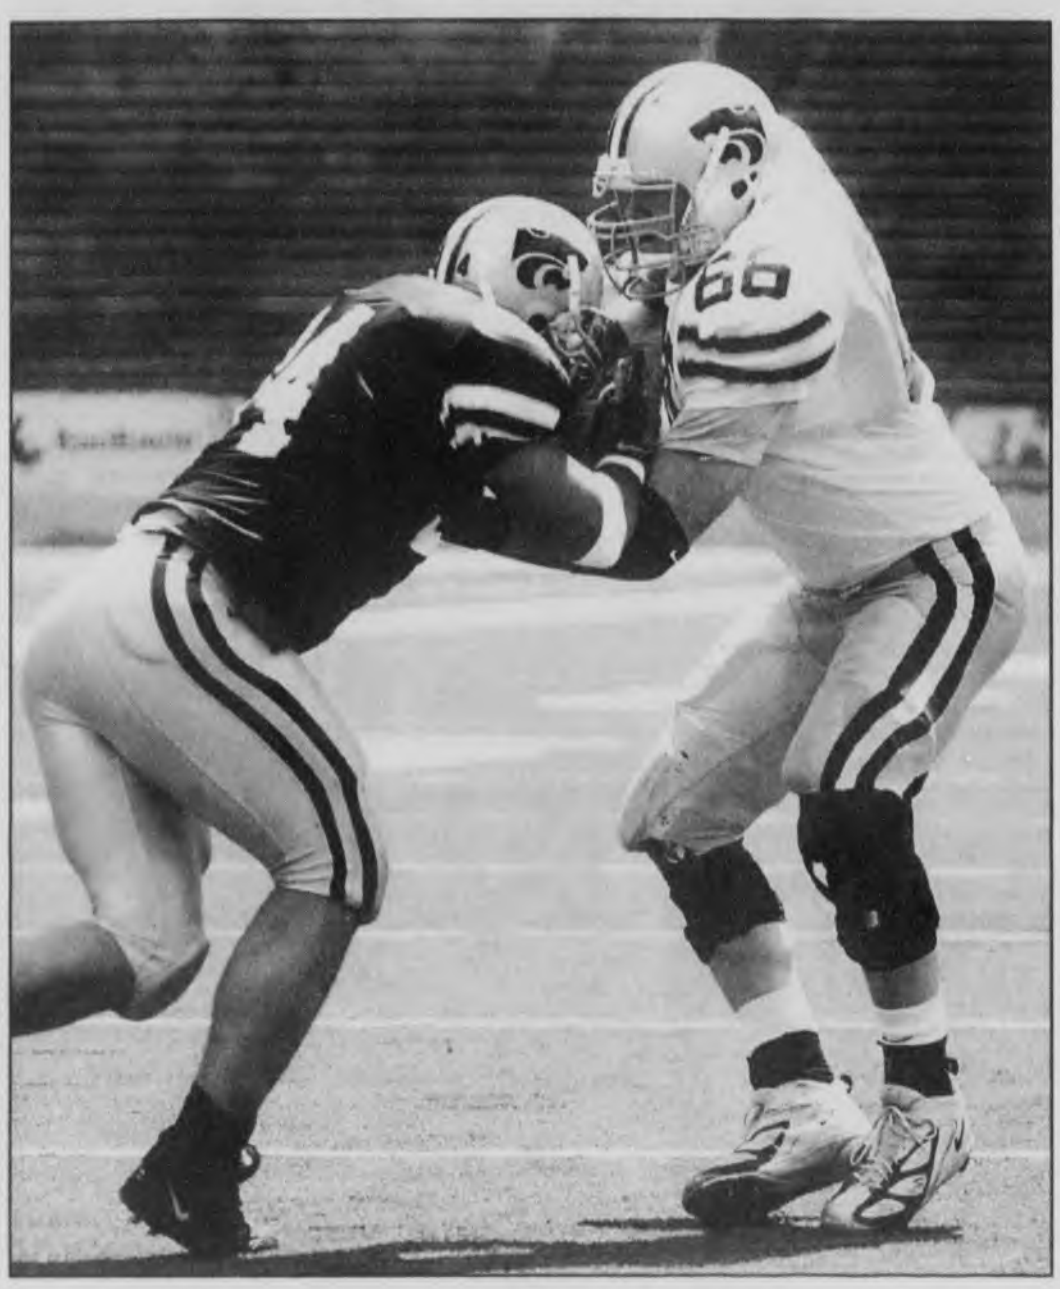
So I was at the Peters Recreation Complex the other day, pumping the iron and trying to decide whether to start with five or 10 pounds per side on the bench press, when I saw a couple of freshmen.

As freshmen go, these two were fairly easy to pick out.

One had a "Senior '05" shirt and the other had the K-State Freshman shirt. You've seen them; they're purple and say "K-State" and have a little tennis-ball green splattering on them.

They seemed to be young and in good shape, so I asked them for a spot so the old man could crank out a few more reps, but it got me thinking back to my freshman days and my first trip to the Rec Complex and how I wished I knew then what I know now.

So freshmen, or any of you guys who have been sitting on the couch playing Halo for the last couple of years, whether you want to be a "Rec Rat" or just part of the pre-Spring Break crowd, here's what you need to know.



1. Say what you want about K-State, the tuition or the parking issues, but we do have a darn nice Rec Complex. With 10,000 square feet of cardiovascular equipment and weights, 10 basketball courts and various other courts ranging from racquetball/handball to volleyball and squash, table tennis, two running tracks, a rock climbing wall, aerobics, locker rooms with saunas and a wellness resource center, it's got everything the hard- or soft-core athlete could want.
2. Bring your student ID when you come; you can't get in without it (unless you give a wink to girl in the navy polo working at the front desk).
3. If you've got a jones for hoops, the courts are great. But they're usually very crowded in winter. Unless you've got mad skills or you're on the football team, don't even think about playing on Court No. 1.
4. If you want to avoid the crowds in general, for some reason there aren't many people working out at 11 p.m. on Friday nights.
5. The aerobics classes provide a fun, energizing way to work out, and participants are predominantly female. Enough said.
6. Socially-speaking, the Rec Complex is a great place to meet people. You just never know who might be on the exercise bike next to you.
7. With that in mind, romance shouldn't be a top priority at the Rec Complex. There's probably more sweat in the air than love. But hey, if that's what gets your motor running...
8. If you're going to climb the rock wall, stop cutting your hair. And a tasteful tattoo, like a ying-yang or smiling sun, would be a good idea.
9. Some people read while they work out on the exercise equipment. If you're one of these people and you're reading this right now, I'm impressed by your ability to multi-task, but not so much by your choice in literature.
10. Did I mention the locker rooms have saunas?
11. Sometimes the volleyball nets are set up in the basketball gyms. A good thing to note before you start playing full court.
12. Wash your hands when you're done. You know those spray bottles of disinfectant and towels they have sitting around the weight room? Do you really think anybody uses those?
13. And for the ultimate workout, at the far west end, there's a big screen television, a couple of couches and a pop machine.

There you go. Thirteen semi-worthless tidbits of information, but now at least you had something to read during lecture.

Offensive line looks to improve, move on from 4-7 season

Senior right tackle and captain Jeromey Clary blocks a teammate during K-State's annual Spring Game last spring. Clary was selected as a second-team All-Big 12 Conference pick by the coaches last season and is one of three team captains this season.

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The members of K-State's offensive line made no excuses at K-State's Media Day on Aug. 6, but said they were looking forward to proving themselves during the season.

Senior right tackle Jeromey Clary said the linemen are focusing on keeping morale high, and while he doesn't consider himself a vocal leader, he instead plans to lead by example.

"He takes care of us and lets us know what we need to do," redshirt freshman Caleb Handy said. "If we need to stop doing something, he'll let us know the right way."

Clary, who was a second-team All-Big 12 pick last season, has made 26 consecutive starts. He was elected one of three captains for the 2005 season.

"In the beginning, when we first got together, he was the main leader," sophomore John Hafferty said, "and he still is."

Among skeptics, the young offensive line could pose a problem. Last season, K-State was fourth in the Big 12 on the ground and 10th in passing offense, giving up 17 sacks (5th in the Big 12).

While some may say last season is indicative of what will happen this season, the older players disagree.

"They have a lot of hustle in them," senior fullback Victor Mann said. "You can't ask for anything else from a football player but to give it his all and try to get better each day, and that's what our offensive line has done.

"Everybody will say they're young, but we don't label them as young. We label them as players that have to step up out there on the field and play on Saturdays."

Mann said younger players are vying with the older players for playing time.

"They are getting themselves in that mind frame and in that mentality of 'I'm just like a junior or senior out here.' They are taking it in stride," he said.

Unlike last year, when a number of excuses could have been made for poor performances, a young team won't be an excuse this season.

"If you can play the game, you can play the game, and these guys can play the game," Coach Bill Snyder said, adding the team's youth will be an advantage.

"These guys have a lot in front of them," he said. "They'll continue to get better, so I'm not too overly concerned about that. What's going to be important there is to establish depth."

Offensive coordinator Del Miller said having a younger offensive line will be good for future seasons.

"The only time I talk about their youth is that it's great because we're going to have them around for a long time," said Miller, who helped coach Nick Leckey, Ryan Lilja and others to the NFL over the past three years.

"They are going to be an awfully good offensive line. It's great because we're going to have them around for a long time, and that means we're going to be pretty decent for a long time."

Over the summer, the offensive line spent a lot of time together, which the players said will be a benefit to the team.

"We all came here at the same time, and we're all going to leave at the same time," Handy said. "It's going to be pretty cool to play with everybody for the next few years."

While some critics aren't expecting much from the offensive line, Clary said the team remains positive.

"We know what we're capable of," he said. "We can play. Just because we're young, that doesn't mean anything."

The younger players have moved on from last year, and are focused on making this year the best they can.

"Last year is just erased from all our memories," Hafferty said. "We paid for it. We worked out all the time. I think that's fine, it's brought us closer. I think now, we're going to be a better team than what most people think."

Wildcats begin life without Wecker, Mahoney, Koehn against Emporia State

Staff reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A nonconference schedule that includes perennial powerhouse Louisiana Tech and a Big 12 Conference home schedule that includes Texas Tech and defending NCAA champion Baylor highlights the K-State women's basketball schedule, which was released Wednesday.

DEB PATTERSON

K-State opens with an exhibition game against Division II Emporia State on Nov. 8 before beginning its regular season at home on Nov. 20 against Detroit.

"We have constructed a schedule which will provide our team with the challenge of facing distinct and diverse styles of play – one which will teach them the rigors of competing on the road, and which will ultimately prepare us well for Big 12 competition," Coach Deb Patterson said in a release.

The Wildcats will have early road tests when they travel to Santa Clara and Wyoming in late November before returning for a homestand that begins on Nov. 30 with Delaware State.

K-State will play 15 home games, including its conference-opener against Texas Tech on Jan. 4.

The Wildcats, who were 7-1 at home in the Big 12 last season, lost in the second-round of the NCAA Tournament to Vanderbilt after upsetting Texas and playing Baylor to the wire in the Big 12 Tournament.

That team featured mainstays Megan Mahoney, Kendra Wecker and Laurie Koehn – all of whom are now with WNBA teams.

Patterson said she hopes K-State's nonconference schedule will be enough to ease the transition of her young roster to Big 12-caliber play.

"Our home games against Louisiana Tech and Saint Joseph's as well as our road game at Wyoming will be particularly challenging preseason matchups for our young team," Patterson said.

An informational meeting for those interested in walking on to the K-State women's rowing team will be Tuesday in the K-State Student Union, Room 207 at 7 p.m.

The Wildcats are seeking tall, athletic and competitive women enrolled full-time at K-State. No previous rowing experience is required.

Women's rowing is an NCAA Division I varsity sport and is comprised of both novice and varsity squads.

For more information, contact the women's rowing office at (785) 532-3739.

Leagues offered include soccer (grades 1-8), flag football (3-8) and volleyball (4-6).

Practices begin the week of Sept. 5. Games start the week of Sept. 18 and run through Oct. 30.

Volunteers must be able to commit four to six hours per week for practices and games, with schedules determined by each coach.

Those interested should contact Mike Buchanon or Adam Dolezal at (785) 587-2757.

CINCINNATI — Bob Huggins stepped down under pressure Wednesday as Cincinnati's basketball coach, ousted by a school president determined to change the program's image.

Huggins

One day after Huggins was given an ultimatum of resigning or being fired, Huggins' attorney, Richard Katz, said a tentative agreement had been reached for him to leave the job. Katz said details were still being worked out on Huggins' compensation.

President Nancy Zimpher wants the program to recruit players with better grades and an aversion to trouble. She also wants her coaches to be better role models.

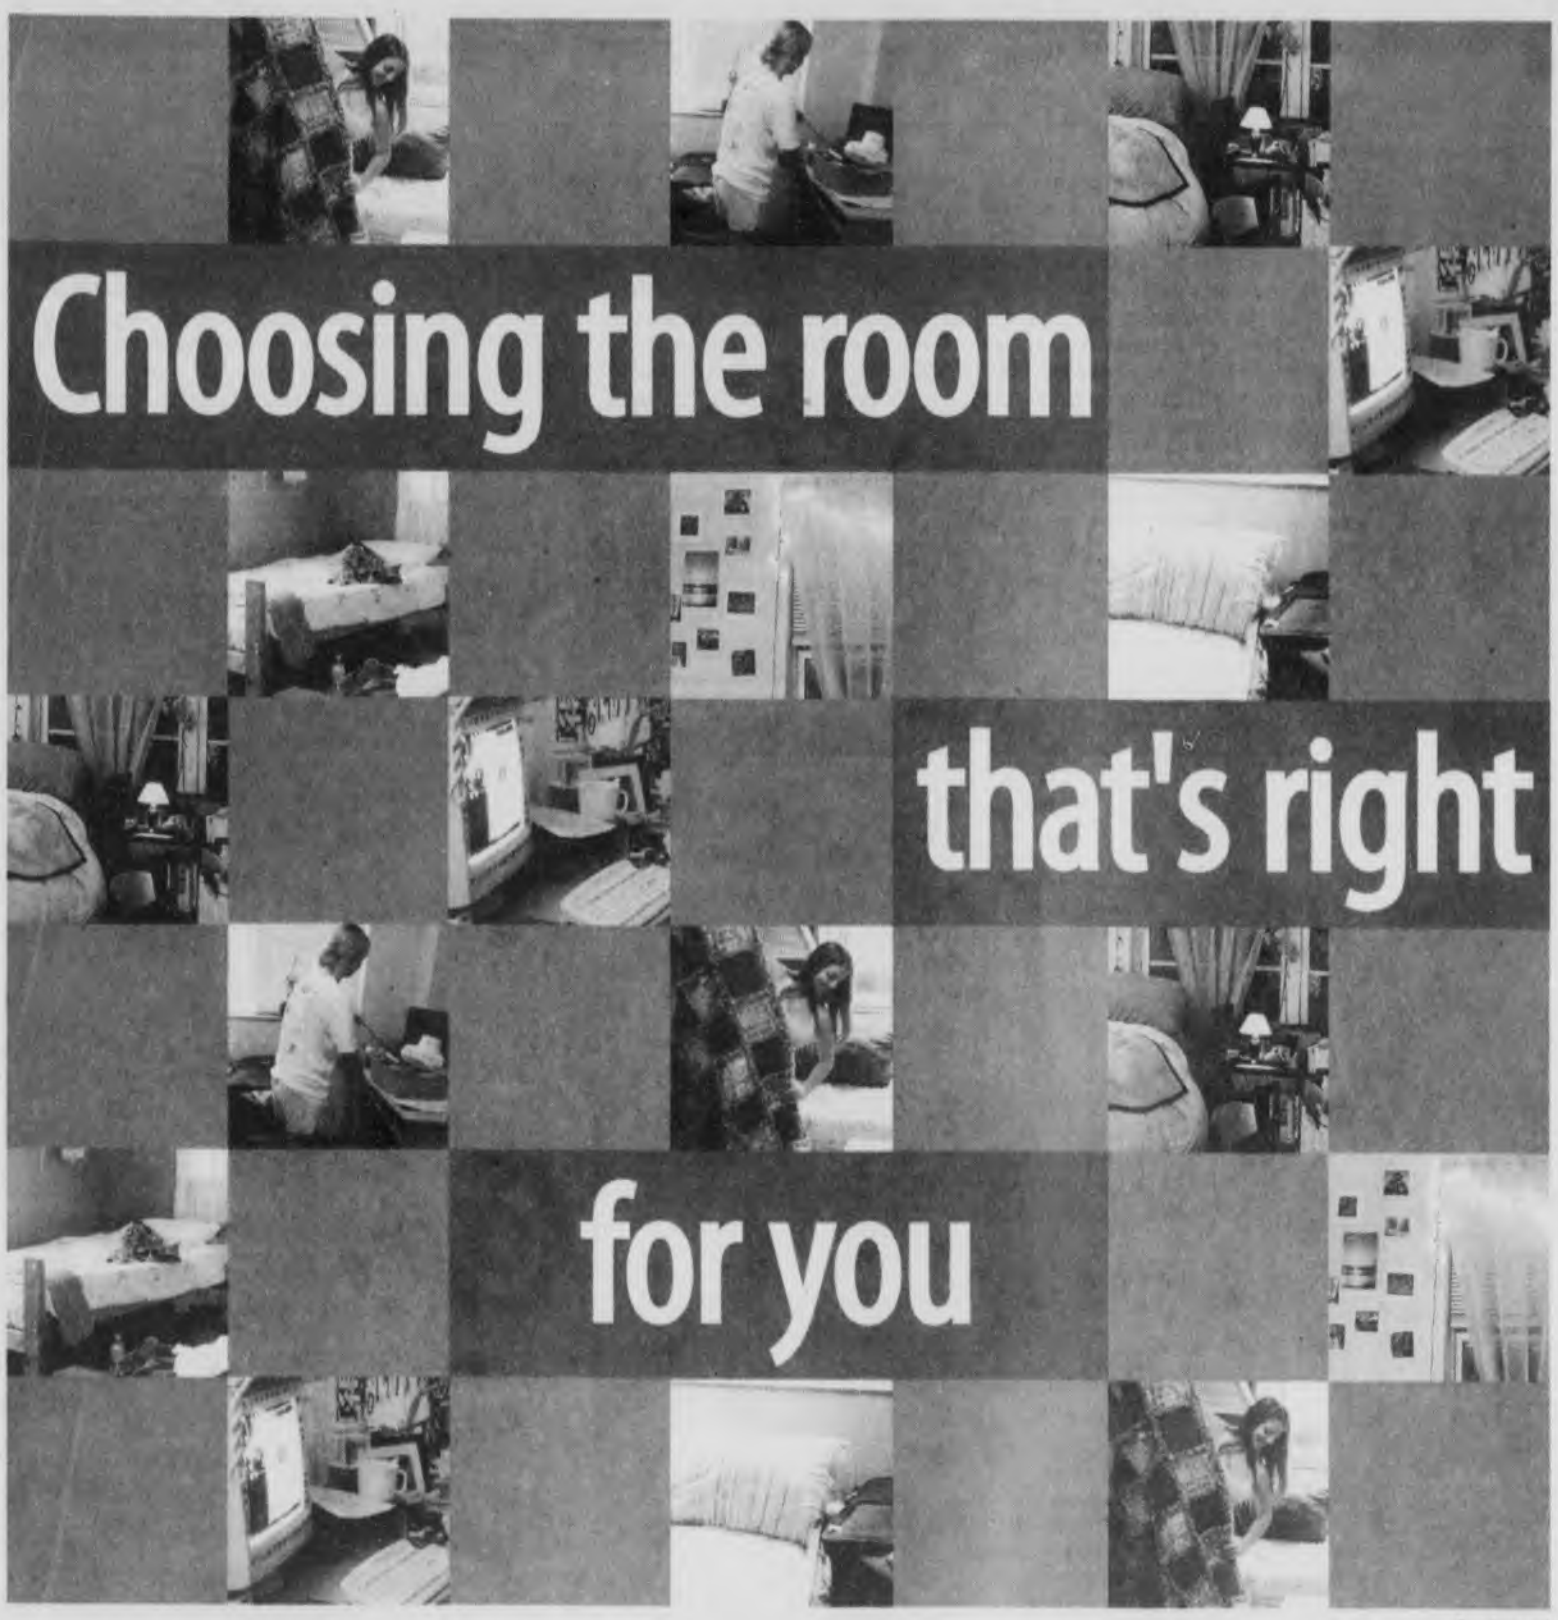
CYC | Tour director says Armstrong used EPO

PARIS — The director of the Tour de France said it was a "proven scientific fact" that Lance Armstrong had a performance-boosting drug in his body during his 1999 Tour win, and that the seven-time champion owed fans an explanation.

Armstrong

In a story Wednesday, Jean-Marie Leblanc praised L'Equipe for an investigation that reported six urine samples provided by Armstrong during the 1999 Tour tested positive for the red blood cell-booster EPO. The French sports daily on Tuesday accused Armstrong of using EPO during his first Tour win in 1999.

"For the first time — and these are no longer rumors or insinuations, these are proven scientific facts — someone has shown me that in 1999, Armstrong had a banned substance called EPO in his body," Leblanc told the paper.



TEN | Venus, Serena land on same side of draw

Though their father has suggested conspiracies against the sisters in the past, their seeded numbers for the year's final Grand Slam event, which begins next Monday, were drawn out of the silver winner's cup in plain view of everyone at the ceremony in an auditorium at the United Nations.

No. 8 Serena, still trying to find her form after recovering from injuries and showing up out of shape at Wimbledon, starts against a qualifier. No. 10 Venus opens against Japan's Rika Fujiwara.

If the sisters keep going until the fourth round, the winner of their duel would go against the No. 4 Clijsters.

Residence halls offer many options for students

By Brigette Burandt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Many students are glad to be away from home, with friends and living in their residence hall rooms.

There are lots of different types of residence-hall rooms to choose from, ranging from small, single rooms to the standard double room and even suites.

The most common type of room is the standard double: two beds, two desks and a communal bathroom. These rooms can be found in most residence halls. The two exceptions are Ford Hall and Van Zile Hall, which are completely suites.

According to the Department of Housing and Dining Services Web site, the double is the least expensive type of room, ranging from about $2,600 to about $2,700, depending on the chosen meal plan.

The downside is students have to share a small space with another person. It's one way to make either a new friend or a new enemy.

Next in line in terms of cost are the small, single rooms. About $150 more per semester than the standard double, students still have a communal bathroom, but no roommate problems.

Students will, however, have a lack of space.

"[The single] is basically a closet, but I like it a lot because I have it to myself," Prather said.

Finally, there is still the suite option. Primarily for juniors and seniors, suites are available in most residence halls, except Moore Hall. It's the roomiest (and most expensive) room option.

The cost of a suite ranges from $3,000 to $3,450 per semester, depending on the size of the suite and the meal plan.

Suites come in four different size options. There are single suites, which is the most expensive, or you can choose to have one, two or three roommates.

The more roommates, the less it costs per semester. However, not all suite sizes are available in all dorms where suites are available.

In Ford Hall, suites house either two or four people. In Haymaker Hall and Van Zile, suites are available for anywhere between one and four people. In West Hall, it's two or three people, while in Goodnow Hall and Marlatt Hall, there can be between two and four people, and in Boyd Hall and Putnam Hall, up to three people can share a suite.

Despite suites costing more, there are definite perks when you live in one.

Katie Ross, sophomore in anthropology, lived in a standard double last year and is now in a suite.

"I like [the suite] a lot better. There's more space and you have your own bathroom," Ross said.

If students don't like the idea of spending more money on a residence hall room, there are other less expensive housing options.

Smurthwaite Scholarship House costs less than $2,300 per semester, with all meals included except Sunday dinner.

Students at Smurthwaite share a room with one or two other people, and have weekly duties, such as kitchen work, housework and answering the telephone, but a savings of more than $300 each semester makes some people willing to pitch in.

Smurthwaite has a separate application process than the residence halls, and there is limited space, so students should be sure to get their application in early if they would like to live there.

Another scholarship house is Alpha of Clovia. Clovia is run by the Kansas 4-H Foundation, and is available to former 4-H members, with preference given to those from Kansas 4-H clubs.

To live in Clovia, students must have at least a 2.5 grade point average and perform about five hours of house duties per week.

Both Smurthwaite and Clovia are all-female.

Smith Scholarship House is the least expensive option for men at just $1,100 per semester. However, there are more obligations. Smith Scholars, as the men in Smith are called, share cooking, housekeeping and governing duties.

If students decide they would like a standard double room, there are special options. Some residence halls have academic cluster floors, where students with the same major can live in the same hall in order to more easily form study groups.

Architecture and engineering cluster floors are available in Goodnow and Marlatt Halls. Moore Hall has business administration and leadership cluster floors. Haymaker Hall also has an agriculture cluster floor.

Homemade salsa provides alternative from the normal

By Kelly Schmitt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The dance may be hot and spicy, but sometimes salsa can be mild and sweet. It can even resemble a dessert, as in the case of fruit salsa.

Chilled fruit salsa is served with homemade cinnamon and sugar chips. The combination is melt-in-your-mouth good.

For more traditional salsa lovers, a mild-to-medium garlic salsa may provide a more satisfying taste. This salsa goes well with any store-bought corn tortilla chips, although extra flavor peeks through with the lime-flavored tortilla chips.

Keeping in mind students rarely have access to a gourmet kitchen, these salsa recipes are easy to make and require few kitchen utensils. They are a great alternative to the same old chips and dip provided at most weekend social gatherings.

For the best flavor, use garden-fresh, vine-ripened ingredients whenever possible.

If you have a recipe you would like to share, send an e-mail to collegian@spub.ksu.edu. Family recipes, ethnic recipes and tasty-but-easy recipes are welcome from students and faculty.

Quick and easy recipes

Fruit Salsa:

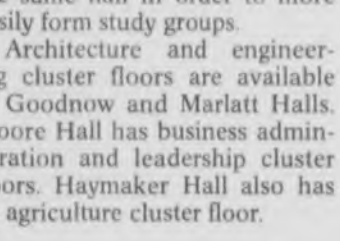
1 pound fresh strawberries
4 kiwis
1 cup raspberries
2 golden apples
2 tablespoons sugar

Dice fruits. Mix together in large bowl. Add sugar and mix again. Chill at least 15 minutes.

Cinnamon and Sugar Chips:

10 10-inch flour tortillas
Butter spray or butter-flavored cooking oil
Sugar with cinnamon mixed in to preferred taste

Spray tortilla shells, one at a time, with butter spray. Sprinkle cinnamon and sugar mixture over tortilla shell. Coverage can be thick or thin, depending on personal taste. Spray again with butter spray. Use pizza cutter to cut tortilla into wedges. Repeat with remaining shells.



Spread wedges in single layer on baking sheet. Bake 10-12 minutes at 350 degrees. Allow to cool slightly before serving.

Mild Garlic Salsa:

2 fresh tomatoes
1 medium can diced tomatoes
3 cloves garlic (cloves, not entire bulbs)
1 bunch green onions
1 small can chopped black olives or a handful of black olives

Roughly chop tomatoes and green onions. In a blender, chop garlic, green onions and olives. Add fresh tomatoes and chop again. Add can of diced tomatoes and chop again. Serve with corn tortilla chips.

To add some heat to the garlic salsa, add three jalapeno peppers to the blender at the same time as garlic, green onions and olives. This will make a nice, medium-flavored salsa.

QUOTABLES

"It's only from a special point of view that "education" is a failure. As to its own purposes, it's an unqualified success. One of its purposes is to serve as a massive tax-supported jobs program for legions of not especially able or talented people. As social programs go, it's a good one. The pay isn't high, but the risk is low, the standards are lenient, entry is easy, and job security is pretty good...in fact, the system is perfect, except for one little detail. We must find a way to get the children out of it."

STRANGE LAWS

In Alabama, it's illegal to wear a fake mustache that causes laughter in church.

In Texas, it's illegal to curse in front of, or indecently expose oneself to, a corpse.

In Idaho, the law states all boxes of candy given as romantic gifts must weigh more than 50 pounds.

In California, animals are banned from mating publicly within 1,500 feet of a tavern, school or place of worship.

In Washington state, it's against the law to sleep in an outhouse without the owner's permission.

In Texas, it's illegal to put graffiti on someone else's cow.

In Alabama, dominoes may not be played on Sunday.

In Pueblo, Colo., it's illegal to let a dandelion grow within city limits.

An old law in Bellingham, Wash., made it illegal for a woman to take anything other than backwards steps while dancing.

Rec complex changes add diversity

More classes, dodgeball, new staff increase workout options

By Dayne Logan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This school year will see more changes at the Peters Recreation Complex.

"There's a lot going on," administrative specialist Marian Brandenburg said.

Two new staff members were hired over the summer with funds from the Student Governing Association. Also, dodgeball has been added to the intramural sports program and new aerobics classes are now available.

Amber Long, the new fitness director, has several ideas to improve student fitness programs at the Rec Complex.

"We're trying to target everyone, all ages and fitness levels," Long said.

This fall the rec will offer 72 aerobics classes throughout the semester.

Also, "many aerobics classes have changed names," associate director Steve Martini said.

Several aerobics classes have been moved, including pilates and yoga, which formerly shared a room.

This spring, the Rec Complex will offer personal training. K-State students will teach the programs.

Long, a certified trainer, said she believes this will offer a unique opportunity to both trainers and trainees.

"It will allow students hands-on learning that they won't get in class," Long said.

The personal training program is scheduled to begin after winter break and will probably cost students about $15 per session, roughly half the cost of hiring a professional trainer.

The first round of intramurals will begin Saturday with the punt, pass and kick competition.

Next week, flag football, soccer and several individual events will begin.

All entries are due by 5 p.m. this Friday in the Rec Complex Services office.

Web site partnership to save money

By Laura Noll
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

On Aug. 22, Patrick Nagle and Will DeSantis, founders of SwitchTextbooks.com, announced the partnership of SwitchTextbooks.com and RateMyProfessors.com.

DeSantis, co-founder of SwitchTextbooks.com and President and CEO of RateMyProfessors.com, said a partnership developed in reaction to the recent rise in textbook costs.

According to a recent press release from Switch Textbooks, Inc., the strategic partnership is focused to provide the student body with value and savings.

SwitchTextbooks.com offers students the opportunity to trade used textbooks that are no longer needed for the textbooks they need. For only $19.95 per year, student can join the online network and exchange books for points, then use those points to obtain different books.

The company claims the average student saves approximately $362.00 on books per semester by making use of their services.

RateMyProfessors.com allows professors to be rated based on student opinion. The site hosts 3,800,000 ratings and provides a quick reference to more than 570,000 professors across the nation.

Use of the site is free.

Merging the two sites will help to make students more aware of SwitchTextbooks.com, DeSantis said. In turn, as more students join the site, more textbooks will be readily available for trade.

shoulder to avoid a car crossing the center line. He hit a southbound car driven by Tryon as he over corrected. Riordan's car became airborne, landing on top of a vehicle driven by Logback. All four students were wearing seat belts, Tryon was not. He and Armstrong died instantly.

The Mercury said authorities fielded three accident reports in 30 minutes on U.S. Highway 77 that day involving a car swerving across the center line. Desjardines allegedly went left of center line and struck another car while heading southbound on Tuttle Creek Boulevard at 7:40 p.m.

The Mercury said the officer who issued the notice did not make the connection at the time between that collision and the fatal accident.

Delph was air-lifted to the University of Kansas Medical Center and was feared to have suffered brain damage, while the other three were taken to Mercy Health Center in Manhattan. Riordan's injuries included a punctured spleen and a collapsed lung. Lovig underwent surgery for a dislocated hip, while Logback's neck was broken in two places.

Two weeks later Delph was recovering at home in Dunlap, Ill., while Riordan and Lovig had returned to classes at K-State. Logback returned to work part-time in January 2004 and is currently undergoing physical therapy.

Logback said Lovig is still a student at K-State, Riordan is attending the University of Kansas and Delph is at school in Nashville, Tenn.

None of the three could be reached for comment.

JARDINE | Demolition, construction to be broadcast online

Residents of buildings A, B and C were relocated in the spring, and Jardine staff started some of the demolition process during the summer, Deborah Kohl, coordinator for community development, said.

"Our staff has been able to go through the buildings and remove some cabinetry, remove some of the appliances and recycle the windows to replace others in Jardine," Kohl said.

Other features will also be added during the project, including a small lake, a stream and a town center that will include an academic resource center, possibly with some retail shops such as a copy center or convenience store. The Jardine Redevelopment Project is funded by state bonds that will be repaid by the fee money Housing and Dining Services collects from Jardine residents.

Housing and Dining Services is a separate entity from the university and doesn't receive state funding. Operations are paid for by student housing fees.

Harper said a Web cam will broadcast the demolition and part of the construction process online.

Most of the Jardine buildings were built in 1957 to help accommodate an influx of students after World War II.

to network if they are still looking for employment," she said.

Even though the fair is intended to be a casual event, Brantley said students should consider dressing up.

"If they are truly serious about looking for a job, they should dress in business casual," she said. "And having a resume on hand would be nice as well."

Along with a resume, students should have their schedules available so employers will know when they can work.

All of the businesses that will be at the fair are listed on the CES Web site, so students who have a particular business in mind can do basic research on the company.

Students wishing to browse the booths should allow at least 15 minutes, while students looking for a job should reserve an hour.

All are encouraged to attend.

Brantley said 1,200 students visited the fair last year.

"The employers who attend love coming to the fair because it puts them in front of so many students in such a small amount of time," she said.

Rick Colmenero, assistant manager with Chipotle, said Chipotle will be back this semester after receiving several applications last year.

"It's a good opportunity to get a variety of people and to let people see that we are here and we are hiring," he said.

The Sunset Zoological Park docent program will be at the fair, looking for volunteers for their program.

"The majority of our docent program participants are K-State students," Kathryn Wohlfeil, education assistant at Sunset Zoo, said. "Almost anything the students are interested in, we can find their niche in the zoo."

Along with local businesses and non-profit organizations, there will be several on-campus groups at the fair, including the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics and the Department of Housing and Dining Services.

Not all of the employers will be looking to hire employees immediately, Brantley said. Many will be taking names for interviews in the spring.

Kansas National Guard celebrates 150 years

By Christina Forsberg
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Kansas National Guard is celebrating its 150th anniversary.

Preparations for the celebration have been a year in the making, and events for the anniversary share a piece of Kansas history.

From the Civil War through the Persian Gulf War, the Kansas National Guard Museum contains archives of historic Kansas infantry units, a Hall of Fame of KSNG and "Kansas State Militia," Medals of Honor, and research archives.

"A flag presentation is held to explain the significance of the flags originated in the Revolutionary War," Capt. Steve Grisham said regarding one of many events that have run throughout the course of the year.

The Kansas National Guard Committee recently announced a "Celebration Weekend" this weekend as the highlight of the 150th Anniversary.

Located at the Kansas National Guard Museum in Topeka, a variety of events will take place Aug. 27-28.

For more information

The events begin with a Military Inspection at 9 a.m. Saturday and a Band Concert follows at 11 a.m.

Additional events scheduled from 8 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. include Dialogue with the Troops, Military re-enactors and Static Military Equipment Displays. In the evening, the Military Dinner and Ball will top off the day's activities at the Kansas Expo Hall from 9 p.m. to 11:30 p.m.

A Memorial Service will wrap up the weekend's events at 9 a.m. on Sunday at the Kansas National Guard Museum.

Commemorative coins, magnets, dog tags, mugs, t-shirts, polo shirts and a limited edition print of "8th Kansas at Missionary Ridge" by artist Dale Gallon are for sale by order form.

Campus wireless coverage extended

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State has become almost completely wireless.

Elizabeth Unger, vice provost for academic services and technology and dean of continuing education, said 87 percent of general use classrooms are covered by wireless technology.

"We have not yet installed wireless access for Bosco Commons or the Coffman area near the library," she said, adding that only 12 buildings are without wireless access.

Unger said the goal is to have 100 percent coverage on campus in the near future.

"We are wanting to allow students to be more mobile," she said. "We would like them to access any program from any place on campus using a laptop or even a cell phone or PDA device."

Unger said the residence halls may be covered in the next year, and that the university is working on several research tools for student use.

"Our goal is to create the very best learning and research environment," she said. "We realize that students are wanting to be mobile and this will give them the opportunity to really be able, efficient and affective as they need to be."

Julie Piere, junior in hotel and restaurant management, said she thinks wireless technology will be great for the campus.

"I have wireless internet at my house and it would be great for me to be able to access the network on campus and not be in a building," she said.

Piere said she hopes the whole campus will be wireless and one day she can access her e-mail from her cell phone.

Katie Cecil, junior in pre-professional business administration, said she also thought wireless communication is a wonderful idea.

"I think it would be great if our campus was wireless," she said. "It would make things so much easier and give us more freedom, and help get things done a little faster.

"It will be great to see how our technology will improve in the coming years."

A night in paradise

Tony Kuckelman, sophomore in chemistry, juggles clubs in the Bosco Free Student Plaza during the 2005 Union Expo and Activities Carnival Thursday evening. The event offered students a chance to receive information about organizations on campus while enjoying free entertainment and food.

Alicia Davignon barely noticed the excitement around her as she lay on a massage table receiving a free massage from Body First.

"The massage was really long and very relaxing and I enjoyed it immensely," the junior in modern languages and anthropology, said.

Davignon was one of many who attended the 2005 Union Expo and Activities Carnival, from 6 to 9 p.m. Thursday evening at the K-State Student Union.

For at least one night, K-State students received a night in paradise as they rushed from making sandy candy to picking up free funnel cakes.

"I had loads of fun and met tons of people walking around," Candace Moyd, freshman in Spanish, said. "The funnel cakes were quite good."

Funnel cakes were only one of many things being given away as people gathered in large groups for drawings on such UPC gifts as collapsible beach chairs and strapless sandals.

Free services such as airbrush tattoos and photo key-chains ruled the evening while campus organizations introduced themselves to both new and returning students at K-State.

Lidia Jaquez, freshman in business administration, who set out to find a sorority as the night began, came away with much more and said she was impressed.

"If you didn't come, you missed out on loads of opportunities to have fun and get information," she said. "It was the beginning of a college experience and it was much better than the average Thursday."

About 170 Student organizations set up booths across several of the Union's floors, thanks to the Office of Student Activities and Services. The office also offered a free postcard for students who wished to get in touch with family and friends.

Throughout the night, many organizations vied to catch the eye of at least one student interested in their endeavors.

Mike Reppert, sophomore in chemistry and a representative for Baptist Campus Center, said their goal was to try to get people aware of what they have to offer.

"We signed up at least a dozen people on our listserv, and our location was a little more difficult to spot compared to many of the others downstairs," he said. "It is just really good to be able to tell people what we are about and how they can get involved."

The Union Program Council sponsored much of the entertainment for the evening, as Austin Meek, the 2004 K-State Idol winner and junior in mass communications, performed for students in the Bosco Student Plaza. Local band EWB performed as well. There was also a showing of the of movie "Sahara" for students accompanied by

University says farewell to Harding

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Heath Harding, the director of the Department of Leadership Studies is leaving K-State to pursue other interests in humanity development.

Harding plans to move to Eugene, Ore., creating a void that will be hard to fill, said Director of Adult Services Nancy Bolsen.

"He was absolutely great with students," Bolsen said, adding Harding was very influential in helping out the computing department.

A farewell reception for Harding will be 3-5 p.m. today in the Cottonwood Room of the K-State Student Union.

Bolsen said Harding will be missed in meetings, where he was a visionary and made people think about issues in a different way.

Angela Nichols, senior in kinesiology, is minoring in leadership studies, where she has studied under Harding's leadership. She said she will miss him.

"He was very encouraging and very supportive," she said.

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Westar case begins

Jurors did not reach a verdict, Thursday, in the first full day in a federal fraud trial involving former Westar Energy Inc. executives David Wittig and Douglas Lake. They face 40 counts of conspiracy, wire fraud, money laundering and circumventing internal controls within the Topeka-based company.

19 dead in Pakistan

Despite the deployment of thousands of soldiers, paramilitary troops and a large number of police, at least 19 are dead and 100 injured after Pakistan citizens voted in the second phase of municipal elections Thursday. In the first election, Aug. 18, 22 people were killed and more than 200 were injured.

Air wreckage searched

Hundred of Peruvians searched the wreckage of a Boeing 737-200 Thursday, for anything of value. Wind shear likely forced an emergency landing and the pilot's actions prior to landing saved the lives of at least 58 people on board the airliner on Tuesday.

DON'T FORGET

Afterhours will be from 8 to midnight tonight in the K-State Student Union, featuring a NASCAR simulator.

Sunday is the last day to enroll for the Fall 2005 Semester on KATS.

Cats for Christ Campus Center, 1501 Denison Ave., is having a fall luau beginning at 7 tonight. There will be free food and Hawaiian attire is optional.

A suite deal

Haymaker renovations give more room, privacy to students

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After spending last year in a traditional double-standard room in Boyd Hall, Anne Dinsdale was ready for something more convenient.

"I wanted to have my own bathroom," she said.

"I like it because it is more spacious and it's brand new so I'm not living in anyone else's dirt," she said.

Skyler Harper, assistant director of Housing and Dining Services, facilities management, said the new suites in the B wing of Haymaker are part of a $4 million remodeling project that also includes renovating the group bathrooms on each floor into study rooms.

Haymaker's A wing will remain traditional rooms, but renovations will include new heating and air conditioning systems, fire alarms, sprinklers and new elevators. The fire alarms and sprinklers will be installed this semester and the new elevators will be installed next summer.

Suite renovations in the B wing began in December 2004 and were completed during the summer. Construction on study rooms started this week and is scheduled to be completed in the spring.

Although construction will be underway while the residence halls are occupied, Housing and Dining Services is doing its best to accommodate students.

"We don't start our noise first thing in the morning," Tanya Massey, Haymaker residence life coordinator, said. "There is no drilling or hammering indoors until after 9 a.m."

The suites were created by taking three traditional rooms and remodeling them into two rooms with a shared bathroom.

Because of the suites, there are 100 fewer beds for students this semester, Harper said.

"We are planning to make up for the lost number of beds with the Jardine project," he said.

The $102 million Jardine Redevelopment Project will provide housing options for about 1,000 more students upon completion in 2015.

However, Harper said this year the decreased number of beds wasn't an issue.

"We didn't have to turn any student away from the residence halls," he said.

About 900 students were moved to another location on campus by the Ford Hall Renovation in 2004, the Haymaker Hall Renovation last semester and the Jardine Redevelopment Project, Harper said.

"Even though we moved so many students, we have had virtually no complaints," he said. "That shows how hard we work to help the students."

Young Democrats to make trip to Wichita

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Several members of K-State's Young Democrats will join party members from across the state at Saturday's Demofest in Wichita.

The Kansas Democratic Party's State Committee Meeting and Celebration occurs twice a year – in Topeka in the spring and in Wichita in the fall.

"Despite the name, it's not just for Democrats," said Nicole Corcoran, press secretary for Governor Kathleen Sebelius. "The governor thinks any Kansan who supports good schools, good jobs and affordable health care would enjoy attending.

"There are many independents and moderate Republicans who agree with the governor on where our state is headed. We would love to have them join us in Wichita this weekend."

The conference will include caucus meetings of the Kansas Young Democrats, progressives, African-American, Hispanic and Lesbian Gay Bisexual and Transgender delegations.

Jeff Smith, president of the K-State chapter of Young Democrats, said this is the first meeting of the year, so everyone from top state officials to Democratic voters will be attending.

The keynote speaker is Iowa governor Tom Vilsack, who was chosen in July to be Chairman of the Democratic Leadership Council. Vilsack is one of the top six Democratic contenders for the presidency in 2008, said Lalo Munoz, Kansas Democratic Party finance director.

"He's definitely someone to keep an eye on," Munoz said of Vilsack, who was elected Iowa's first Democratic governor in more than 30 years and was re-elected in 2002.

Waterline causes damage to ramp

By Tessa French
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A broken waterline beneath the wheelchair ramp outside of Cardwell Hall has forced the Division of Facilities to tear out the concrete and replace the ramp.

"We are now just in the process of putting things, including the ramp, back together," said Ed Rice, Facilities associate vice president.

Last year about 1 million square feet on campus needed reconstruction, including places that did not meet Americans With Disabilities Act standards or fire and life safety codes.

According to the division's Web site, it plans to keep the campus up-to-date on renovations necessary due to a growing student population.

On the Web site, students can look at the master plan for campus changes. Its goal is to define the future quality and character of the campus environment, to involve the campus community in the development of a campus plan, and to identify future buildable sites.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Group should not force KMAN format change

Citizens for an Independent Media want more government control.

They are petitioning to force KMAN-AM 1350, a privately owned radio station, to change its programming to include more liberal programming – regardless of what the station's owner wants.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

KMAN obeys the guidelines and falls under the guises set forth by the Federal Communications Commission, but the Citizens for an Independent Media are seeking to censor the station even more.

The logical solution would be to start a competing radio station with a more liberal agenda, rather than attempting to interfere with the workings of a private business.

Instead, we must endure an infringement on the First Amendment by a group that has the gall to claim they support "independent media."

The First Amendment is not negotiable.

KMAN has paid for their soapbox, they maintain it to the strictest of government standards, keep it in working order and make their own decisions that determine its present and future.

If the Citizens for an Independent Media find KMAN's programming so objectionable, let them take a step that will truly celebrate freedom and the choices it entails – the freedom to change the station.

Recycling habit

Reducing waste important, easy to accomplish

With the beginning of the new school year, many students have celebrated moving back to Manhattan with wild parties and embarking on massive Wal-Mart shopping trips to furnish their new abode.

The result of these endeavors are evident in the trash piles that appear curbside.

RACHEL THOMPSON

But the cans, newspapers, cardboard boxes and plastic bags can be put to a better use than filling up the landfill: they can be recycled.

And getting in the habit of recycling probably will not be as hard as most of your classes this semester.

The Kansas Department of Health and Environment Web site states that with the amount of aluminum Americans, throw away the entire U.S. commercial air fleet could be rebuilt every 3 months, which is just one valuable way to reuse the empty beer and pop cans many college students produce.

The KDHE says that of the average grocery bill, 10 percent pays for the plastic or paper bags. Recycling plastic bags is easy in Manhattan with the receptacles by the Wal-Mart doors. Dillon's also subtracts 5 cents for each paper or plastic bag brought in to reuse.

Nearly 61 million tons of material was prevented from entering landfills because of recycling and composting activities in 1997. In 2001, Americans recycled 28 percent of its waste.

I am not asking you to recycle everything, but it's easy to make a difference.

It is easy to recycle magazines, and if you drink a lot of pop or beer, you can recycle those simply by adding another container next to your trash can. The same goes for newspapers.

Howie's Enterprises, located at 625 S. 10th Street, takes many different recyclables and will pay for aluminum cans, something most college students will appreciate. Recycling old items can also pad your wallet if you find a place or person to buy them. A garage sale will make more money than a large pile of garbage, and many people buy items that you might consider trash.

Another way to reduce wastefulness is to share clothes with friends or donate them to places like the Salvation Army or a church when you don't want them anymore.

Instead of tossing those clothes you never wear anymore, just get together with friends and exchange them. It's like a shopping trip without emptying your bank account.

In addition to everyday items, biodegradable waste like leaves, grass clippings and newspapers are just going to fill up landfills, when they could be put to better use as mulch. The Riley County Transfer Station accepts yard waste for free.

Sure, taking a car load to the recycling center will take a little time out of your day, but it is an easy, simple way to help preserve the earth and slow the rate that landfills grow by a little bit.

Starting to recycle is an easy habit that can make a difference when many people start to participate and the results add up – and you can start by taking this newspaper to the nearest recycle bin when you're done with it.

Americans' rights should be respected

It's a fact: history repeats itself.

Sometimes it's a good thing (boys think The Dukes of Hazzard), and sometimes it's a little scary (girls, too many of us fell into the leg warmers trap). But every once in awhile, it's downright horrifying.

What I'm talking about is much more serious than a movie remake or a fashion faux pas.

Over the past year, as gay rights issues have become an increasing topic of debate in our government, I began to see the horrifying similarity between the fight for women's rights, African-Americans' rights and the current issue of gay rights.

The more I considered this idea, the further back I could trace the trend in our nation's history. It seems the egotism began even before we were a nation, with the Native Americans, who stood little chance without any sort of organized government to even pretend to care about their rights as a people.

ADDIE LAUE

I realize the struggle for women's and African-American's rights are nowhere near finished, but it seems to me that as progress is made toward equality for one group, we always find someone new to pick on.

Obviously, one of the biggest arguments against gay marriage is religious. If we have a separation of church and state in America, a state marriage license should not be questioned for any consenting adult couple.

Time is being wasted debating issues that should not even be considered issues to our government.

So our government has had a few bumps in the road, right? No country has a clean history, but the biggest problem is that as a nation, we don't seem to be learning from our mistakes.

In the past, there has been progress made at least to the point where everyone is seen as equal citizens of this country, regardless of gender or ethnicity. But in the process of reaching equality, years have been wasted debating the issues and millions of people have been forced to struggle for the rights that never should have been questioned.

I see it as inevitable that our nation will someday see equal rights for gays as unquestionable as rights for any other group of Americans, so why is so much time being wasted?

If we want to evolve as a nation and pride ourselves on being a country of equality and freedom, we need to start dealing with some real issues and stop questioning the rights of fellow Americans.

It's 2 a.m. and I'm operating a nuclear reactor. How cool is that?

Can you imagine a guy that weighs 285 pound hauling ass on his bike down Claflin and finding out his breaks don't work? I can, 'cause that was me.

So there's a big purple gorilla sitting out in the Union courtyard, and I'm going to fight it.

To the girl in the street — thanks for making my life meaningful.

To the guy on the crotch rocket that got rear-ended at the stoplight — you should've whipped that guy's ass.

Hey, Kelsey Childress: I drive 40 minutes to school every day because I can't afford an apartment along with my car payment. So unless you want to fill up my tank every five days, don't tell me not to complain about gas prices.

So you're telling me every time I get on K-State Online I have to look at some old guy and a little girl? You need to change that. I don't want to look at that anymore.

I also out-smarted Varney's new refund policy.

Kelsey Childress needs to realize that not everyone's parents take care of their bar bill and their gas bill, and that some of us really want to pay 50 bucks over the weekend at the bar.

If you graduated in May 2004, there is no reason you should still be kicking it in May 2005. Let alone July and August 2005. You know who you are.

Local group contesting media content

Katie Lester | COLLEGIAN

Cathy Dawes, 1350-AM KMAN News Director, hosts "In Focus," a morning talk show, Wednesday. Dawes' first guest Lyle Butler, president of Manhattan's Chamber of Commerce, talked about how the city's image has improved over the years.

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A local organization is contesting the lack of media diversity in Manhattan, beginning with diversifying news programming on KMAN-AM 1350.

Citizens for Independent Media formed in May after six citizens from Manhattan attended the Media Reform Conference in St. Louis.

Christopher Renner, spokesperson for Citizens for Independent Media, said CIM evolved because of a lack of balance and fairness in Manhattan media.

"There has been a growing level of concern the last few years that the access to media in Manhattan is being denied to citizens," Renner said. "We decided it was time to take action."

Renner said KMAN news programming is right-winged and there is a wealth of information not reaching Manhattan.

KMAN airs news programming three times an hour from 6 to 10 a.m. and twice each hour the rest of the day, said Rich Wartell, general manager of Manhattan Broadcasting Company.

While CIM is proposing three hours of more liberal programs on KMAN, Wartell said KMAN airs programming based on popularity and not political views.

"That's what separates us from other radio stations," he said, adding most programs are local broadcasts.

"We try to appeal to a specific demographic and audience the best we can," he said.

Joelle Mausolf, senior in pre-law and political science and vice president of Young Democrats, said the issue is independent, not Democratic.

"This is an issue that a lot of Manhattan is concerned with," Mausolf said.

Renner said the roughly 60 members of CIM are working on developing a community-based newspaper, wireless broadband and low-power FM radio station.

Renner said the plans to change the media will take two or three years and he is applying for grants to help cover the costs.

Citizens can sign a petition online contesting the programming on KMAN.

Mausolf said those seeking information to form a viewpoint are only hearing one side on KMAN and understands what CIM is seeking.

"To get a balanced viewpoint," Mausolf said, "you should definitely hear both sides."

RCPD uses empty buildings for training

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Riley County Police Department Tactical Team performed monthly training at Jardine Apartments, building A, from 2 to 6 p.m. Wednesday.

Sergeant Tim Schuck, RCPD Tactical Team, said practicing in an urban environment is preferable.

The buildings are abandoned because of the redevelopment project, and were an ideal place for training.

RCPD Lieutenant Michael Quintanar said if they were using flash-bangs or knocking doors down, it was less likely to damage the buildings.

Tactical training involves rehearsing for possible contingencies such as emergency response and hostage rescue.

"The more we train, the better off we are," Quintanar said.

RCPD arranged the training using K-State property through Skyler Harper, Assistant Director of Housing Maintenance.

According to Jim Hodges, Production Manager of Department of Housing and Dining Services, RCPD chose Jardine for its convenience.

"They can't hurt it, and they don't get too many opportunities like that," he said.

Wildcats not taking competition lightly, excited to play

K-State opens the volleyball season today against Arkansas-Little Rock

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The recurring word spoken by K-State volleyball players as they finished preparing for their first match of the season was simple: excited.

"We are really excited about playing and getting our first match under our belt," captain Stacey Spiegelberg said.

The Wildcats will open the 2005 season at the Clarion Hotel Missouri State Invitational today and tomorrow in Springfield, Mo.

K-State will play Arkansas-Little Rock at 4 p.m. today and the Saint Louis and Missouri State on Saturday.

Spiegelberg, a sophomore setter from Overland Park, Kan., said she expects K-State to win all of its matches this weekend, but is not taking the competition lightly.

"We never want to look past any teams," she said.

Senior outside hitter and captain Agata Rezende agreed with Spiegelberg – saying no victory will come easy.

"I think every match for us is going to be like a war, and we need to prepare for every match," Rezende said. "It doesn't matter who we play."

The Wildcats, picked to finish sixth in the conference by Big 12 coaches, enter the weekend ranked No. 26 in the USA Today/CSTV poll.

"My expectations are very high, especially because we have worked so hard these last two weeks," Rezende said. "I think we are ready for our first game."

Sophomore libero Angie Lastra said the low preseason ranking provides plenty of motivation.

"This season will be a challenge for us because we are not expected to be good," she said.

Lastra, the 2004 Big 12 Libero of the Year, said she needs to become more vocal on the court, Wildcat football fans went to KSU Stadium Thursday night for Fan Appreciation Day, with hopes of seeing an improved Wildcat team.

The stadium gates opened at 5 p.m. for an hour of open practice followed by player and coach introductions, finishing with the fans walking down onto the field for an autograph session with players and Coach Bill Snyder.

Amanda Uhl, of Sylvan Grove, Kan., said she was expecting a good year after hearing the overall camaraderie of the team had improved.

Uhl said she and her three sons were there to see their favorite player Maurice Mack. Mack, a junior, recently switched positions from strong safety to linebacker.

"I have three boys and they just live for K-State football," Uhl said. "We also came to thank Maurice Mack for visiting my son while he was in the hospital."

Brad Williams, Manhattan resident, said he came with his two kids to get autographs and enjoy the practice.

Williams, a 1992 K-State graduate, said he has seen K-State football develop over the last 15 years, and was in attendance when the Wildcats snapped their 30-game losing streak in 1989 by defeating North Texas State, 20-17.

"After that game, it was like we won the national championship," Williams said. "Now, unless we're playing Nebraska or Oklahoma, it's just not the same."

Brandi Stephenson, a 2002 K-State graduate and a Manhattan resident, said Fan Appreciation Day was important for a strong season.

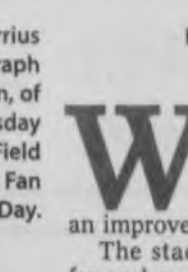
"It's important to get the fans excited about the upcoming year and the players to see that the fans support them," Stephenson said.

Many of the fans in attendance predicted the Wildcats would rebound from the struggles of a season ago.

Hanna Kohfeld, junior in business marketing and Spanish, said she expected Allen Webb to be the Wildcats' starting quarterback, and the team will have an 8-3 record, as long as players step up.

After practice, team captains and seniors Victor Mann, Jeromey Clary and Brandon Archer were introduced by Snyder. Mann, Clary and Archer each addressed the fans.

"I know everybody can't wait until Sept. 3," Mann said. "We didn't play up to expectations last year but we will this year."



ALSUP REDSHIRTING?

During senior introductions, Snyder introduced 15 seniors to the crowd, but left out running back Carlos Alsup, who is listed as a senior on the official roster.

Then, after addressing the crowd again, Snyder introduced Alsup, but added, "We'll be keeping him around one more year."

Alsup is returning from back-to-back season-ending knee injuries. Alsup suited up and ran through drills with his teammates.

Royals' owner needs to learn from example set by Atlanta Braves

MATTHEW GIRARD

It must really suck to be a Kansas City Royals fan.

Thank God, I'm an Atlanta Braves fan.

What's the point?

The other night, our online editor here at the Collegian, who also happens to be a Braves fan, and I were sitting around talking baseball and discussing how Atlanta seems to always have young talent come up through its farm system, fill a hole and then stay around.

The Royals on the other hand, who were in the midst of a 19-game losing streak, always have young talent that produces as individuals, then those players leave.

Atlanta has a payroll of $85 million and is able to hold on to those young players, while Kansas City's payroll is the lowest in all of Major League Baseball at $36 million.

The lesson to be learned here is, Royals owner David Glass needs to put money into his team to develop young talent and keep it around.

At the beginning of this season, it looked as if Atlanta would relinquish its 13-year stranglehold on the National League East Division title.

The team was decimated by injuries and a sketchy bullpen, putting the Braves out of first place by as many as five and a half games.

Then the Braves called up some rookies to fill the empty roster spots, and what do you know – Atlanta has been in either first or a close second in the NL East since July 26, will most likely go on to win its 14th consecutive division title and could win another 14 division titles with the young talent they have.

The Royals have also dipped into their farm system for help, but their season has been over since April 10.

Kansas City is currently 35-and-a-half games behind Central Division leaders the Chicago White Sox.

Kansas City's young talent (Zack Greinke, Runelvys Hernandez, David DeJesus, John Buck and Mark Teahen) are cornerstones Glass and the Royals can build around and should be given the chance to grow as a team.

The Royals won't have a winning season or be in contention for a division title any time soon, but the possibility is there.

The problem is, the young players won't get that chance.

Like almost every season, other teams willing to spend a little cash will use Kansas City as their own personal stock yard, letting talented young players mature a little before bringing them to the "real" big show.

Go ahead Royals fans, celebrate the 20-year anniversary of your 1985 World Series win.

I'll see you in another 20.

When the Royals still won't have won a division title, but could've won 10 and at least one World Series had they spent the cash.

GLF | Van Cleave misses match play at U.S. Amateur

Entering a playoff, the former Wildcat was in a 19-way tie for 17 spots to make the cut with a two-round score of 146.

Van Cleave three-putted on the first hole of the playoff for a bogey, which dropped him out of contention since the other 18 players recorded par or better.

James Lepp of Canada was the stroke-play medalist, carding a 70-65-135.

SPT | Season ticket holder appreciation day announced

The K-State Athletics Department announced Thursday it will have a season ticket holder appreciation day prior to the Wildcats' 2005 football opener against Florida International on Saturday, Sept. 3, with all K-State Athletics season ticket holders invited to attend with a special invitation that has been mailed.

The event will run from 10:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. at Bramlage Coliseum, and will feature former Wildcat quarterback Jonathon Beasley, student-athletes and coaches from various Wildcat athletic teams, Willie the Wildcat and the K-State cheerleaders.

Each season ticket holder in attendance may redeem their invitation for a special highlight DVD and a free gift.

NFL | Owens set to play first preseason game

PHILADELPHIA — Terrell Owens and Donovan McNabb now can give each other the silent treatment in a game.

Owens and McNabb will play together in a game for the first time since their public feud began when the Philadelphia Eagles host the Cincinnati Bengals tonight. Owens missed the first preseason game after he was sent home for a week following an argument with Eagles coach Andy Reid. He was kept out of the second game because of a groin injury.

Owens

Owens started the friction in April when he took a shot at McNabb's performance in Philadelphia's Super Bowl loss to New England. He also called McNabb a "hypocrite" earlier this month.

A day after the director of the Tour de France said the seven-time champion "fooled" race officials and the sporting world by doping, Armstrong responded to the growing controversy with harsh words for everyone connected to a report in L'Equipe, the French sports daily that made the original accusation.

Armstrong

He went on to lambaste L'Equipe and question the science and ethics of the suburban Paris laboratory that stored frozen samples from the 1999 tour, tested them only last year and leaked the results used in the newspaper's report.

NEW YORK — The new college football poll being used by the Bowl Championship Series will have to replace four voters on its recently unveiled panel, three who work for ESPN and one whose only connection to college football is his father-in-law.

Lou Holtz, Gerry DiNardo and John Congemi are not permitted to vote in the Harris Interactive College Football Poll by ESPN because it is being used by the BCS to determine which teams play for the national championship.

Jason Rash, the son-in-law of Troy coach Larry Blakeney, has withdrawn from the 114-member Harris voter panel after the BCS informed the Sun Belt Conference that he did not meet its voter criteria.

PETS in the DORMS

Students find ways to keep furry friends in residence halls

By Iris Kalkofen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"One of the conditions for being my roommate was that she must be okay with my animals,"

Sarah Becker
SOPHOMORE IN WILDLIFE BIOLOGY

While some students leave their pets at home during the school year, Sarah Becker, sophomore in wildlife biology, brought hers with her.

She said although some might find rats revolting, they make great pets.

"Rats are the most intelligent small animal," she said. "I researched them a lot, and one of the reasons I got rats is because they have the least odor out of all small animals."

Becker and her roommate, Christina Miller, freshman in animal science and industry, discussed the pets before they moved in.

"One of the conditions for being my roommate was that she must be okay with my animals," Becker said.

Although they can be cute and cuddly, some pets can cause problems in the dorms, the biggest being roommate conflicts, said Kipp Van Dyke, residence life coordinator at Goodnow Hall.

To avoid conflicts, residents who have animals have to read and fill out the Association of Residence Halls' pet policy along with their roommate. This outlines the pets allowed by the residence halls.

Some of the animals allowed in the residence halls include sugar gliders, Chapman chinchillas, hissing cockroaches and snakes no more than 48 inches in length.

"Most animals that are restricted are done so for the safety of our students and facilities," Van Dyke said. "For example, some insects and reptiles are prohibited because they are dangerous."

Other problems with animals in the dorms include bird noises and phobias of other residents in the hall.

"At least be a responsible owner and take care of your animal and don't neglect it," she said.

"I would suggest hamsters and rabbits as good pets," said Jacqueline Hernandez, an employee at Pets-N-Stuff, "Students should avoid loud birds and remember that mice stink."

For those thinking about getting a pet, Van Dyke suggested a pet rock or some other low-maintenance animal.

"Something like a beta because it's pretty low-key and a safe, easy way to start," he said.

Senior provides dating advice

Ask the 5th year

MATT PETERWORTH

I'm a freshmen in the dorms and I'm wondering if you have any dating advice for me?
-Hoping to Get More in Moore

Rule #1: Don't date a someone with the same major as you.

Worst case scenario: You break up, making for awkward moments in every class until you graduate.

Best case scenario: You get married, then have to compete against your spouse for the same job. It is easy to have feelings for this super-hot girl in all of your classes, but it's just not worth it.

Rule #2: You can date as many people as you want, provided that they live in different zip codes.

This means you could feasibly date someone who lives off campus and another from the residence halls, not to mention one back home. The reason for this rule is that it reduces the chances of the people you're dating from ever meeting each other.

You can date as many people as you want, provided that they're in different zip codes.

Rule #3: Never date someone on your floor.

If you live on campus, try to date someone who lives in another residence hall. For example, if you are in Kramer complex, you'll want to date someone who lives in Derby or Strong complex.

The first reason is if you break up, you'll never have to see each other again, avoiding awkward situations in your hall. The second reason is you can still bring someone else back to your dorm room.

Rule #4: You're only a freshman once.

You're a freshman – it's OK to be stupid (as long as you use a condom). Just make sure you learn from your mistakes and know how much alcohol you can consume before you lose consciousness.

Rule #5: Listen to what Steve Martin has to say: "Don't have sex, man. It leads to kissing, and pretty soon you'll have to start talking to them."

What does this mean? Have a high enough standard for someone you would sleep with. It should at least be someone you would talk to.

Rule #6: Remember, girls can fake orgasms, but men can fake entire relationships.

This is geared more toward the ladies. Beware of guys who are just looking for sex and not a relationship.

PS: Don't fake orgasms.

Rule #7: Is sex the answer? No! Sex is the question; yes is the answer.

BRAIN TEASERS

Jake Bennett, owner of the Circle K dude ranch, had a problem. He had five guests coming the next week who all wanted to ride horses. Unfortunately, he only had four horses available. Each of the guests wanted to spend most of their five-day stay riding. And to make matters worse, they preferred riding the same horse all week! After scratching his head almost bald, he finally came up with a plan that allowed each guest to ride on four days and on the same horse for at least two of the days. Using the grid and clues below, determine the full name of each guest, on which days each guest rode (each guest rode on four out of five days), and on which horses (the four horses were ridden every day).

1. Each horse was ridden by three different people. Brenda, who didn't ride Paint, rode the same horse for three days and a different one on Monday.

2. On Wednesday, the person whose last name is Wish rode Sunny, Mr. Grant rode Paint, Mary rode Rosie, and Flip was ridden by the person whose last name was Bend.

3. The horse, Paint, was ridden twice in a row by both Fred, who only rode two horses, and the one who rode Flip on Friday.

4. Ms. Nash and Stuart each rode Sunny on one day. Tom rode three different horses.

5. On Tuesday, Brenda didn't ride, Mr. Grant rode Flip, Mary rode on the same horse that she rode for the rest of the week, Stuart Bend rode, and Tom rode Paint.

6. Brenda, the woman who rode Sunny on Monday, and Mr. Flight all rode Rosie. Mary didn't ride on Thursday.

Answer:

Brenda Wish, Rosie on Monday, Sunny on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday.

Fred Grant, Flip on Monday and Tuesday, Paint on Wednesday and Thursday.

Mary Nash, Sunny on Monday, Rosie on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Friday.

Stuart Bend, Sunny on Tuesday, Flip on Wednesday and Thursday, Paint on Friday.

Tom Flight, Paint on Monday and Tuesday, Rosie on Thursday, Flip on Friday.

SGA internship, committee positions available

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Governing Association is opening its door to interested students who wish to join the Student Senate intern corps.

The intern program provides students a way to become involved in K-State politics without having to go through the competitive election process, said Lydia Peele, Senate Intern Coordinator and sophomore in secondary education.

For those who missed the elections last spring or are new to K-State, the Senate welcomes any applications.

"Around 20-30 Senate interns are selected for this term," Student Body President Michael Burns said.

Applications for Student Senate interns are due by 4 p.m. Sept. 2 in the Office of Student Activities and Services.

This year, interns will go through a three-tier application process.

First, students must submit an application, which is available online or in the Office of Student Activities and Services on the ground floor of the K-State Student Union.

Then, students are encouraged to attend the Senate social from 5 to 7 p.m. on Sept. 8 in the Union Flint Hills Room.

The social is an event where Burns, student senators, advisors, former and prospective interns can meet, mingle and discuss the purpose of the organization.

"It's an opportunity where they can get more information about the legislative process by directly conversing with student senators," Peele said.

Finally, interns will be selected for a year-long term, similar to other student positions.

For more information

For Senate Intern applications, go to: www.ksu.edu/osas or go to the Office of Student Activities and Services in the Union

When interns are selected, "they are required to attend Senate meetings every Thursday night and be a member of specialized committees," Peele said. "It's a great opportunity for leadership and a great opportunity to learn about Senate and what it operates."

Last year, Peele was an intern in the Privilege Fee Committee.

"In Senate, interns do not vote in the general body," Burns said. "But having that opportunity of seeing how Senate works, they experience major parts of how the university functions."

Burns said interns are given more privileges in committees, where they can speak and vote like other student senators.

Some senate committees include Academic Affairs, Governmental Relations, Senate Operations and Allocations.

Interns are also assigned to work with a student senator as a mentor to help guide them throughout the internship.

"Interns work on a special project to complete in their term," Peele said. "Last year, we put together a booklet for new senators and interns to explain things about Senate."

Peele said her Senate internship has given her more confidence.

"I've been able to see what other student leaders can accomplish, giving me a great support system and group of friends that I was involved with on the intern corps," she said. "It got me motivated for campus life."

"It's important to have senate interns," Burns said. "They really are the future of K-State."

Housing organizations seek membership

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

From promoting recycling programs to hosting scavenger hunts, the Department of Housing and Dining Services has several student organizations seeking new members.

Logan Benteman, Association of Residence Hall president and junior in industrial engineering, said Housing and Dining offers excellent ways to stay in tune with the residence hall system in a fun way.

"There are a lot of ways to become involved," he said. "Students can attend hall ARH meetings, Hall Governing Board meetings and floor meetings."

Positions on nearly all residence hall organizations are available too.

"There are floor presidents, social chairs and intramural chairs," he said.

"And there are also executive Hall Governing Board positions, including hall secretaries, ARH representatives."

Students who cannot commit to these groups can always jump into any activities offered, Benteman said.

The Association of Residence Halls is a general governing body focusing on issues concerning all nine residence halls.

"Our main goal is to fund social, educational and diversity activities," Benteman said. "We also influence hall policies, ranging from pet policies up to what type of microwaves are admitted into the halls."

"We have a say in all hall policies, and then residence life takes recommendations from that.

"Right now we are looking at homecoming and coming up with newer programs. We have a large budget for this semester and next year, and we hope to expand on programs we already have in place."

Within each hall, there are governing boards who focus on hall-specific issues.

Afton Smith, former Moore Hall resident, said he was very active in those leadership positions.

"I was on my floor governing board, and I attended weekly meetings regarding our floor," he said.

"I also got in touch with what was happening with the rest of the hall, and what activities we should look forward to in the future."

Smith was also a member of judicial board, a group of residence hall students who function as a courtroom jury for hall policy violators.

"It's really interesting, hearing people contest their case for breaking the alcohol policy or for beating someone up," she said.

The judicial board then decides on the punishment for the students involved, and sometimes it can result to removing that student from the residence hall.

However, the residence halls aren't the only Housing and Dining group students can join. Residents living in the Jardine Apartment Complex can serve on the Jardine Residence Council, a group similar to a Hall Governing Board.

Kelly Thacker, Jardine Residence Council Adviser, said, "the Jardine Residence Council is a group of Jardine residents that comes together to talk about concerns, issues and to prepare programs to present to the entire apartment community.

For more information

Association of Residence Halls, contact Logan Benteman, ARH President at loganb@ksu.edu
Housing and Dining Ambassadors, contact Kevin Cook, Coordinator of Academic Affairs for Housing and Dining at kcook@ksu.edu
Jardine Resident's Council, contact Kelly Thacker, Residence Council Advisor, at kthacker@ksu.edu
Hall Governing Board, contact your residence hall president or residence life coordinator

"Over the past few years the Council has gone through many changes and is still evolving into a new group with new goals and objectives and as we start and continue the redevelopment process, I see the Residence Council serving as a sounding board for residents and their needs."

Housing and Dining also offers ambassador positions to students living in both Jardine and any of the residence halls.

This group focuses on promoting all aspects of Housing and Dining, answering questions of newcomers and influencing projects such as the Jardine Redevelopment.

Benteman said, regardless of year, students should consider becoming a part of any of the Housing and Dining organizations.

"It's really given me a wide range of seeing how things in residence life work."

"I have a larger respect for how things run," he said.

"Everyone sees hall staff as babysitters, but there is so much more to what they do," Benteman said.

"You gain a bigger appreciation for their efforts."

Brian Iverson of Seven Dolors Grade School plays on the monkey bars Thursday afternoon. The playground equipment was purchased with grant money from the state last year. If Manhattan Catholic Schools wins the grant competition this year, they plan to use the money to purchase new technology.

Local schools compete for cash

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Today they can also give a local elementary school the chance to win $1,000.

The mall is hosting it's annual "Grant for Grade School" competition, where every dollar on a shopping receipt is equivalent to one point. The school with the most points at the end of the competition will win $1,000.

"We accept receipts from anyone who shops in Manhattan Town Center," said Sara Van Allen, marketing manager at the mall.

This year, the mall has increased the competition by having "Star Stores," Van Allen said.

"We will have about five or six stores that you can earn double points for shopping there on that Saturday," she said.

To find out which stores are "Star Stores," Van Allen said people can visit the customer service desk or the Town Center Web Site at www.manhattantowncenter.com.

Manhattan Catholic Schools won last year's competition and have been preparing for this year since the beginning of school, said principal Tom Schmitz.

After winning last year's prize, Manhattan Catholic Schools invested their money in new playground equipment. This year, they hope to change things inside the classroom.

"We never officially know what we are going to invest in, so we just always look at bigger projects," Schmitz said.

As of today, Manhattan Catholic Schools are in first place with Woodrow Wilson close behind.

Katha Hurt, Woodrow Wilson Elementary School principal, said this year the event isn't a huge priority to their school.

"Last year, we promoted the event because we were very close in the competition," she said. "Since school has started so late in the year, we have not had appropriate time to do that."

Schmitz said the school competition is a great connection between the schools and the community.

"I think the community and the mall wants to give back into the schools, and it really goes back a long way," he said. "Funding is always a challenge in elementary schools today."

free ice cream to snack on, provided by Campus Crusade for Christ.

Kelly Brannin, traditions co-chair for UPC, said she was pleased with how the evening went.

"The night was a mix of emotions, I was apprehensive early in the night because we really wanted it to come out like we expected," Brannin said. "It was really rewarding to talk to many of the people. It made us feel good that not only those we knew, but others were telling us what they were enjoying themselves."

Gayle Spencer, coordinator of the Office of Student Activities and Services, said the expo was a good opportunity for organizations to sign people up.

"An event like this is a very cool way to introduce things to both new and returning students," she said.

"This is the seventh year of producing the event and it has been extremely successful. Because of the increasing popularity, an expo for the spring has been introduced as well."

GUARD | 150th anniversary celebrations beginning

Manhattan's Municipal Airport is also helping out with the celebrations.

"We support them with what they need," Grisham said, "including equipment for the events held in Topeka."

Local guard units participate in the events, present a traveling museum known as the "Whistle Stop Caravan" and provide further equipment for the celebratory events this weekend.

According to a recent press release, the Kansas National Guard has about 1,400 Kansas men and women deployed. Most are stationed in Iraq, but other infantries, mentioned Grisham and Lieutenant Mathiot, are being deployed to Kosovo and other countries. One such deployment will be held this Sunday at noon in Bramlage Coliseum for the 137th infantry.

Kansas State University can expect a commemoration locally on Oct. 8, K-State's Game Day against Kansas.

Yet the celebrations won't stop there. The 150th Anniversary Committee will continue events for the remaining months of 2005.

an area in which coach Suzie Fritz has noticed improvement in practice.

"Angie is starting to take charge a little bit more of our back-row passing, and she is starting to be more vocal on defense," Fritz said. "We kind of want her to be a ball-hog because she is our best defender and our best passer."

Fritz, entering her fifth season as K-State's head coach, isn't sure what to expect in her team's first few matches.

But Fritz does know her players must earn playing time, and none of her true freshmen are ready to contribute in a game setting.

"We spend a lot of time measuring and evaluating to try and get a feel for who has earned the opportunity to compete in matches," she said. "We put them in a fierce, competitive environment in practice, and they will have to earn it from there."

The Wildcats face a number of unknowns, but Fritz said the team is where she hoped it would be at this point.

"I still have the same personal question marks right now as I had before, but I see that as a positive thing because that means we have good competition and good depth," Fritz said.

Deployed soldiers to provide security

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Stephanie Koberlein isn't afraid of the separation that comes with her uncle Darren's deployment to Iraq so much as the separation that might happen when he comes back in late 2006.

"I'm afraid things might be different when he comes home – or that he may not come home at all," the freshman in secondary education said.

Darren and 545 other soldiers of Kansas Army National Guard's 2nd Battalion, 137th Infantry, will be responsible for providing security to high level visitors passing through Iraq and operating the Joint Visitor's Bureau as part of Operation Iraqi Freedom.

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius said it takes a special person to make sacrifices for freedom.

"Our nation faces new challenges and, as a result, you have risen to meet those challenges," Sebelius, who flew in by helicopter for the ceremony, said. "I personally thank you for answering your country's call."

A detective with Kansas City, Kan. Police Department and a 1999 K-State graduate, Darren Koberlein, 34, had been out of the Army for 10 years when he found out he was being deployed in March.

Linda Koberlein, Darren's mother, said her son is well-trained to take care of the men in Iraq.

"We're proud that he's willing to serve his country," she said.

Linda brought a stack of tissues for the ceremony, while Darren's wife Natalie made sure all of his family and friends had yellow ribbons and flags.

Natalie Koberlein said birthdays and Christmas will be especially hard for her and the couple's two children, 11-year-old Brett and 10-year-old Brooke.

"There will be long days, but with family support, we'll get through it one day at a time," Natalie Koberlein said.

Darren said the hardest part will be the separation from his family in Kansas.

"It's not easy to be away from them for a week, let alone 18 months," he said.

Brooke said she will miss learning about computers from her dad, an interest they share, while Brett made a sign for his dad's departure which read "We love you" in large letters.

"I'm going to miss playing catch with my dad the most," Brett said.

Darren's family will be able to communicate with him via webcam while he is overseas, as well as writing letters and phone calls.

Darren said he has no fears about going to Iraq, even though this is his first deployment.

"We train hard and we're

Ramada to undergo 6-month renovations

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One of K-State's next-door neighbors is going to get a new name and facelift in coming months.

The Ramada Plaza Hotel, south of the K-State Student Union and across Anderson Avenue, will soon begin renovations and become a Holiday Inn Select, said John Rychlock, the hotel's general manager.

"They have a better reservation system, better marketing and better name-recognition," he said.

The hotel will remain open as it goes through a "huge renovation" that Rychlock said will turn the hotel into "one of the top hotels in the state."

Colin Noble owns the hotel and operates 25 hotels in the Midwest as part of Noble Hospitality, a hotel-management company.

Though he could not say when the work would be completed, he said the renovation should start immediately and expects the work to take about six months.

Steve Rangel, general manager of the Holiday Inn and Holidome, said the hotel on Fort Riley Boulevard will either remain a Holiday Inn or become a new franchise.

Noble said the Holiday Inn Select will offer superior accommodations, including branded coffees, a fitness center and service deals with FedEx and Kinkos.

"It means better beds, better vanities and better shower heads," he said, adding that the vanities will be granite and showers will include a massaging faucet.

K-State's administration has supported the idea of a higher-quality hotel next to the campus. Charles Reagan, associate to President Jon Wefald, said the administration likes the change.

"Our interest is in having a first-rate hotel next to the campus because we have so many visitors," he said.

Noble said once the work is done, Holiday Inn officials will inspect the hotel and if they approve it, the Holiday Inn sign will go up.

New Orleans residents evacuated Sunday

By Drew Henderson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With the threat of Hurricane Katrina approaching the Louisiana coast, New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin ordered an immediate evacuation of the city Sunday.

Hurricane Katrina is listed as a category 5 hurricane by the National Weather Center. It is producing winds of 175 mph and is likely to produce a storm surge of 20 to 25 feet, which could be enough to overwhelm the levee system of New Orleans.

Inside, Page 8
Read about the hurricane evacuation plan on page 8

"That's why we are taking this unprecedented move," Mayor Nagin said at a news conference that was broadcasted live Sunday afternoon. "The storm surge most likely will topple our levee system."

His cousins, Brian and Tera Evans, live just outside of New Orleans and flew to the nearly-deserted city Sunday.

"My cousin was in a hurry to get back from a wedding so that they can get their stuff and animals out," he said. "They left in a hurry this morning so they could get their animals."

He said while they were trying to get back to get their animals, they were unsure of whether planes would be able to land in New Orleans.

"They'll probably try to prepare a little and then get out," Holman said.

Nagin said the city and surrounding areas should expect complete loss of electricity and water services once the storm hits. Residents unable to evacuate the city can seek shelter around the city, with the superdome being the largest.

The mayor also mentioned the effect the hurricane will have on oil supply from Louisiana. Gov. Kathleen Blanco said Interstate 10, which was converted Saturday to make all lanes one way heading out of the city, is in total gridlock and she is urging people to travel north or east.

The National Weather Center said the effects of the hurricane will not be confined to the Gulf Coast. Other areas along the hurricane's predicted path include Mississippi, Alabama and parts of Tennessee, with torrential storms and flooding possible for the Ohio Valley and Great Lakes areas.

Sex Offender free-zones

At least four towns have banned sex offenders from living near schools, parks or playgrounds in New Jersey. At least 14 states have laws similar to these restrictions. Civil liberty advocates, defense attorneys and other experts agree that restricting where sex offenders can live may be unconstitutional.

Beef recalled

There is a minimal risk that the 1,856 pounds of beef shipped to the U.S. from Canada may have been infected with mad cow disease. Two weeks after the beef was shipped a Canadian audit found the cow was too old to be allowed into the U.S. Green Bay Dressed Beef of Green Bay, Wisconsin distributed the meat to wholesalers and are trying to find out how much beef ended up in retail stores.

Troops headed for Iraq

The Pentagon announced Wednesday that 1,500 paratroopers will be going to Iraq. The troop level was raised to help boost military support during the upcoming fall election. This is the third time the U.S. has raised troop levels. This deployment and last week's increase will raise the level to at least 140,000.

Hurricane Katrina leaves 3 dead

Hurricane Katrina reached Florida's shore Thursday leaving at least 3 people dead and more than 1 million without electricity. At 10 p.m. the maximum winds reached 75 mph. The storm was classified as a Category 1 hurricane and flooding became a major concern. Radar showed the hurricane was dumping 1 to 2 inches of rain an hour.

"Naked Boys"

A Wisconsin production of the "Naked Boys Singing" revue was shut down by Milwaukee police. Police said the center didn't have a required theater permit. The revue has run into similar troubles in other cities. The center says the police singled out the production because it is a gay organization. The center filed a claim against the city citing civil rights violations.

North Korea warns the U.S.

North Korea warned the U.S. Saturday to revoke the appointment of a special envoy on human rights. The warning stated that the new position could affect the international efforts to end the nuclear weapon program in North Korea. Jay Lefkowitz will be in charge of promoting efforts. The position is a part of the North Korean Human Rights Act that provides $24 million in aid. North Korea demanded that the envoy be "removed immediately."

Iraq's draft constitution signed

Iraq's constitutional committee signed the final draft of the constitution and submitted it to the National Assembly Sunday. Sunni Arab negotiators called the draft "illegal." They also asked the United Nations and Arab League to prevent the passage of the document. The draft will go to the Iraqi people and they will vote Oct. 15.

Counseling services offers many options for students

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The first week of class is over and many students breathed a sigh of relief as the weekend gave them a chance to escape the stress of a new school year.

Stress is found in many aspects of a student's life such as academic, social, professional. "I don't have a car down here, so I can't go anywhere unless it's on campus, which is stressful," Trisha Lutz, freshman in fashion design and marketing, said.

"There has been a lot of research to suggest that, actually, college is one of the most stressful times in people's lives, especially for people who are just entering college," he said. "That doesn't mean it's not a great time, you just have to take into account that it's a stressful time. At K-State we do an awful lot to help students deal with stress."

Counseling Services is an on-campus resource available to help overwhelmed students. It provides counselor consultations as well as a process known as biofeedback training.

Biofeedback training is a program that uses feedback from biological systems, such as skin temperature, heart rate, respiration and muscle tension to determine how individuals respond to stress levels. Using the results from the biofeedback laboratory, students develop self-regulation skills to apply in stressful situations.

Students' campus privilege fees cover the first four visits to Counseling Services. The fee for each additional visit is very low, Rathbun said.

Rathbun said research also suggests students may experience up to 250 stressors each day, though not all of these stressors are big or even bad.

"Stress can be good," Carol Kennedy, director of Health Promotion at Lafene Health Center, said. "We need stress to get through the day. A certain level of stress is good and natural."

It is when stress levels become unmanageable that a student should seek help, Kennedy said.

Three signs of too much stress are abnormal sleep patterns, lack of energy and lack of concentration, Rathbun said.

Stress can cause loss of appetite, muscle tension, frequent headaches, worsening of skin conditions, panic attacks and gastrointestinal problems – which may lead to ulcers.

Prolonged stress can also cause sadness and depression, paving the way toward a serious mental condition.

However, there are several ways students can deal with and decrease stress.

"The big three are getting enough sleep, exercise and what you eat, which is very important, as well as just taking some time to relax and do some fun things," Rathbun said.

The American Academy of Massage Therapy, 1130 Westloop Place, provides one of the most common types of relaxation – massage therapy.

Services offered through the clinic include 60-minute Swedish massages, 30-minute deep tissue massages and heated stone massages. Prenatal massage services are also available for women beyond the first trimester of their pregnancy. Trained specialists also provide on-site massage services to private parties.

Students at the Academy are trained in reflexology, the study of how hands and feet correspond to other parts of the body, such as the spine, the liver and the kidneys. Because hands and feet do correspond with other vital organs, massaging the hands and feet can actually relieve stress and help with the healing process, Sharon Miller, head massage educator, said.

"The posture (students) use to study with alone makes them great candidates for a massage just for the relaxation factor while studying for finals or tests or right afterwards," she said. "It's just a great way to relax their whole entire body, mind, spirit, everything.

Yoga and meditation are also good relaxation techniques, Kennedy said.

"Students who can relax should make that part of their daily routine. Relaxation is an excellent way to manage stress," she said. "Take some time to stop, reflect and try to relax."

Olympics help build friendships

By Kyle Lauridsen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Saturday afternoon's annual Jardine Olympics, along with many other campus events, signaled the beginning of another school year.

"At the beginning of every year we do one large program to get the residents to interact and help them meet their neighbors," Dawn Bentz, resident assistant at Jardine Apartment Complex, said.

The Olympics featured fun and games for the more than 100 attendees at the carnival-style event.

"We wanted the event to be fun for adults and children," Eric Neilson, Jardine assistant coordinator, said.

"There was a raffle for adults while the kids participated in other activities to win prizes."

Free food provided breaks for participants between games of ring toss and tug-o-war.

A street dance followed the games. Crowds of people made their way back to the complex to join the fun.

The purpose of the event goes beyond providing an enjoyable evening, however.

"We just want to help build a community throughout the complex," Neilson said. "There are a wide range of backgrounds, and it's fun to get together to kick things off."

On-campus help available for stressed students

Stress is a fact of college life.

Managing the stress of classes, work and socializing is key to succeeding in a collegiate environment.

K-State offers students resources to help manage stress and people to talk to when everything becomes too much to handle.

However, as students, it is important to not be afraid or ashamed to ask for help when it is needed.

Counseling Services allows four free visits to sit and talk with a professional about stress, classes, relationships or anything else.

If a certain class seems to be overwhelming, find a tutor. They are free and available through the Academic Assistance Center in Holton Hall.

Even if you don't want to use available on-campus resources, seek other means of relieving the stress of a semester.

Even taking a night off just to stay in and sleep can be a way of decreasing stress.

Methods for relieving individual stress vary from person to person, so it is best to find what works for you.

However, if you are having trouble reducing stress, finding help is preferable to burning out, failing classes and be forced to leave the university.

Although some may think seeking assistance is embarrassing, but don't let the resources you already pay for go to waste.

I fought the law

Speedster supporting several Kansas sheriff's departments with tickets

Well, they caught me.

Yes, thanks to the dedicated local yokel, I will once again pay to support the county sheriff's office.

LUCAS MADDY

All of you whose mothers or fathers work in local law enforcement, be thankful for my kind.

The new Impala that replaced the old Crown Vic, or an advancement in non-lethal weaponry like a Taser gun was partially funded by my driving indiscretion.

Any county between Norton and Manhattan, including Silver Lake, Kan., Rocky Mountain time zone, Wathena, Kan., Hays and numerous others have benefited. The following is a partial recap of Lucas Maddy's highway transgressions.

August 1998. Offense: turning a corner. Result: ticketed for underage driving with two passengers, nonfunctional turn signal, bald tires (wonder how that happened?), two seatbelt violations and a child restraint ticket because 12-year-old Kelli Johnson is short.

August 1998 (again). Offense: going to town to speak in thanks of being sent to leadership camp for model students . Result: "Speedometer doesn't work" is a weak excuse after hitting triple digits on the radar. He actually asked "Where's the fire, son?" Ticketed for underage driving, bald tires (previous ticket drained New Tire Fund) and speeding. Lawdog yanks keys, momma's taxi service notified son in need of ride. County decides six months of probation and one of brisk walking would do much to clear the mind.

June 2000. Honorable Mention. Offense: Undrivable vehicle. Result: Feed truck abandoned in highway ditch until daylight. Called buddy for a ride, went home with proof that eight written warnings can fit on the same piece of paper.

May 2001. Offense: Baby sister Molly deletes entire psychology term paper (and research) at 5 p.m., which must be retyped and delivered by 6 p.m. Result: Briefly considered evasive maneuvers but eventually halted to chat with Trooper Istus and receive written invitation to appear in court within three weeks to defend innocence. Innocence being a relative term, donation again given in name of least favorite charity.

April 2004. Offense: Enjoying brand-new highway near Osborne at 65 mph. Fail to notice limit signs of previous cow path still posted. Result: highly unsuccessful debate with officer. Current love interest's grandmother spies name of granddaughter's courting partner in police blotter. Affair ends.

Thanksgiving 2004. Offense: After sneaking 12-year-old brother out of school to kill his first deer, a rush must be made to return him for basketball practice at 4 p.m. Result: Fines really are doubled in work zones. At least he failed to notice the un-tagged deer in the back of the truck.

June 2005. Offense: Delayed braking. Result: Overzealous punk gives ticket for hitting bridge lanes at 46 mph where limit drops immediately from sixty-five to thirty. Claiming "transition braking" does little good. Mailed in fine with a pair of shiny Lincoln's and a note asking that my two cents be forwarded to the ticketing officer.

Yesterday 2005. Offense: Prolonged stupidity. By now I should have learned. There is no excuse. However, I am gaining a workable repertoire with Cloud County Sheriffs: ticket lowered by five mph because I immediately pulled into the pits. Dispatcher assured him I was familiar with the routine.

All in all, the concluding factor is a lack of parity and justice. Officers never hand out $50 bills to people traveling under the limit, do they? That's what we need: positive, not negative, reinforcement.

And justice?

Minutes after I got the ticket yesterday, a blue-haired biddy in a Corolla nearly blew me off the road at about eighty-five.

No justice.

Evolution should confirm one's faith

About 80 years ago, teaching evolution in schools violated many states' laws. In an ironic reversal of historic roles, the recent debate in Kansas has "evolved" into whether intelligent design should be taught in the same classrooms.

CHRISTINA FORSBERG

When studying evolution my freshman year of high school, the subject didn't seem like a big deal at the time. The class exposed no great rift between my personal belief in God and Darwin's theory of evolution. If anything, the knowledge I took away from that class confirmed my own faith without actual mention of intelligent design in the classroom. For many people, learning about the science behind the incredible order of the universe is a faith affirming experience.

So I'm rather baffled at the prospect of introducing intelligent design as a theory adverse to the theory of evolution. To me, presenting intelligent design as an alternative or even supplemental theory to evolution is like comparing an ongoing debate of an artist's identity to the process of creating art. Whether you reject or accept the theory of evolution, understanding that faith is reaffirmed by science is more plausible than treating faith and science as opposing concepts.

Looking at the grander scale of public education, school curriculums are far from lacking intelligent design in other courses. It can inevitably be seen in texts and concepts discussed in philosophy, literature and art classes. These class' structures allow for more freedom of thought because they delve into the human condition as opposed to number-crunching science and math courses.

As a practical matter, the Darwinian theory of evolution, by its scientific nature, limits the curriculum in science classes to the biological origin and development of species and leaves plenty of room for those who believe in intelligent design.

Though personal beliefs on the subject may vary from one individual to another, evolution doesn't conflict with intelligent design. Science is based on conclusive evidence and testable hypotheses. We learn about our world and draw reasoning by proving these hypotheses true or false over time and through repetition of testing for more accurate results. As recognition of evidentiary fact, science doesn't conflict with faith.

Intelligent design is a matter of faith. It can't be introduced into science classes veiled as a critical approach or alternative theory to evolution. By nature, faith has no physical provable means. Those who believe in a higher power have faith for the spiritual growth it fosters.

There would be no need for faith if physical evidence of God existed. Logically, science will never be able to prove that God doesn't exist. If anything, people of faith should find comfort in new scientific discoveries as further affirmation that there is a grand design to the universe, rather than live with old fears of new evidence as a threat.

Although often burdened by results too inconclusive to know for sure, there exists a theory stating that we are a reasonably intelligent species capable of contemplating both the material and the spiritual worlds. As individuals either with or without faith, we can handle the theory of evolution without the inclusion of intelligent design in the same classroom. We already have much better classrooms for that in our places of worship.

Perhaps someday believers and nonbelievers alike may evolve to a point of realizing that such ideas were not a threat to one another at all, but rather our mutual fear was.

Concert-goers hope to revitalize city music scene

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Six bands, music lovers and BMX bikers attended the Last Days of Chaos concert Friday in the Park Pavilion in City Park.

The concert was an opportunity to revitalize the Manhattan music scene, said Greg Monty, concert organizer and guitarist for the band Placate.

"We just wanted to start a movement in Manhattan," Monty said.

"There are some places to go for music, but it's hard to go to some of the 18-and-up places."

Organizing and promoting the concert was difficult, but Monty said he was pleased with the turnout.

"We didn't know what to expect," he said halfway through the concert.

"We handed out some 5,000 to 6,000 fliers and handbills. But we're happy with it so far."

Students playing hacky sack, bikers performing stunts on a ramp and audience members moshing to the hard rock guitar riffs were among the hundreds of people of all ages who showed up on Friday night to support local music.

Merging music and BMX biking seemed a perfect fit for the music scene, Chris Quintanar, drummer for Product of Theory, said.

"Music and biking coming together is a good idea," he said, "because that means more people will come out, and that can get more people to come out and support bands."

Including the BMX bike ramp brought out a different crowd for a concert, said Ty McNeil, lead singer of the Wichita-based band 4 King Stud.

"Coming from out of town, it's a lot more fun than playing at the bars," he said.

"Bringing out the BMX was good because there normally aren't as many moms and pops out here. There's more families and kids.

Hopefully the concert will create more of a buzz for the Manhattan music scene, McNeil said.

"(The Manhattan music scene is) dying, and it's dying fast," McNeil said.

"The bands here are fine, a lot of them can rock. "But the problem is with the promoters. It doesn't seem that they're giving money to the bands.

That's why I think this concert is cool is because two guys from local bands are organizing and promoting it."

Since this is the first concert the group has organized, there were a few problems, promoter Jesse Pickett said.

"We had some equipment problems," he said.

"The PA system shut down three times in the beginning and that set us back 30 minutes.

"There are things that need improvement. The first time things can't always run to perfection.

It was a learning experience," Pickett said.

Monty said there are already plans for a future concert.

"We're hoping to do one in Aggieville, where Bombers burned down," he said.

Causes of Aniston-Pitt breakup left open to speculation

AMY BOLTON

Almost everyone who reads the paper or watches the news knows Hollywood's once-golden couple, Brad Pitt and Jennifer Aniston, are getting a divorce.

No one but the couple knows the true cause of the break-up, but rumors have been spreading that Aniston refused to have children and Pitt had an affair with Angelina Jolie, his co-star in "Mr. and Mrs. Smith."

For months, Pitt and Aniston kept quiet about the details of what happened, until Aniston met with Vanity Fair magazine and blabbed to the world.

Although she tells the magazine, "I don't feel like a victim," it's clear that the point of the interview was for Aniston to be pitied.

She said Pitt began filming "Mr. and Mrs. Smith" with Jolie at the same time Aniston ended her 10-year run as Rachel on "Friends." Apparently it was a very painful time for her, and Pitt became emotionally unavailable.

"He just wasn't there for me," she is quoted as saying.

When the subject of Pitt's 60-page photo spread with Jolie in W Magazine comes up, in which they pose as a 1960's married couple, Aniston said the reason he participated in the photo shoot without thinking of how Aniston would feel about it is because "there's a sensitivity chip that's missing."

The article is also full of Aniston's friends bashing Pitt.

"I think Jen wanted to work it out, and I don't think he wanted to work it out. I don't think he knew what he wanted," Bendewald is quoted saying.

Courtney Cox, Aniston's good friend and former co-star on Friends, told Vanity Fair, "I don't think he started an affair physically, but I think he was attracted to [Jolie]."

Aniston claimed she believed Pitt when he said he did not have an affair with Jolie.

"I choose to believe my husband," Vanity Fair quoted her saying.

But she clearly doesn't believe him, or want anyone else to, because her next words were: "At this point, I wouldn't be surprised by anything, but I would much rather choose to believe him."

I understand Aniston is upset her marriage is over, but should she really talk about the details of her break-up to the entire world?

Instead of taking the high road, refusing to comment on what went wrong and moving on with her life (as Pitt has done), Aniston decided to set the record straight on her own terms, without giving Pitt the chance to respond or defend himself.

As for Pitt's missing sensitivity chip when he did the photo shoot with Jolie? I think Aniston removed her sensitivity chip before talking to Vanity Fair.

Pitt and Jolie were doing their job. Actors can't just film a movie and be done. They also have to promote the movie, which is what they were doing for the photo spread.

Aniston didn't do this interview for any professional promotion. She had only one agenda: to be the pitied victim.

Yeah, real mature, Jen.

Aniston should have kept quiet about the details of her marriage and divorce, like Pitt has. Trashing him in front of the world only proves she is a spoiled Hollywood star who throws a fit when she doesn't get her way.

Wildcats will be better than their 4-7 effort

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This is the week K-State football fans have been waiting for.

It's been eight months and nine days since the unspeakable season-ending loss to Iowa State, and after an offseason of wondering, worrying and waiting, the 2005 season begins this Saturday.

MICHAEL ASHFORD

In less than five days the fans will pack into KSU Stadium, with their purple shirts and hats, ready for another season of Wildcat football.

Can you feel the anticipation?

You can almost hear the roar of the purple masses as public address announcer Ivan Wilkinson asks the crowd, "K-State fans, are you ready?"

They're ready to see a new K-State football team. They're ready to swallow the lump that has sat in their throat ever since last season ended with that miserable 4-7 record.

They're ready.

One thing is certain: the Wildcats will be better in 2005.

There. It's been said, it's out there for the world to see.

K-State football will be back.

"How is this possible?" you ask. It's possible because there are three key areas where the 2005 Wildcats have answered looming questions this offseason, which should make any K-State fan sleep a little better in the coming week.

1. The Wildcats have attitude.

It's no secret the 2004 K-State football teamed lacked a certain level of emotion and fire when it came to making plays on Saturdays.

The effort, desire and leadership – characteristics of Bill Snyder-led squads – were sorely lacking.

Far too often last season, games were lost because of a lack of effort and heart, especially when it came to the fourth quarter.

Specifically, one can look at the Kansas, Oklahoma, Colorado and Iowa State losses, and it is safe to say if the Wildcats had the attitude of past K-State teams, K-State would've had at least two more wins.

Over the offseason, the Wildcats revived the attitude missing from last year's team.

"This team is going to be surprising," junior linebacker Maurice Mack said. "I just think our whole attitude is way different than it was last year. We're going to be a lot better team and surprise a lot of people."

2. The defense will be improved.

Last season, nowhere was the drop-off more alarming than on defense.

From 1996 to 2003, the Wildcats had been ranked in the top 10 defensively each year.

In 2004, K-State fell hard, falling from No. 6 in 2003 to No. 43 nationally, mainly because of an inability to wrap-up and tackle.

The Wildcat players are adamant the same will not be accepted in 2005.

"It's no lie that last year, our defense had problem tackling," sophomore safety Marcus Watts said. "But we've addressed the issue. We've got a plan, and we're working on that plan right now, and we're going to keep working on it, and I think we'll be ready."

3. K-State has the talent to fill in for Darren Sproles.

Sproles will not be replaced. He is, by far, the best running back ever to don the purple. If it weren't for Terence Newman, he would be the best athlete too.

But even with Sproles' departure to the NFL, the Wildcats have the horses in the backfield to collectively make up for the yardage Sproles provided.

With four capable backs in Thomas Clayton – the likely starter – Parrish Fisher, Carlos Alsup and Donnie Anders, K-State will not struggle for rushing yards as much as the outsiders believe.

And besides, as Fisher said, the running backs goal will not be replacing Sproles, but making a name for themselves.

"Nobody has to be like Sproles and try to do the things that he did or try to be him," Fisher said. "We all are just going to be ourselves and do what we can do and see where that takes us. No one really tries to fill Darren's shoes because we all know that there is only one Darren Sproles."

For the Wildcats to rebound from last year, these three questions had to be answered. It appears Snyder and his troops have solved the puzzle, and are ready to showcase the results this Saturday.

Senior Agata Rezende leads charge as K-State starts out 3-0

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's volleyball team opened its season by sweeping the Clarion Hotel/Missouri State Fall Invitational with wins against Arkansas-Little Rock on Friday and St. Louis and Missouri State on Saturday in Springfield, Mo.

K-State, ranked No. 26 in the preseason USA Today/CSTV poll, is now 3-0 for the year. Coach Suzie Fritz said she was happy with how her team opened the season.

"I was very pleased," she said. "We came out and got three wins. We got a nice win against Missouri State, they really pushed us to the limit, but I thought we played with a lot of composure. We got better as the weekend went on and I though we grew up a lot.

"It was a nice weekend for us with so many new faces to go out and have some success and gain some confidence."

In their closest match, the Cats outlasted Missouri State, formerly Southwest Missouri State, 30-26, 35-33 and 30-28 in the late game Saturday.

"Missouri State was the best team we faced all weekend," Fritz said. "They have a nice veteran team; they're very competitive and have a great defense, probably comparable to some Big 12 teams."

In the early Saturday game, K-State completed sweep number two, topping St. Louis 30-22, 30-18 and 30-21.

Werner led the Wildcats with 12 kills, with Rezende adding another 11. Sophomore middle blocker Rita Lilliom recorded six kills to go along with a team-leading eight digs. Spiegelberg finished with another 40 assists for the match.

Courtesy Sports Information

In their first match on Friday, the Cats swept Arkansas-Little Rock, 30-22, 30-27 and 30-15. Rezende paced K-State with 15 kills and five blocks. Spiegelberg chipped in with career highs in assists (41) – which she broke Saturday – kills (five) and service aces (three). Lastra tallied 16 digs.

As a team, K-State had a .391 hitting percentage and 22 blocks.

Fritz said Rezende's play was a spark for the Cats throughout the entire weekend, and Kroeker's debut performance against Missouri State was also impressive.

"Agata played fabulously," Fritz said. "She hit above .300 every match and was a huge part of our success. I'm very proud of the way Megan Kroeker is developing, she had a nice weekend."

The Cats return to action this weekend in the C&C Service Arkansas Invitational in Fayetteville, Ark.

Fritz said the team has plenty to work on between now and then, as the tournament over the weekend showed some potential weaknesses.

"We need to continue to do the things we're doing right now, work on details and some of the lessons we learned this weekend, things we're not very good at," she said. "There's still a lot of room for improvement. We answered some questions, but we still have a ways to go, some maturing to do."

Young squad ready for season

Tamar Kvaratskhelia returns a volley during her match against Texas last spring. Kvaratskhelia is one of five sophomores on the women's tennis team.

Christopher Hanewinckel
COLLEGIAN

By Matt Gorney
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After a disappointing season last spring, the women's tennis team is looking forward to an improved fall.

"We're just beginning to find out what everyone has accomplished or not accomplished over the summer," Coach Steve Bietau said.

Bietau said injuries played a big part in the turbulent outing last spring, and will hopefully be avoided this year.

"Last year we had pretty good talent and some major injuries and lost – for part of the year – one player who contributed significantly and – for most of the year – another player," he said. "So we thought we were going to have a pretty good team last year and unfortunately, injuries played a bigger part in that than we would have liked.

"We have been running now, and we are starting to play tennis the end of (this) week," Klimova said. "The first part of the season is just about fitness and working hard on that because then, the season is long so we have to be ready for playing matches all season."

With Jessica Simosa the only senior on the team, young players will see extensive playing time, which Klimova said could benefit the squad.

"I would say we might be stronger than last year," Klimova said. "I think it's not going to hurt the team that they are younger."

Bietau said depth shouldn't be an issue, with nine players filling out the Wildcat roster.

"From a depth standpoint, we're in better shape than we've been in a long time," he said. "From an experience standpoint, seven players on our roster are freshmen and sophomores."

He added it was too early to determine which player would be stepping into the No. 1 spot.

"I'm sure there are plenty of people who want to be in the (No. 1) spot; Tamar Kvaratskhelia is our top returning player," Bietau said. "However, the No. 1 position – and every position at this point – is an open question and will remain an open question for some time."

"We have a competition in about a month and somebody will play No. 1 at that tournament, but we could easily have someone else playing No. 1 at the tournament a week later, and the same thing a couple of weeks later," Bietau said. "So, the issue of who's No. 1 is on the back burner for now."

Last season may not have been as successful as hoped, but Bietau said the season went as well as possible given the nicks and bruises the Wildcats suffered.

"We didn't play great because there were matches that were winnable that we didn't win. So, every year we look to maximize what ability we have, and that doesn't change," he said.

MLB | Giambi drives in seven as Yankees blast K.C.

NEW YORK — Jason Giambi broke out of a 4-for-38 slump with a pair of home runs and drove in seven runs Sunday, leading the New York Yankees to a 10-3 victory and a sweep of their weekend series with the Kansas City Royals.

Giambi's 22nd home run came in the third inning against loser Zack Greinke, following singles by Hideki Matsui and Alex Rodriguez. It gave Giambi 1,000 RBIs for his career.

Two innings later, he connected again for his 23rd homer and 1,500th career hit, this time after another hit by Rodriguez. It was the sixth multihomer game of the season for Giambi and the 29th of his career.

MLB | Griffey tries to quiet trade rumors

Ken Griffey Jr. is trying to cool down rumors that trade talks about the center fielder between the Chicago White Sox and Cincinnati Reds are heating up.

Griffey

"I'm not going to Chicago," Griffey told The Dayton Daily News on Saturday night. "I'm in Pittsburgh with the Cincinnati Reds, and that's where I'm staying."

Radio and television reports in Chicago said that trade talks between the two teams are simmering.

The Daily News reported Sunday that the White Sox did call the Reds again this week about Griffey and even offered to take on more of Griffey's salary, but were refused.

MLB | Sosa placed on disabled list with toe injury

BALTIMORE — Sammy Sosa was placed on the 15-day disabled list Sunday by the Baltimore Orioles, who decided against taking a wait-and-see stance on the toe injury that has sidelined the slumping slugger since Thursday.

Sosa

Sosa had a lesion removed from underneath the nail of his right big toe on Friday. It's similar to an injury that forced him out of action in 2003, when he was with the Chicago Cubs.

Two years ago, Sosa was on the disabled list from May 10 to 30 after having surgery to remove the nail from the same toe.

NFL | Eagles excuse Owens from charity event for injury

PHILADELPHIA — Terrell Owens was excused from attending the Philadelphia Eagles' charity carnival Sunday because of a groin injury. Left tackle Tra Thomas also was excused because he has back spasms.

Owens

Owens missed several practices in training camp after injuring his left groin. However, he was exiled for a week after a heated dispute with coach Andy Reid in which part of the argument stemmed from Owens' refusal to sign autographs with the rest of the receivers following a practice at Lehigh University.

Owens missed the first preseason game because he wasn't with the team and was kept out of the second one to rest his injured groin.

CBB | Wooden will no longer participate in award

LOS ANGELES — Hall of Fame coach John R. Wooden, who led UCLA to 10 national championships, says that for the first time in nearly three decades he won't present the prestigious collegiate player of the year award bearing his name, due to a dispute with the group that sponsors the prize.

The 94-year-old Wooden, however, said he won't contest the use of his name for the award.

"I don't want anything to interfere with the continuation of the award," he told The Associated Press on Saturday.

Los Angeles Athletic Club President Steve Hathaway, whose group sponsors the award in concert with Wooden, said the dispute concerned Wooden's decision to lend his name to an unrelated award in January.

Astronomy club organized

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students can now study the stars and planets in an astronomy club at K-State.

Laura Heyd, senior in elementary education, attended a Student Senate meeting to request status as an official K-State club. She was told to organize a meeting and if enough people expressed interest, the group could become a club.

At the first meeting on Friday, at least 10 students attended, exceeding the requirement for a club.

The group, open to all K-State students, elected officers and set up future activities.

Heyd was elected president of the club and Mindy Gratny, senior in physics, was elected vice president. Amanda Brown, junior in electrical engineering, was elected secretary and Lynn Lindquist, freshman in theater, was elected treasurer.

The group of graduate and undergraduate students will meet once every two months and will also meet to view the stars.

The club decided to set up a solar scope for students interested in viewing the sun. The solar scope will be set up at a later date in front of Cardwell Hall.

The group is also planning a possible trip to New Mexico in January to visit various astrological sites.

The trip will be led by Todd Tuttle, president of the North Central Astronomical Society.

"Todd is remarkable for his enthusiasm," Chris Sorensen, distinguished professor of physics, said.

There are many places of interest in New Mexico, including the Very Large Array. The VLA is located on the plains of San Agustin, 50 miles west of Socorro, N.M. It consists of 27 radio antennas in a Y-shaped configuration.

Throughout the year, the group will make trips away from the lights of Manhattan to view the night skies.

"Some people stay for just 15 minutes, others stay for three or four hours," Sanjeev Uruppattur, graduate student in electrical engineering, said.

Louisiana Superdome place of refuge for stranded residents

By Mary Foster
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW ORLEANS – The mayor ordered an immediate evacuation Sunday for all of New Orleans, a city sitting below sea level with 485,000 inhabitants, as Hurricane Katrina bore down with wind revving up to nearly 175 mph and threats of a massive storm surge.

Acknowledging that large numbers of people, many of them stranded tourists, would be unable to leave before the eye of the storm strikes land sometime Monday morning, the city set up 10 places of last resort including the Superdome.

"This is a once in a lifetime event," Mayor Ray Nagin said. "The city of New Orleans has never seen a hurricane of this magnitude hit it directly."

The mayor said a direct hit by Katrina's storm surge would likely top the levees that protect the city from the surrounding water of Lake Pontchartrain, the Mississippi River and marshes.

The bowl-shaped city must pump water out even during normal times, and the hurricane threatened electricity that runs the pumps.

"We are facing a storm that most of us have long feared," Nagin said.

President Bush pledged federal support.

Rain started falling on extreme southeastern Louisiana by midday Sunday as the storm moved across the Gulf of Mexico toward land.

Highways in Mississippi and Louisiana were jammed as people headed away from Katrina's expected landfall. All lanes were limited to northbound traffic on Interstates 55 and 59 in the two states.

Beyond the Gulf Coast, Katrina was "unmitigated bad news for consumers" because it had shut down offshore production of at least 1 million barrels of oil daily and threatened refinery and import operations around New Orleans, said Peter Beutel, an oil analyst in New Canaan, Conn. He said crude oil could top $70 a barrel by Monday or Tuesday.

If Katrina maintained its strength, it would be only the fourth Category 5 hurricane on record to strike the United States.

"I'm really scared. I've been through hurricanes, but this one scares me," Linda Young, 38, said as she filled her gas tank at one New Orleans station. "I think everybody needs to get out."

"Have God on your side, definitely have God on your side...It's very frightening," said Nancy Noble, sitting in snail's-pace traffic on Interstate 10 heading for Natchez, Miss. She and three others were packed in a car with a puppy and their essential papers.

At 11 a.m. EDT, the National Hurricane Center said Katrina's maximum sustained wind speed had stepped up to nearly 175 mph, with higher gusts. The hurricane's eye was about 225 miles south-southeast of the mouth of Mississippi River.

The mayor said people who opted to go to the Superdome should take enough food and supplies to last three to five days. He said police and firefighters would fan out throughout the city telling residents to get out and that police would have the authority to commandeer any vehicle or building that could be used for evacuation or shelter.

Waving to his family Staff Sergeant, Mark Schmeltz, of the 2nd Battalion, 137th Infantry, Kansas Army National Guard, sits with his unit at Bramlage Coliseum Sunday afternoon. Soldiers in this unit were honored with a ceremony that included a special address from the Gov. Kathleen Sebelius.

prepared for what's to come," he said. "The community should be proud of Kansas National Guard. We're well-trained and we'll make them proud."

This is also the first deployment for Spc. Anthony Carver, whose wife Angela said adjustment will be a part of coping with her husband's deployment.

"I'll know he's out there with a purpose, and I'll be praying everyday that he's out there safely," she said.

Angela Carver said their two children, Aislynn and A.J., as well as other family members, are proud of Anthony.

"He does his duties to the exact," she said. "Without the other soldiers, he wouldn't be able to do his mission."

Maj. Gen. Tod Bunting said soldiers like Koberlein and Carver uphold Kansas' tradition of quality soldiers.

As a part of Operation Iraqi Freedom, Bunting said the soldiers will "make sure Iraqi citizens continue to choose their own measures."

Professor helps keep soldiers, citizens safe

Early bomb detection

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Bill Dunn, associate professor in mechanical and nuclear engineering, is developing technology to better detect bombs. The project was developed to protect soldiers in war from putting themselves at risk of injury or death.

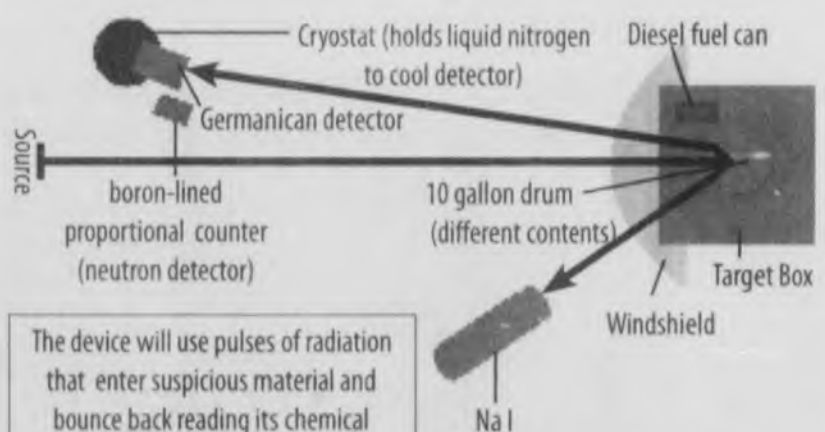
By Kyle Lauridsen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Keeping American troops posted in Iraq safe is the focus of one K-State professor's research. Last fall, Bill Dunn, associate professor in mechanical and nuclear engineering, was approached by M2Technologies for aid in developing better bomb detection.

M2Technologies develops non-lethal weapons and capabilities. John Blair, program manager for the research contract with the university, is heading the project on M2Technologies side.

"We were looking to develop a protective strategy to help protect civilians from harm," Blair said.

Nearly a year later, enormous strides have been taken toward the completion of the project.



"Our goal is to develop technology that can distinguish explosive materials from other things in a car, and I think we can," Dunn said.

Dunn said the device will use pulses of radiation that will enter the suspicious material and bounce back, reading its chemical composition and density.

Many explosives have similar elemental composition and technology is being designed to look for elemental patterns of hydrogen

Junction City monument staying put

By JP Wilson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Ten Commandments monument remains outside the municipal building in Junction City, and City Manager Rod Barnes said it is staying put.

"The City Commission feels very strongly in family and God, and they just don't feel like they should have to move it," he said.

Junction City has received requests to remove the monument and add other religious monuments, but Barnes said the City Commission will not allow another monument to be placed on the grounds.

"It will come down to an issue of whether they will keep the Ten Commandments there or move them," Barnes said.

Not everyone is behind the City Commission's decision to keep the monument on government property. The city received complaints about the monument after the U.S. Supreme Court handed down rulings about similar displays in Kentucky and Texas over the summer.

"The City Commission feels very strongly in family and God and they just don't feel like they should have to move it."

Rod Barnes
CITY MANAGER FOR JUNCTION CITY

"Additions of secular items to the display would not save the display if the additions were merely a sham to protect the monument for religious reasons," said Joseph Thai, former law clerk for U.S. Supreme Court Justices John Paul Stevens and Byron R. White and associate professor of law at the University of Oklahoma.

The Supreme Court found a display in Texas was constitutional because it was a display of various historical items, and the Ten Commandments was one part of the display. The Supreme Court did not find evidence the Ten Commandments were displayed for religious reasons.

In contrast, the displays at the Kentucky courthouses were placed there to further a religious purpose, and the Supreme Court found them unconstitutional. After the suit was filed, historic items were added to the displays to change the purpose of the display. The Supreme Court found the purpose for the monument's placement was not altered by the addition of these items.

Whether Ten Commandments displays should be placed on government property is not a new issue. Manhattan City Hall had a Ten Commandments monument almost identical to the monument in Junction City.

Barnes said the displays were gifts from the same organization at about the same time period. The Manhattan monument was removed from City Hall to Manhattan Christian College in May 2001.

Nick Arena, senior in political science, remembers when the Ten Commandments monument was at Manhattan City Hall.

"There was a petition with over 4,000 signatures

Old Chicago new in town

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan now has a slice of Old Chicago.

A revolving door, weathered wood floors and aged brick walls covered in memorabilia greeted customers who stopped by, along with waits of up to an hour.

The restaurant, featuring pizza, pasta and 110 types of beer from 20 countries, celebrated its grand opening to the public Monday.

"During lunch, we had a pretty steady flow, but there wasn't a wait," Allison Childs, sophomore in pre-health, said while she helped seat a steady crowd of customers.

Steve Hohl, the general manager for Old Chicago, said he was pleased with the first day of business.

"Opening day was great," he said. "We had a lot of business people and a lot of families, which is the mix we were looking for."

Even though Monday was the grand opening for the general public, Liesl Schauf, sophomore in secondary education, said there had been private dinners Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

One of the events was a private charity for the Flint Hills Bread Basket, which raised more than $3,000.

Along with Chicago-style deep dish, stuffed and thin crust pizzas, Old Chicago also features a World Beer Tour.

When a customer purchases their first beer from the collection, they are given a card.

For each additional beer purchased, the card is scanned, with prizes along the way.

Dan Myers, sophomore in horticulture, stopped by for dinner Monday evening and said the calzone he had was "delicious."

"I also started the World Beer Tour," Myers said. "Two down, 108 to go."

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Mason Gray, bartender at Old Chicago, serves one of the 110 beers the restaurant offers. When guests visit Old Chicago, they can start a World Beer Tour card that will keep track of how many of the 110 different beers they drink with prizes give to people as they reach certain levels.

K-State researchers investigate beetle's exoskeleton

Courtesy photo

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A team of K-State researchers recently composed a paper detailing their discoveries of the components and makeup of the red flour beetle's exoskeleton.

The researchers include Yasuyuki Arakane, research associate in biochemistry; Subbarat Muthukrishnan, professor of biochemistry; Richard Beeman, adjunct professor of entomology; Michael Kanost, professor and head of the Department of Biochemistry; and Karl Kramer, adjunct professor emeritus of biochemistry.

After a beetle molts, a hard protective shell, called an exoskeleton, forms. The hardening and darkening of the shell, called cuticle tanning, has long been a mystery and controversy for scientists and researchers.

"It's the biochemistry of the insect exoskeleton," Kramer said. "It's a project on skeletal physiology."

The mystery, Kramer said, is not only how the exoskeleton forms but also how it withstands harsh conditions.

"Somehow they survive pretty much whatever we throw at them," Kramer said.

While many guessed the enzyme responsible was one called laccase, Kramer said no hard evidence could prove this.

With the recent availability of the red flour beetle's genome, researchers have jumped at the chance to discover the exoskeleton's hardening enzyme. By using a technique called RNA interference, enzymes could be knocked out of use, stopping the hardening process of the exoskeleton.

To perform the experiment, each insect is injected with a small glass needle and a minute amount of liquid.

Research showed by removing the laccase-2 enzyme from the beetle, the outer shell became practically non-existent.

"Sure enough, the cuticle did not harden, and the insect eventually died," Kramer said.

Muthukrishnan said the shell's hardening and darkening were absent after laccase-2 was removed, evident with a mere glance at the beetle.

"The most dramatic thing, instead of being nicely brown, it's practically albino," Muthukrishnan said.

While this breakthrough will help scientists understand more about the growth and development of insects, the information will also be beneficial in understanding the infrastructure of this creature.

"We're always looking for the physiology of insects that is a bit special," Kramer said.

Additionally, this work will play a role in fabricating tailor-made pesticides.

"It will open up a new way of targeting genes in a very selective manner," Muthukrishnan said.

Because of the apparent lack of laccase in humans, Kanost said a pesticide could be made that would not be toxic to the public.

"As far as we know, vertebrates don't have laccase," Kanost said. "If we could find a chemical that would have laccase, a chemical that could block the process, that could be useful as a pesticide."

But pesticides and insect development are merely the tip of the iceberg. Researchers are collaborating with University of Kansas professor Steven Gehrke to look at new kinds of material that could be made from knowing about the hardening process.

"This kind of chemistry we can explore to see if we can make artificial cuticle," Kanost said. "It's a material that's light but strong, which is kind of a useful thing."

Professors publish own low-cost textbooks

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Joseph Unekis wrote the book on U.S. Politics – literally.

He is among several K-State professors who prefer to do it themselves when it comes to the textbooks used in their classes.

"I didn't like what the other ones were saying," Unekis, associate professor in political science, said.

His book, "People, Problems and Power: A Concise Introduction to American Politics," is in its third edition.

Dan Walter, textbook manager at Varney's Book Store and the K-State Student Union Bookstore, estimated five percent of texts sold by Varney's are written by K-State faculty.

Unekis said he started work on the book in 1989, but didn't get serious with it until a decade later. When he finished it, he found it difficult to find a national publisher because competition was stiff.

"There are over 100 U.S. politics textbooks out there," he said.

He kept at it, and it came out as a complete book in 2002 through Thomson Custom Publishing.

Unekis takes no royalties from the sale of his book and uses no graphics or pictures, which would cost money in royalties and printing, to keep the price low. It now sells at the K-State Union Bookstore for $34.50.

Clark said he takes a small royalty from the sale of the book to help him recoup the cost of the software he used to do the design. The book is printed by the Kendall/Hunt Publishing Co. and sells for $25.

Many departments create their own class materials. Students taking Expository Writing 1 and 2 use workbooks made from faculty texts and student writing examples.

"It gives students a little more time than to have to scramble to get everything written down in their notes," said Roger Trenary, an economics instructor who has the Union Copy Center print and sell notes for his Introduction to Macroeconomics class.

TO THE POINT

Junction City needs to decide fate of statue

Religious symbols are everywhere.

"In God We Trust" is boldly depicted on money in the United States and the Statue of Liberty is modeled from the Roman goddess, Libertas.

So why is it such a sin to have a monument to the Ten Commandments in front of the Junction City Courthouse?

After all, some laws in the United States are based on the very principles of the Ten Commandments, such as thou shalt not kill and thou shalt not steal.

This may be a question of the separation of church and state, but it is up to the city managers of Junction City to decide whether the monument stays or goes.

If it bothers some to see it in front of the courthouse, there's a simple answer – look away.

This is a smart move. Why take the time and energy to move the monument when it's not physically hurting anybody?

If they were forced to move the monument, it could become a Supreme Court case and cause more of a headache than it's worth.

Yes, Manhattan moved their ten commandment statue from the courthouse to the front of Manhattan Christian College, but Junction City should not be forced to do the same.

If they want to leave it there, it's completely up to them.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Tyrants on campus

Random drug testing being taken too far by high school principals

JONAS HOGG

Something stinks in Maize, and it smells like tyranny.

In fact, the odor seems to be spreading throughout Kansas.

Maize High School has joined three other public schools that can now mandate drug testing. Any student who wishes to participate in extra-curricular activities must now provide body fluids on command from a school official if that student is "suspected of being under the influence of drugs or alcohol."

However, Maize High School is merely the tip of the police-state iceberg. Ulysses, Scott City and Galena have begun random drug testing of their captive student population.

This encroachment of the nanny-state into the lives of our children is a despicable act and we must not allow it to go unpunished.

Our children are being entrapped by malicious policies like these. Laws require they attend the school, and once there, they are to be questioned, prodded, poked, pried, searched, sniffed by dogs, and now, forced to acquiesce to drug test if they wish to participate in activities funded by the taxpayers.

It is a frightening realization that our children are being treated much the same as we treat our prisoners. Cameras observe their movements. Police and guards stand in the halls. And the final insult? Students' bodily fluids are no longer their own.

We act surprised that students don't attend classes, avoid school and many who do attend are some of our poorest performing students in our nation's history. Who can fathom why? They are forced to go daily to a place where every move is scrutinized and every action monitored. Where not bowing to the wishes of some Generalissimo beamed through the speaker system results in being treated like a criminal.

Oh boy, sign me up!

The actions of today's school districts are senseless attempts to exert further control over students. We would ridicule any parent who placed a camera in a child's bedroom. We would jail any parent who attempted to force bodily fluid out of a child. Yet, we gladly agree to all this and more for the schooling system.

While it is logical to surrender the point that athletes, for the purpose of fair play, might need to be tested for performance enhancing drugs (especially given the stellar role-models that professional players are), it is wrong to assume someone is ineligible to perform in the school's production of Guys and Dolls because of what they choose to do outside the auspices of the increasingly omnipresent public school systems.

This wretched behavior should be harshly punished. Not by letters, and not by meetings. Those who helped craft these policies should be immediately fired, including the principal of Maize High School, Teresa Ott, and the superintendent, Dr. Craig Elliot, along with the principals and superintendents of Ulysses, Scott City and Galena, as well as anyone else responsible. We can only lament that Kansas will not authorize use of the electric chair for these would-be dictators. We have traveled around the world to rid countries of tyrants. Now, let us weed our own yard for a while.

Shame on these school systems, and shame on the parents who allow their children to be treated in such a manner. This ill-mannered public school system needs to be beaten back to its proper role – education. Regulation is for the prison system.

New textbook prices draining students' finances

JACI BOYDSTON

College students have a lot to gripe about these days.

As if constantly rising tuition rates weren't bad enough, a government report released last week confirmed what everyone who's been brought to tears by a trip to Varney's Book Store already knows: textbook prices are up – way up.

According to an Aug. 17 article in the Boston Globe, the U.S. Government Accountability Office found the average price of textbooks has risen six percent in the past 15 years. That's more than double the rate of inflation.

Contributing to this problem is the huge increase in extra features publishers attach to textbooks. CD-ROMs, workbooks, study aides and all the other bells and whistles students throw away after the first day of class drive up the cost of books without enriching students' educational experiences.

Even more problematic for students is the common practice of updating textbooks every year or semester. This gouges wallets at both ends – when a new edition comes out, students finishing the course are unable to sell back the old version, and students starting the course have to pay full price for a new textbook, in lieu of finding a cheaper, used version.

Rarely is a new edition of a textbook necessary or even worth the trouble of revising and reprinting it. In the past year alone, I have had to fork out nearly $200 for two newly updated mass communications books, and I'm absolutely certain the only additions made to either one were hastily written paragraphs about Janet Jackson's boob.

Now, I understand the immense cultural significance attached to that particular breast, but was a four-sentence discussion of it really worth the extra $100 I probably spent on those updated editions?

Shoddy publicity stunts aside, there are hundreds of other equally unnecessary reasons for forcing students to spend money on new editions of textbooks. Sometimes the only update made is the addition of a supplementary CD-ROM that 90 percent of students won't even take out of the plastic wrapping. And just try selling one of those babies back to Varney's without the CD inside – they'll laugh in your face.

Excluding some high-tech, rapidly evolving fields of study, most disciplines don't change enough in a given year to warrant a whole new book. Algebra? Spanish? What changes in those fields? Unless "hola" suddenly stops meaning "hi," there are few (if any) good reasons to impose the financial burden of requiring students to buy entirely new textbooks.

In that same vein, if an academic field experiences a breakthrough somewhat more significant than a tacky wardrobe malfunction, pricey revised editions of textbooks would be justified and even necessary. If scientists discover intelligent life on Mars or if historians find documents proving the South actually won the Civil War, I'd be more than happy to buy an updated science or history book, and I think most students would feel the same way.

Although we all have different reasons for attending a state university, one of the things that makes going here such a smart decision is its comparative low cost of attendance.

If students are forced to continue wasting money on new and improved textbooks with no more educational value than the ones they replaced, our school becomes much less of a bargain.

No boob is worth all this trouble.

Manhattan to review downtown redevelopment plans this week

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The City of Manhattan will go through another series of downtown redevelopment meetings this week.

Several downtown businesses have shown concerns about the last redevelopment conference in the past month.

The meetings are scheduled today and Wednesday.

Jason Hilgers, assistant city manager and redevelopment coordinator, said the meetings will review past meeting discussions and focus on preliminary analysis of the Fourth Street and other improvements.

HWS Consulting Group and redevelopment architects are going to show project models and work with the ideas of the public for the reconstruction, Hilgers said.

According to the Chamber of Commerce, project hopefuls are looking at bringing in larger retailers, including Best Buy, Bed Bath & Beyond, Dress Barn, World Market and many other companies.

A possibility of a new Spring Hill Suites will build a new 110-room hotel toward the south end of the redevelopment project.

Several restaurant chains will be considered, including LongHorn Steakhouse, Johnny Carino's Country Italian, Red Robin Gourmet Burgers, IHOP and Hereford House.

Parking will also be reconstructed in the downtown area.

Hilgers said the redevelopment project is still in the preliminary stages of development.

Once consultant firms pass through an approval of the project, the Manhattan City Commission will put the final approval on the redevelopment.

New cell phone designed for pre-teens

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As wireless phones become a right of passage for modern-day teens, a new company is wanting to help extend that privilege to adolescents.

Firefly Mobile is offering a new service to parents who want to keep in touch with their kids but need a way to keep a lid on their kids' yapping. Its phones, named for their blinking lights and ability to glow in the dark, sell for $99 online or through local retailers.

Luke Perez, employee at Target in Topeka, the nearest Firefly retailer, said the service plan is pay-as-you-go. Perez said it costs $10 for 40 minutes, $25 for 100 minutes, and $50 for 200 minutes. Minutes expire three months after purchase, and the phone comes with 30 minutes included.

Danny Kraus, Firefly Mobile Grow Marketing affiliate, said Firefly Mobile Inc. was founded in 2002 by Don Deubler.

"Since its founding, Don has pursued his passion for creating a mobile phone designed to keep kids connected to their families and friends, but with age-appropriate parental control," Kraus said in a release.

The phone, launched in March 2005, was designed especially for kids ages 8-12 and with the control parents require, he said.

With kid-friendly buttons and simple features that allow parents to control all incoming and outgoing calls, it's the fun way to keep kids connected to the people who matter most in their life.

The phones have room for 22 numbers – two of them reserved for mom and dad and 20 that can be programmed by parents. There's also a button for making emergency calls. The phones' contact lists are password-protected and users can only dial from those lists, the company's Web site said, giving parents control over which numbers are put there. Parents are also able to decide whether or not the phone accepts numbers that aren't in the contact list.

Other cell phone companies, including Motorola and Disney, are developing phones aimed toward the "tween" audience as well.

Wooldridge adds Ivory Coast native to complete roster

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After months of speculation, K-State's 2005 men's basketball recruiting class is complete, as Coach Jim Wooldridge announced on Monday the addition of Serge Afeli to the team.

A native of Abidjan, Ivory Coast, Afeli is a 6-foot-9, 235-pound forward who will be a junior transfer from the University of Cocody, where there is no university-sponsored basketball team.

Afeli has signed a financial aid agreement with K-State and is eligible to practice with the Wildcats immediately.

"We are pleased with the addition of Serge to our program," Wooldridge said in a release. "Serge is considered one of the top players in the Ivory Coast and we think that he is the type of player that can play a couple of different positions for us."

With the addition of Afeli, the Wildcats have filled the roster spot originally expected to be occupied by Sidike Sidibe.

Sidibe is a 7-foot-1 center from Asnieres, France, who first signed with the Wildcats last November, but opted to play professional basketball in France over the summer.

Wooldridge

With the graduation of Jeremiah Massey, who led the Wildcats last season, averaging 17.9 points and 6.9 rebounds per game, and with just two other big men returning in 6-foot-11 junior Tyler Hughes and 6-foot-8 senior Dramane Diarra, Afeli provides much-needed inside depth for Wooldridge's squad.

"He is a very strong and athletic basketball player that will address our need for not only added depth, but also add versatility in the interior," Wooldridge said. There is one final loop for Afeli to get through.

In order to be eligible for the upcoming 2005-06 season, Afeli must be certified academically by the NCAA.

Wooldridge expressed confidence that the certification process would be a quick one, citing Afeli's academic record.

"He turned down many opportunities to play on the international level in order to continue his academic career," Wooldridge said. "He is very focused on earning a college degree, and we think that Kansas State is a great place for him to not only do this, but also expand and improve his basketball ability."

With Afeli, Wooldridge has the full allotment of 13 scholarship players on the roster for the first time in what will be his sixth year at K-State.

The Wildcats will begin practice for the upcoming season Oct. 14, with hopes of improving on last season's 17-12 record, K-State's first winning record under Wooldridge.

Guarded optimism

Wildcats return 4 lettermen in 2005

By Cedrique Flemming
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With the K-State men's golf team having returning experienced players and several newcomers, Coach Tim Norris is cautiously optimistic about the upcoming season.

"We've got some good talented players coming back and we've got some good young players coming in, so there will be a lot of question marks this year," he said. "But that's kind of the fun part of the job is how the team comes together."

Of the eight players on the team, four are returning lettermen who played in a majority of the tournaments last year – seniors Ben Kern, Tyler Cummins, Jonathan James and sophomore Kyle Yonke.

In his ninth season at the helm, Norris is looking forward to seeing how the team does with this blend of experience and youth.

"Half of our team is brand new this year, which is kind of an interesting thing," he said. "Those four new guys will be starting a new tradition."

One player Norris expects to be influential on and off the course this year is Kern.

Kern has proven he is capable of leading the pack when he needs to, Norris said.

"He had a pretty good year last year, and he has had an excellent summer," Norris said. "He's got to be the lead horse this year. He knows that and he is looking forward to the challenge."

Kern said he is ready to stand up to the challenge of being a leader for K-State.

"I do not feel any added pressure this year," Kern said. "I enjoy being No. 1, and I am excited to be the leader of a team that is full of young talent and has a good outlook for the future."

"I enjoy being No. 1, and I am excited to be the leader of a team that is full of young talent and has a good outlook for the future."
Ben Kern

Norris said Kern understands he cannot put any added pressure on himself to lead the team, because it might affect his game.

"It cannot be a matter of Ben doing more then he's capable of," Norris said. "That's a cardinal sin in golf, trying to do too much. He must stay within himself and stay away from hitting shots that aren't in his game."

This fall, Kern and the rest of the Wildcats will participate in five tournaments plus the Big 12 Championships.

The ultimate goal is to qualify for the NCAA Championship, Norris said, but the Wildcats are not overlooking how important the first tournaments are.

"These tournaments are important because they help prepare us for the rest of the season," he said

K-State's season begins Sept. 12-13 at the Cleveland State Invitational at the Sand Ridge Golf Course in Chardon, Ohio.

Big 12 Conference football, basketball have much to prove

Many Big 12 Conference fans, players and even coaches say their conference is the best in the nation.

I don't buy it.

The argument may have convinced me two years ago, but not after last season's disappointments.

In my mind, the Big 12 has a lot of catching up to do if it wants to be considered a top-tier football and basketball conference once again.

The 2004 football season was a season to be forgotten, especially for K-State fans.

After all, K-State – a 2004 preseason Top 25 selection – finished tied for last in a Big 12 North division that was just plain awful.

Sorry for pouring salt in your wounds, but try and stick with me.

The Big 12 North was 0-12 against Top 25 teams last season, and 3-16 against its southern conference opponents - the only three wins coming against lowly Baylor.

The Big 12 South, I reasoned, was unbelievably tough. I thought Big 12 South teams would dominate their bowl games.

I was wrong.

To the average observer, the Big 12 appeared to have a decent bowl showing last season with a record of 4-3.

MARK POTTER

But upon further review, I noticed our conference only won two bowl games against teams from a major conference. Its other two wins were slight victories over teams from the Mid-American Conference and Western Athletic Conference.

Also, all three bowl losses by Big 12 teams came from the South division, and these teams were out scored by a combined total of 136-33.

And the Big 12's "best" team last season, the Oklahoma Sooners, was demolished 55-19 in front of a national audience during the 2005 FedEx Orange Bowl.

Thank you, Sooners, for not only embarrassing yourselves, but your conference.

After University of Southern California quarterback Matt Leinert calmly tossed five touchdown bombs over the heads of the Oklahoma defensive backs, people began referring to the Big 12 as the "Small 12."

Following the 2004 football season, I hoped the Big 12 would rebound and prove itself on the hardwood.

The Big 12 showed promise at times during conference play, but fell short under the pressure of the 2005 NCAA Tournament.

Last March, the conference did not advance any teams to the Elite 8.

Zero.

Allow me to list for you the conferences who were represented in the final eight: ACC, Big East, Conference USA, Pac 10, SEC and Big 10 (with three teams).

Is the Big 12 the best conference in America?

I am not convinced.

Big 12 athletes and fans bragged, and we were humbled. Pride comes before the fall, and the Big 12 has taken a fall.

But, a new school year brings hope, and with the football season just around the corner, it is time for Big 12 players to swallow their pride, put last year behind them and begin to live up to expectations.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Kansas City Chiefs on Monday cut linebacker Quinton Caver and five rookies before the NFL's mandatory cutdown day Tuesday.

The Chiefs terminated a one-year contract with Caver. The 6-foot-4, 241-pound Caver had four starts and played in all 16 games for Kansas City last year, with a career-high 32 tackles.

The team waived running back Samkon Gado, center Mike Johnson, defensive end Darius Jones, tight end Mike Kallfelz and corner Justin Perkins.

The team said the moves trimmed its roster to 84 players, including 10 NFL Europe roster exemptions. The team said it has to cut nine more players by Tuesday.

MLB | Boston's Wells loses appeal of suspension

Wells was suspended for making contact with two umpires on July 2 during Boston's 6-4 win over the Toronto Blue Jays at Fenway Park. He was ejected in the seventh inning of that game.

Wells

Francona said Wells' next start will be Sunday at home against the Baltimore Orioles.

Wells disputed an umpire's version of the events at a hearing last week. After the hearing he said he would be willing to pay a fine for swearing, but said he merely was talking to himself.

SPT | Katrina rips holes in Superdome roof

NEW ORLEANS — Hurricane Katrina ripped two holes in the curved roof of the Louisiana Superdome, letting in rain as thousands of storm refugees huddled inside Monday.

Superdome and government emergency officials stressed they did not expect the huge roof to fail because of the relatively small breaches, each about 15 to 20 feet long and 4 to 5 feet wide.

The holes were in an area of vents some 19 stories above the arena floor.

"We think the wind somehow got into the vents and got between the roof's (waterproof) membrane and the aluminum ceiling tiles," said Doug Thornton, regional manager of the company that manages the huge arena.

Down 3-1 in the second set, the two-time champion rallied to win the last five games and beat Yung-Jan Chan of Taiwan 6-1, 6-3 Monday. When she saw that Chan had no chance to get her drop shot on match point, Williams began pumping her right fist.

Williams

French Open champ Rafael Nadal won easily, beating Bobby Reynolds 6-3, 6-3, 6-4. The 2004 French winner wasn't so lucky. Ninth-seeded Gaston Gaudio was upset by Brian Baker of Nashville, Tenn., 7-6 (9), 6-2, 6-4.

Kim Clijsters continued her sizzling summer, making easy work of Germany's Martina Muller with a 6-1, 6-2 victory that took only 53 minutes.

CFB | Lobo quarterback accused of drunken driving

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — University of New Mexico backup quarterback Chris Nelson has been arrested at a sobriety checkpoint and charged with aggravated driving while intoxicated.

Nelson

The arresting officer reported Nelson was belligerent and disruptive when he was arrested early Sunday morning, said officer Trish Hoffman of the Albuquerque Police Department.

Nelson, a junior, transferred to New Mexico in January from Garden City Community College in Kansas. At Garden City last season Nelson threw for 1,046 yards and nine touchdowns while completing 72 of 153 passes. He also scored five rushing TDs.

Taking advantage of the coupon craze

By Holly Kramer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Some people have a lot, some people only have one, but the majority of K-State students are using the free coupon books that are handed out at the beginning of the year.

Many students said the most popular coupons are the ones for food, especially pizza and sandwiches.

Mr. Goodcents, located at 1317 Anderson Ave., has many coupons in the book for student value meals.

"We easily get about 15 to 20 coupons a day from students," Kipp Woodring, general manager, said. "Our most popular one is the buy half a sandwich and get the other half for 99 cents."

Woodring said the Mr. Goodcents coupons in the Backpack planner are the ones being used most right now.

"We gave away the Backpack planners here and in two days, they were gone," Woodring said. "We handed out about 137 in an hour and a half."

Pizza coupons are very popular, as well.

"I use coupons mostly for pizza on late nights and because I'm broke since I work at the library," Ashley Hager, sophomore in open option said.

Dominos Pizza owner, Rick Hernandez, said the majority of students who call Dominos to order pizza use coupons.

"We get a variety of coupons back, primarily from students," Hernandez said. "If it's students ordering just for themselves, they use the coupon for a medium pizza. The most popular shared offer is the medium one topping pizza with cheesy bread and two 20-ounce. drinks."

Hernandez said he has been working at Dominos Pizza for nine years, and he tells people inexpensive deals are the best way to go.

"Students look all over the place for coupons and we're in every coupon book available for K-State students," Hernandez said.

Other students prefer to use coupons for recreation and salon deals.

"I used it to go bowling," Liz Cannon, senior in psychology, said. "I've also used coupons to go tanning before, too."

Courtney McCoy, junior in pre-vet, works at Sun Connection tanning and said students use coupons to get good deals on tans.

"Every year we send coupons to sororities and apartment complexes," McCoy said. "We get tons of girls during rush week and about 10 coupons during a regular week."

Coupons can be found at the back of student planners, and coupon books are free at the K-State Student Union Bookstore and Varney's Book Store.

A few stores offering coupons in the K-State Student Union/Varney's booklet include Eyecare Associates of Manhattan, Shear Dynamics Salon & Day Spa and On the Wild Side.

Some businesses offering coupons in the Dillons-sponsored books include The Pita Pit and Kite's.

Columnist lets the 'fairer sex' in on male secrets

I have a lot of weight on my shoulders this semester. I am the first male sex columnist for the Collegian in a long time.

JOHN BECKER

I'm Holly Kramer's counterpart. We might agree on a lot of issues and disagree on others. Hopefully, through both of our columns, we will be able to educate the general K-State population about sex and relationships from both the male and female view.

This year I want to try to clear a few serious problems I have noticed with the girls in this town. I want to give them some tips for their relationships and hopefully keep everyone around them from getting yet another headache; guys you know what I'm talking about.

I made a list of things I want to talk about throughout the semester.

LADIES, LISTEN UP

1. Cosmopolitan is flat wrong. Stop reading it. The only thing that magazine does is turn women against men.

2. If you say something, guys assume you mean it. For example, if you say nothing is wrong, we're going to drop the subject (assuming that nothing is wrong).

3. Don't ask us guys how you look because we don't know the right answer. You could be in one of those weird moods where you actually want to know how you look or you could just be fishing for compliments – we can't tell the difference.

4. Face it, guys like porn.

5. Guys don't like drama. So don't drag us into your soap-opera life when you're fighting with your roommate.

6. After the horizontal mambo, we get tired. It's nothing personal.

7. Eye shadow makes you look like a prostitute. Don't over-use makeup. It makes you melt in the sun like a wax figure. Natural beauty is the best (that doesn't include forgetting to shave your legs).

8. Ladies, if you are "big boned," don't wear low cut jeans, tube tops or any type of garment that allows your "big boned" areas to show.

9. It is instinct to look at other women. It happens. Deal with it. Looking is not cheating. However, touching is an entirely different subject.

10. Stop being clingy. Oh, and whining is not a turn on. If we're having a good time, we don't want to be disrupted by the parasite on our arm or the mosquito buzzing around our heads.

11. No guy in his right mind wants to hear about your "maintenance." This includes waxing, plucking or tweezing any part of your body.

12. Don't be really easy – it's gross and no fun. Oh, and I don't want to know who you've slept with.

13. Be funny and spontaneous. You don't have to plan every second of every day.

14. Wear thongs. Granny panties suck, and they are not hot.

15. Pick out an outfit and stick with it. Guys don't like sitting around while you get ready.

16. Admit it, you like cars and money.

17. Don't try to "fix" or "change" the guy you are dating. That's just not cool. Obviously the relationship is not meant to be if you feel the need to change the other person.

18. As far as relationships go, communication is very important. Talk to each other. Guys hate finding something out from your friends. We would rather hear it from you.

19. Don't call your ex. That's grounds for a guy to drop you before you know what hit you.

20. Guys like to switch it up a bit, so on occasion, let us try the positions we want.

I am more than happy to hear arguments from the female side of this and any other articles I write this semester.

Movies

"The Constant Gardner" rated R
Forget the complicated plot of this Ralph Fiennes-Rachel Weisz thriller, which involves the Kenyan government and pharmaceutical companies. Just know that it's directed by the guy who did "City of God." You haven't seen it? Do so . . . now.

"A Sound of Thunder" rated PG-13
All humanity is in the hands of Ed Burns! That ain't good. In this adaptation of the old Ray Bradbury story, a company called Time Safari arranges dinosaur hunts. But when someone accidentally steps on a butterfly, the future is changed.

"Underclassmen" rated PG-13
Adjectives used to describe this Nick Cannon movie about a cop undercover at a prep school: "sharkish," "edgy," "frenetic" and "streetwise." Students even play streetball instead of regular ol' basketball. Think they're trying to appeal to "urban" Gen-Y kids?

"The Transporter 2" rated PG-13
Jason Statham is a modern-day MacGyver — using only a fire hose and his bare hands, he can find 134 ways to kick ass. This sequel finds his commando character retired in Miami, but he's forced back into action when two kids are kidnapped and injected with a virus.

Women's Center welcomes back students

Salsa featured at open house celebration

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Women's Center celebrated their open house Monday with a little bit of spice.

"Every morning we have three of the four major food groups – salsa, chocolate and coffee," Todd said.

People arrived before 10 a.m. just to try the various salsas available, which included mild, medium, hot, Walking on the Sun and red pepper salsas.

He has come to enjoy the salsa that is readily available at the center.

"This has been a great experience for me," he said.

In addition to four types of salsa and a gumball-counting contest, students also gathered to hear about love, sex, peace and violence.

The center is also planning another salsa celebration in October, on the Holton Hall front lawn.

They will be having the third annual Hula Hoop contest, as well as a costume contest.

The Women's Center was created in 1973, in response to a woman's assault on campus.

At the time, K-State had no resources to deal with such an event.

"We are one of the major movers on campus for the nonviolence movement," Todd said.

Clark steps in as new biological, agriculture department head

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Gary Clark is beginning his second week as the new head of the Department of Biological and Agricultural Engineering.

After three years as the department's back-up head, Clark was chosen over an outside candidate in a national search.

"He brings a lot of expertise to the department head position," Richard Gallagher, associate dean for academics and administration in the College of Engineering, said. "His international experiences with irrigation system design and crop water management bring special recognition to the importance of the biological and agricultural engineering department."

Clark succeeds James Koelliker, the former department head who has stepped into a teaching and research role. While Clark is teaching a class this semester, his job as the department head is more managerial.

He oversees budgets and course curriculum, as well as working with other campus officials.

"I'm basically the chief administrator for our department," he said. "It involves working with our faculty and helping them in their research."

Clark's goals for the department include increasing enrollment, increasing collaborations with industrial partners and securing more grants and funding. He is also faculty-minded.

"(I want) to help faculty be successful in their careers and projects," he said.

Clark has a bachelor's and master's degrees in agricultural engineering from the University of Florida and a doctorate in agricultural engineering from Texas A&M University.

He worked at the University of Florida before taking a position as an associate professor of biological and agricultural engineering in 1994.

"I saw an opportunity for a teaching/research position and I wanted to get back into the classroom," Clark said.

In 1997, he became a full professor. Until his appointment as department head, Clark had what he called a "50-50 appointment" in which he both taught and performed research. He was a co-principle investigator on the K-State Mobile Irrigation Lab.

"We go out and evaluate the hydraulic performance of center pivot irrigation systems," he said.

Clark and colleagues also worked with microirrigation systems that software farmers can use to increase efficiency of irrigation systems.

Philip Barnes, associate professor of biological and agricultural engineering, said Clark is now familiarizing himself with his new role.

"He's trying to get his feet wet," Barnes said. "He's been active in a lot of committees. He's well-known at the university. I think he's going to do a good job."

K-State Recycles!

Since mid 1987, K-State Recycling has collected and diverted from the waste stream almost five million pounds of materials, four million, nine hundred and ninety thousand, seven hundred and seventy three pounds to be precise. That's over two thousand, four hundred, and ninety five tons. But we need to do more.

K-State Facilities Recycling celebrated Earth Week 2005 by kicking off the desk-side recycling program in the Durland/Rathbone/Fiedler engineering complex. We have since added Throckmorton to the program, and are currently working on getting Edwards, Ackert and Chalmers on board as well. We have already collected and diverted from the waste stream over two tons of paper through our desk-side recycling program.

K-State Facilities Desk-Side Recycling Program

WHAT WE PLAN TO DO:
Facilities Recycling wants to provide a convenient, cost effective way to recycle office solid waste materials. We will initially collect three products: office mix paper, newsprint, and magazines.

WHO WILL BE INVOLVED?
We will need the help of office occupants and custodial specialists, cooperating for success.

HOW WE WILL DO IT:
We will place a three compartment recycling container in each office. This is where we will need the help of office personnel to sort the three types of paper into the three compartment containers. The existing trash can is still for trash, and the three compartment recycling container will be filled with office mix; bond paper, envelopes, copy paper, computer paper, etc. in the large center container, newspapers in one saddle container, and magazines in the other. (or in any configuration you wish) Then we will need the help of custodial personnel to empty the containers for transport to an appropriate recycling facility. The custodial specialist in your area will coordinate with the recycling personnel to pick up one type of recyclable paper one day, another the next, trash the next, in whatever order and frequency is needed to maintain an orderly flow of material out of the building. Trash will still be emptied daily from class rooms and rest rooms.

WHAT CAN YOU DO TO HELP?
Any time you need to discard a piece of paper, look and see if it can be recycled. If so, then place it in the appropriate compartment in the recycling container. Please continue to take your home recycling directly to a recycling facility such as Howie's Recycling Center. This program is designed to reduce the solid waste that we currently haul to the Riley County Transfer Station.

WHAT IF SOMETHING GOES WRONG?
If you have questions about recycling or the service we provide, please call 532-6446, or contact your building recycling coordinator. You are also encouraged to recycle white bond paper, office mix paper, computer paper, shredded paper, cardboard, newspaper, magazines, telephone books, plastic bottles, aluminum cans, wooden pallets, computers and other electronic equipment (with appropriate signed DA-110s) at campus collection sites or by calling 532-6446 for special pickups. You may also visit our website at: http://www.ksu.edu/facilities/recycling/.

and nitrogen that explode, he said.

"This is a known technology," Dunn said. "We are just applying it to this sort of problem."

It will allow soldiers and operators in fields like Iraq to inspect suspicious materials without putting themselves at risk.

A basic prototype is now in development.

"We think we have shown the basic feasibility," Dunn said. "If we had the funding, we could build it in about a year or 18 months."

Although the research is just in the prototype stage, Dunn and his students remain positive about the project.

"In research you get the first thing done, then try to improve on it," Dunn said.

Eventually, Dunn hopes to improve the detection to pick up smaller objects from further distances.

However, Dunn cautions there is a level of danger in using the bomb detection.

"It utilizes radiation so it must be implemented in a careful and controlled way," he said.

The team said they look forward to the project's completion in the months to come.

"It is a pretty large-scale project," Dominic Pedotto, senior in mechanical engineering, said. "If we figure out a way to make it work, it will have large-scale effect."

on it, wanting to keep the monument in place," Arena said. "It was quite an accomplishment for a small town issue."

Although Junction City has received requests to move the monument, Tait Berlier, senior in political science, said removal of the Ten Commandments monument from Junction City would be a mistake for the city and the state.

"Removing markers of religious nature from public grounds is a travesty that anyone familiar with the basics of the Constitution should realize," Berlier said. "Junction City officials should leave the Ten Commandments in place until they are forcibly removed."

The City Commission in Junction City intends to do just that. Barnes said the Supreme Court's ruling is unclear, and the city's legal research leads it to believe much of the debate is open to interpretation.

New downtown designs unveiled

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sticky notes on the map of the planned downtown redevelopment listed but a handful of citizens' concerns. One asked about a bike lane, another demanded more green and less concrete and others had different ideas about parking.

The firms involved in the redevelopment of the Manhattan downtown area showed their latest plan for the area south of Bluemont Avenue to area residents last night at City Hall. A meeting to discuss the area north of Bluemont Avenue is at 6 p.m. at the senior center, 412 Leavenworth St.

There are implications for businesses in the area, as many would be bought out to make space for new places.

The plan will bring changes to large pieces of land. For example, everything between Leavenworth Street, Tuttle Creek Boulevard, Bluemont Avenue and Fourth Street would be replaced, except for Walgreens, the gas station on the southeast corner and two limestone houses.

Ron Fehr, city manager, said Best Buy was planning on building a new store in that section. Similar changes may be in the works for the blocks south of Poyntz.

"We know that they want to take us out and put in a hotel and conference center," said Carolyn Arrand, who operates Art Craft Printers at the corner Fourth and Colorado streets. Arrand said she was there to make clear her desire to stay, but admitted her chances were not good.

The plan would also change how people get around the area. One plan is the possible conversion of Poyntz Avenue into two lanes and installing two roundabouts.

The roundabouts, one where Bluemont Avenue meets Fourth Street and one at Third Street where it intersects with Pierre Street and U.S. Highway 177, are an issue for some. Mike Kearns, Riley county commissioner, said he spoke with citizens who dislike them.

"If we put them in, and they're more than one lane, then we're going to have to educate people about roundabout etiquette," he said.

Richard Lundquist, Manhattan resident, was concerned with construction of new retail space and the risk of flooding.

"Ever been down on Third Street when it rains?" he said.

Gas prices gouge wallets

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students felt the pinch from gas prices before Hurricane Katrina, but damage from the storm may also do more damage to pocketbooks.

The national average for gas prices is projected to be $3 per gallon of regular unleaded by next week according to Reuters.

The cost of crude oil closed Tuesday at $70 a barrel because of possible damage to closed oil platforms, refineries and pipelines along the Gulf Coast.

Michael Oldfather, associate professor of economics, said the increasing gas prices is all about supply and demand.

"What happens when the supply goes down but the demand stays the same?" he said. "The price goes up."

Oldfather said prices at the pump will likely increase because a lot of the United State's refining capacity is along the Gulf Coast.

"If you can't get it refined, you can't get it to the gas pumps," he said.

In the meantime, gasoline sales at some stations in Manhattan have increased by up to 50 percent because customers are taking advantages of special discounts.

Jason Juarez, manager of Kwik Shop, 1337 Anderson Ave., said more customers are using their Dillons Plus Cards to receive up to 10 cents off per gallon at the pump.

"Yesterday we had quite a few applications for the Plus Card," Juarez said. "Everyone wanted to take advantage of the deal."

With the card, Kwik Shop customers receive two cents off per gallon of regular unleaded fuel, 10 cents off unleaded plus and six cents off premium.

Dara's Fast Lane doesn't offer special discounts, but they do accept the coupons on the back of K-State football and basketball tickets.

"There's no expiration date on them so people save them up and bring them in," assistant manager David Lynn said.

Gas saving tips

- Drive sensibly — Speeding, rapid acceleration and quick braking wastes gas. It can lower gas mileage by 33 percent at highway speeds and by five percent in town.
- Observe the speed limit — At speeds above 60 mph, gas mileage decreases rapidly. Each 5 mph over 60 mph is like paying an additional 15 cents per gallon of gas.
- Remove excess weight — Don't keep heavy, unnecessary items in a vehicle. An extra 100 pounds can reduce miles per gallon by up to two percent.
- Avoid idling — Idling in drive thru lanes or waiting for a parking spot gets zero miles per gallon, and larger engines waste gas more gas at idle than smaller engines.
- Use cruise control — Using cruise control on the highway maintains a constant speed and burns gas more efficiently.
- Use overdrive — A car's engine speed goes down when in overdrive, which saves gas.
- Keep tires properly inflated — Gas mileage can improve by more than three percent by keeping tires inflated to the right amount of pressure.
- Check and replace air filters — Regularly replacing clogged air filters can improve gas mileage by 10 percent and save up to 22 cents per gallon.

Without special discounts, Third Street Gas 4 Less, 917 N. 3rd St., has the lowest gas price in Manhattan according to www.kansasgasprices.com, which is a Web site listing gas prices for stations in the state. Tuesday evening prices were $2.60 per gallon for regular unleaded.

"We don't take credit cards so that eliminates the fee and allows us to keep gas cheaper," sales clerk, Chris Amsden said.

Amsden said cheap prices increased the amount of customers they served Tuesday by 50 percent.

Pauline Okot, Manhattan resident, filled up her tank Tuesday morning at Gas 4 Less.

"I always find it cheaper than anywhere else," Okot said.

With looting and rising floodwaters, crisis deepens in New Orleans

By Adam Nossiter
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW ORLEANS – Helicopters dropped sandbags on two broken levees as the water kept rising in the streets. The governor drew up plans to evacuate just about everyone left in town. Looters ransacked stores.

Doctors in their scrubs had to use canoes to bring supplies to blacked-out hospitals.

"It's downtown Baghdad," said tourist Denise Bollinger, who snapped pictures of looting in the French Quarter. "It's insane."

The mayor estimated that 80 percent of New Orleans was flooded, while countless residents were still stranded on rooftops.

Hospitals were running out of power and scrambling to find places to take their patients.

At one clinic, broken glass littered some areas and patients and staff had fallen on floors slick with floodwaters.

"It's like being in a Third World country," said Mitch Handrich, a registered nurse manager at Charity Hospital, where nurses were ventilating patients by hand after the power and then the backup generator failed. Some 300 patients had yet to be evacuated, but the babies in intensive care had been flown out.

"We're just trying to stay alive," Handrich said.

Gov. Kathleen Blanco said that everyone still in the city, now huddled in the Superdome and other rescue centers, needs to be evacuated.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency is considering putting people on cruise ships, in tent cities, mobile home parks and so-called floating dormitories – boats the agency uses to house its own employees. Rescue teams were still picking up people throughout the city Tuesday, leaving them on island-like highway overpasses and on a levee to wait to be moved again.

Eventually, they will end up in the Superdome, where 15,000 to 20,000 people have already taken refuge, said Louisiana National Guard Maj. Gen. Bennett C. Landreneau. One person died at the Superdome attempting to jump from one level to a lower one.

Among the evacuees are 5,000 inmates from New Orleans and suburbs that need to be moved. Officials were trying to figure out how. The historic French Quarter appeared to have been spared the worst flooding, but its stores were getting the worst of human nature.

"The looting is out of control. The French Quarter has been attacked," Councilwoman Jackie Clarkson said. "We're using exhausted, scarce police to control looting when they should be used for search and rescue while we still have people on rooftops."

As Sen. Mary Landrieu flew over the area by helicopter, a group of people smashed a window at a convenience store and jumped in.

At a drug store in the French Quarter, people were running out with grocery baskets and coolers full of soft drinks, chips and diapers.

One looter shot and wounded a fellow looter, who was taken to a hospital and survived. Only rooftops were visible in several neighborhoods and the occasional building was in flames.

The intestates are impassable, the bridges may be unstable and no one knows if the buildings can withstand the damage brought by Katrina, the governor said after flying over the region.

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Sebelius offers help

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius offered the state's assistance Tuesday to governors in Louisiana and Mississippi as they recover from Hurricane Katrina. Louisiana Gov. Kathleen Blanco told Sebelius that outside support may be required in the coming weeks and months, and Sebelius offered to send units from the Kansas National Guard.

Gorbachev to visit state

Former Soviet Union President Mikhail Gorbachev will come to Kansas Oct. 29 to kick off the Chess for Peace initiative in Lindsborg, Kan. The visit will include a chess parade, a scholastic chess tournament and a match between former chess champions Susan Polgar and Anatoly Karpov.

Militant admits aliases

Anti-Castro militant Luis Posada Carriles, 77, initially refused to answer questions from U.S. immigration attorneys Tuesday at his deportation hearing, but later acknowledged using several aliases and passports with different names. He is wanted in several countries for the deadly 1976 bombing of a Cuban airliner.

Indiana scientists debate alien existence

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. – Ten years ago, Indiana University senior Adam Pollard thought he encountered aliens. He was camping, and one night he walked down to a lake. When he looked up in the sky, he saw lights moving from side to side.

"It looked like something was floating around in the sky," he said. "I thought they were aliens because I'd formed an opinion of how it would look after I'd seen it on TV and read books about alien encounters."

Most likely, Pollard didn't encounter aliens, but the mysterious lights in the sky made him wonder, "Do aliens really exist?"

With many eyes turned to the sky recently for the launch of NASA's Mars Reconnaissance Orbiter and the landing of Space Shuttle Discovery, others might wonder the same thing.

But according to IU researchers, that question can't yet be answered.

"We just still don't know what's out there," said Lisa Pratt, an IU geology professor who's studying samples of subsurface Earth to determine what kind of life might exist on Mars.

Although life has not been found outside of Earth, the seeds of life as we know it on Earth have been found all over the place. These include liquid water, carbon and energy sources, said Pratt.

If life does exist in our own galaxy, it's most likely on Mars or one of the moons orbiting other planets in our solar system, said IU astronomy professor Richard Durisen. Mars' environment is the most similar to Earth's, and increasing evidence shows that large amounts of liquid water may exist on several moons.

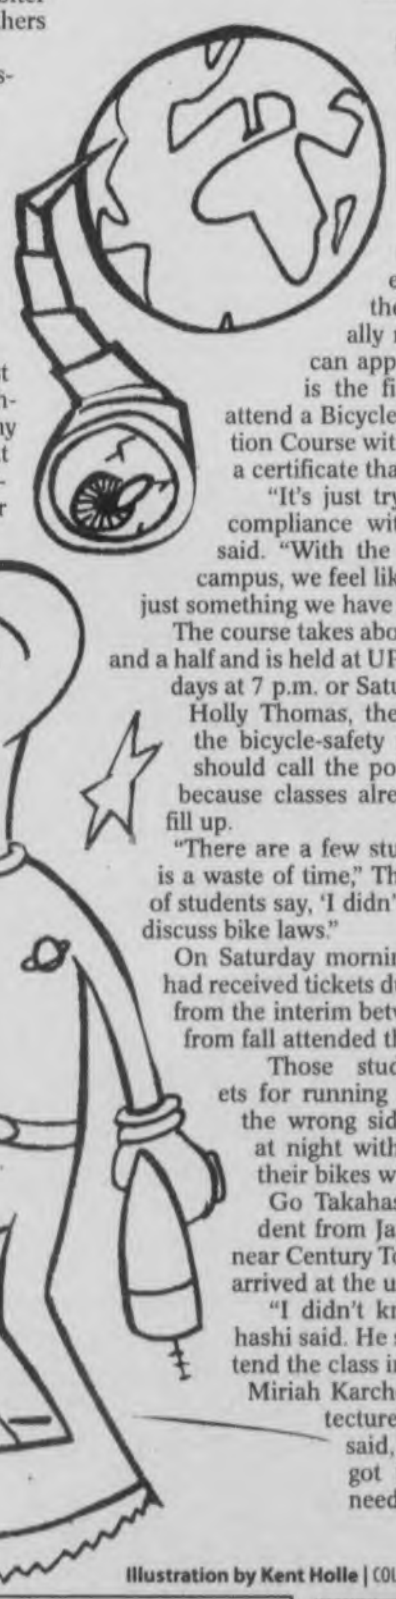
But when and if life is found outside Earth, it most likely won't resemble the E.T.-like creatures many picture when they think of aliens.

"I don't think in terms of aliens being highly advanced technological creatures," said Pratt. "For me, it's most likely the first aliens we encounter are (going to be) small, microbial organisms."

While aliens could be single-cell organisms similar to ones on Earth, they could also be completely different from any life forms on Earth, said Durisen. And any intelligent life that may exist is probably a few galaxies away, he said.

"My best guess is we don't live in a 'Star Wars' universe," Durisen said. "There aren't aliens flying around our universe."

Pratt said she sees no reason why intelligent life couldn't develop elsewhere the way it developed on Earth.



Durisen said most of his students feel the same way.

"That's something most people would like to believe, that we're not alone in this enormous universe."

U. FLORIDA STUDENTS TICKETED FOR BIKE INFRACTIONS

GAINESVILLE, Fla. – Just because some students ride on two wheels instead of four doesn't make them exempt from traffic citations on the University of Florida campus.

The University Police Department issued 82 bike-related tickets between the first day of school and Sunday.

"We've already given quite a few," UPD officer Darren Sanders said. "Traffic violations are enforced throughout the year."

When a ticket is issued, students have three options, Sanders said. They can pay the ticket, which is usually more than $100, they can appeal the ticket, or, if it is the first offense, they can attend a Bicycle Traffic Safety Education Course within 30 days to receive a certificate that voids the citation.

"It's just trying to get people in compliance with the law," Sanders said. "With the number of bikes on campus, we feel like enforcing the law is just something we have to do."

The course takes about an hour to an hour and a half and is held at UPD headquarters Tuesdays at 7 p.m. or Saturdays at 9 a.m.

Holly Thomas, the officer who teaches the bicycle-safety course, said students should call the police department early because classes already are beginning to fill up.

"There are a few students who think this is a waste of time," Thomas said. "But a lot of students say, 'I didn't know that' when we discuss bike laws."

On Saturday morning, two students who had received tickets during the summer, five from the interim between terms and seven from fall attended the class.

Those students received tickets for running stop signs, riding on the wrong side of the road, riding at night without lights and riding their bikes with headphones on.

Go Takahashi, an exchange student from Japan, received a ticket near Century Tower two days after he arrived at the university.

"I didn't know the rules," Takahashi said. He said he was glad to attend the class in order to learn them.

Miriah Karcher, a landscape architecture major, agreed and said, "I was kind of glad I got it anyway, because I needed to learn."

Thinking about Graduate School?
If so, you should consider applying to the Kansas State University
McNair Scholars Program

The McNair Scholars Program will:
* Help you choose the right graduate schools for your career goals,
* Help you get ready for the G.R.E. and other entrance exams,
* Help you apply for graduate admittance and financial aid,
* Help you prepare to be successful in graduate school, and,
* Provide financial support while you complete a research internship in your chosen field.

To be eligible for the McNair Scholars Program, you must:
* Be a U.S. citizen, or hold a valid work permit (or "green card"),
* Be a Kansas State University sophomore, junior, or senior,
* Be academically successful (with a G.P.A. of 3.0 or above), and,
* Be at least one of the following:
- a low-income student whose parent(s) or guardian(s) have not received a four-year college degree, or,
- a member of a group presently under-represented in graduate study as defined by the U.S. Dept of Education

For more information, contact Lora Boyer at 532-6137 or lorajb@ksu.edu, or see the McNair Homepage at http://www.ksu.edu/mcnair

Getting to know garbage

Students, faculty to train for waste disposal

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State produces more than one ton of hazardous waste material every month, making it a Level 3 generator.

Because of this status – Level 3 being the highest – the Department of Environmental Health and Safety facilitates Hazardous Waste Awareness training sessions once a month in the basement of Edwards Hall.

Steve Galitzer, director of the environmental health and safety department, said the sessions, which are open to all K-State students and faculty, explain what is and what is not hazardous waste, how to dispose of hazardous waste and how to contact the department for waste pick-up.

"We try to tell everyone what the rules are," Galitzer said.

The training also touches on medical waste, household hazardous waste, the department's recycling programs for batteries and fluorescent lamps and its participation in the Riley County Hazardous Waste Program as a drop-off point.

"Dealing with hazardous wastes is far more complicated than I thought. It's not as easy as it looks in the movies."

Laura Christianson
GRADUATE STUDENT

Galitzer said the training, which is in its fourth year, is important because K-State is carefully watched.

"Because we generate so much hazardous waste, like any research institution, (federal authorities) look at us closer. They expect more of us," he said.

Galitzer said the sessions have between two and 40 participants. He expects a larger group today because it is the beginning of the semester.

Some campus departments require their employees, especially those who work in laboratories, to attend the training.

However, Crystal Sapp, an accountant in the Department of Biochemistry, was also required to participate in a training workshop.

"Part of it was beneficial to me," she said. "I thought it was interesting that they're taking household waste, like motor oil and batteries, to recycle it or dispose of it."

The department also facilitates Hazardous Waste Operations and Emergency Response, better known as HAZWOPER. It is a five-day, 40-hour training session for people interested in environmental work.

The course, offered through the Division of Continuing Education, combines web-based work and two days of hands-on training.

"I learned a great deal about equipment and cleaning up chemical spills," Laura Christianson, graduate student in biological and agricultural engineering, said. "Dealing with hazardous wastes is far more complicated than I thought. It's not as easy as it looks in the movies."

The next Hazardous Waste Awareness Training is at 2 p.m. on Sept. 28 in Edwards 108.

TO THE POINT

Oil reserves should be open to help citizens

The United States Petroleum Reserve was designed to prevent disruptions in the commercial oil supply from upsetting the economy.

With fuel prices at record highs and the refineries in the Southern part of the nation halted by Hurricane Katrina, it's time to open the reserves.

Record high fuel prices will not only slow the U.S. economy, they will greatly hamper the abilities of non-government rescue crews along the Gulf Coast.

The reserves have been opened in the past during times of crisis and were – in general – refilled within the year. It is for just such an occasion that the petroleum reserves were created.

That being said, the United States must realize the era of cheap oil is over. India and China are increasingly motorized. Usage is increasing all over the world while oil wells work at maximum capacity.

Consumers must accept driving a mile to school, or four blocks to the grocery store is expensive and irresponsible. We will likely come to regret the sprawling ways in which we built our cities, especially if gas prices begin to rival those of Europe, where a gallon is about $5.50.

The Petroleum Reserves need to be opened to alleviate the pressure the economy will face in dealing with the destruction brought by Hurricane Katrina.

However, the United States must also realize driving is a privilege destined to get more expensive.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Painful lessons

Bad experiences with relationships, friendships teach the facts of life

KELSEY CHILDRESS

Are there people in your life who always have the power to hurt you? Maybe an ex-boyfriend from high school who could call you fat and still make you cry; even though it's been four years and seven boyfriends since you saw him last?

Why are these people put into your life? To teach you some lesson in pain?

There are some experiences in my life that were so painful I thought I'd never be okay again. Ironically, this has only chiseled me into the person I am today, someone I would never want to be without.

Most of the people who cause you pain will always have some sort of hold on your life. Everyone knows once you completely trust someone, you can never evade the power they have to hurt you.

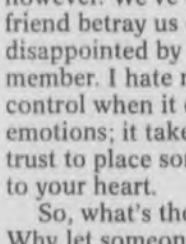
That is what I hate the most about people who are close to me – they have certain influential muscle in my life. Not all of my heartbreaks have been romantic, however. We've all had a friend betray us or been disappointed by a family member. I hate not being in control when it comes to my emotions; it takes a lot of trust to place someone close to your heart.

So, what's the point of it? Why let someone into your inner circle only to have your feelings can be trampled on again?

I just get back to being 'normal', and it seems the next person comes in to make a mess of the pretty okay life I had going on.

Nevertheless, if there is one thing I've learned, it's that I can't waste my time trying to protect myself by shutting people out of my life. We've all had out heartaches, but if you really think about it, would you change that if you could? Isn't it better to know your boyfriend was cheating on you with your best friend? Would you take back the ex you thought would never abandon you when you needed him most? And the boyfriend stealer, what about her?

Well, I genuinely hope you can say no, because some people don't deserve to be in your life anymore. Taking him back, giving her "one more chance" – what does that accomplish? It only tells them that it's okay to do it again. If they didn't care enough the first time around, what in the world would inspire them to change their ways – you letting them walk all over you? Most definitely not.



I know I haven't been on this planet long enough to experience all the hurt or love out there, but I do know that without pain, we would never know what happiness feels like. Going through life ignoring your past and blindly grasping for your future will not help you in the present.

There can be a happy medium between letting go of the people who hurt you and remembering the lessons they taught you. One important thing that I always keep in the back of my mind is the fact that the only person who hasn't disappointed me is myself.

It's human nature to make mistakes; finding out who you are is part of the process which eventually leads you to exactly where you are supposed to be.

Anti-war mom missed opportunity

KODY COOPER

The bereaved mother of an American soldier who died in Iraq. The mother who became a protester outside President Bush's Crawford Ranch. The protester who opposed Bush's "warmongering" that has set free millions of Iraqis and Afghanis. Cindy Sheehan.

And now people want to know how the story ends. Will President Bush cave and meet with her? Will the President acquiesce to her demands and bring the troops home?

No. She blew it. She had such an opportunity! She could have ended this "quagmire". The name Cindy Sheehan could have echoed into eternity among American "patriots" like Jane Fonda. If only...

If only she'd realized the true roots of war: men. Yes, power-hungry, haughtily-chauvinistic, trigger-happy, belt buckle-wearing, sweaty, hairy men. Of the 193 sovereign nations on Earth, 193 are under the dominion of testicular beings. At least 30 wars currently rage worldwide. Coincidence? I think not.

Is there some way that this perpetually male-domineering structure could be disassembled? Could women unite and end this male-macho-militarism? Think back for a second, and let us use our imaginations.

Does anyone else recall that catchy Reading Rainbow jingle?

"Butterfly in the sky, I can go twice as high

Take a look, it's in a book, Reading Rainbow

I can be anything! – Take a look, it's in a book, Reading Rainbow!"

Illustrations by Elvis Achelpohl | COLLEGIAN

Ms. Sheehan should take a hint from our friends at PBS.

Let me explain. You see, if Cindy and her gang would just take a look in an ancient Greek book called Lysistrata by Aristophanes, they could be anything!

The story stars the smartest woman who ever lived, Lysistrata, who organizes Spartan and Athenian women to protest imminent war between the two ancient city-states by withholding sex from the men.

Women still use this tactic today. No Visa platinum card? No Saturday afternoon at Bed, Bath and Beyond? Fine, no sex. After all, there's always chocolate. But, chocolate doesn't help with that "freshman 15."

Yes, I am suggesting Ms. Sheehan should lead a massive campaign of sex denial against American men. Implausible? Granted, even women have sexual urges occasionally. Yet, this is where Sheehan and her femi-Nazi posse have the advantage over their Lysistratan predecessors. Technology has birthed marvels in 3,000 years.

Take for example, the Orgasmatron. This tiny mechanism is implanted in the female lower spine and sends stimulative electrical signals the brain interprets as orgasmic sensation. That's right, remote-controlled ecstasy is just a simple procedure away.

So, Cindy, don't you see? You had an unprecedented opportunity to emasculate Dubya and the entire oppressive male construct. All you had to do was become the spokeswoman for Orgasmatron. American women would have flocked in search of what their boyfriends and husbands never provided.

Checkmate. With this newfound nirvana, women would have had no problem refusing sex to men. And, since that's all the Neanderthal care about and live for, men would have been your puppets – fleshy marionettes to do your bidding.

Forget Iraq and Afghanistan. Men would have demanded a "No War Amendment" to the Constitution if it meant the return of sex.

It's not too late, ladies. Just remember: with Reading Rainbow, you can do anything.

Manhattan Town Center shoppers have the power to give one school $1000, and today is the last day to do it.

The Town Center's second annual Grant for Grade School competition ends by mall closing today.

Grant for Grade School, started by Sara Van Allen, Manhattan Town Center marketing manager, has been well received by the community.

"Basically, people donate receipts toward a particular Manhattan school, then that school earns points," Van Allen said. "Every dollar on a receipt equals a point."

The competition this year has been a tight-knit race.

Several local schools have worked on increasing the awareness of the competition to parents and other members of the community.

Warren Holmes, Flint Hills Christian School principal and administrator, said many parents have taken an active role in the competition this year.

"Basically, there were three or four parents that wanted to make everyone aware of the competition," he said.

"They encouraged to get parents and family to go in and take receipts."

The word-of-mouth advertising has paid off.

Woodrow Wilson and Oldsburg elementary schools trail behind with 7,034 and 5,974 points, respectively.

Woodrow Wilson came in second place last year, but this year, the competition isn't a priority, Katha Hurt, Woodrow Wilson principal, said.

Hurt said the school had promoted the event in the past, but due to a later start in the year, the school has other important things to consider.

"We are a school with low- to middle-income children," she said.

"We put a lot of effort into fundraising. We sell magazine subscriptions, pizza and cookie dough. We also have a school carnival."

But the competition is still anyone's game.

Manhattan Catholic Schools' principal, Tom Schmitz, said they have been preparing for the competition since the beginning of school.

Schmitz said the competition had been quite a success last year.

This year, Manhattan Catholic Schools parents have been sent e-mails about the competition.

Last year, Manhattan Catholic Schools invested their $1,000 in playground equipment.

Schmitz said this year, the school would like to look at funding technology.

"It cannot cover all that we are trying to do, but it would help defray some of those costs," he said.

Flint Hills Christian School is looking at a similar project.

"We probably will be updating some of our technology and that $1,000 will be really focused on some new hardware and basically getting some more software," Holmes said.

"We are in the process of getting every teacher to have a computer in the classroom," he said. "Two classrooms don't have computers now."

Holmes said he wants to get all of his classrooms connected to the Internet, and to integrate more trendy educational tools into the classroom.

Some of these programs include recording attendance, completing grades and updating report cards via computer.

"I just think it's really special that the mall and merchants downtown support this endeavour, regardless of what school wins it," Holmes said.

"It's special that we are granted that grant and whomever wins it will be able to put it to good use for their students."

Program must win back its fans

It does not feel the same this year.

The excitement isn't stirring and the purple shirts are about as non-existent as the Heisman hype surrounding Darren Sproles around the fourth game of last season.

The devout K-State football fans who worship the almighty Bill Snyder may disagree with me, but as someone in my second year in Manhattan, I'm just not getting the same vibe I did last year surrounding the upcoming football season.

ANTHONY MENDOZA

Students are no longer talking about what bowl game K-State is going to go to, but rather, if the Wildcats will go to a bowl game at all.

How many points K-State will beat Kansas by is replaced with, "Can the Wildcats avenge last season's loss in Lawrence?"

I guess that's what a 4-7 season and missing a bowl appearance for the first time in 11 seasons will do.

Maybe this is what the K-State program needed?

Maybe this is what the fans needed?

K-State fans have been spoiled for too long now.

Last year, the fans expected too much.

They did not know how to respond to a Big 12 championship team coming off of one of its best seasons in the program's history.

However, right from the kickoff last season, anyone not wearing his purple-colored glasses knew there were going to be problems.

K-State was inexperienced at the skill positions, the defense was in shambles and the offensive line was having trouble getting a push up front.

How do the Wildcats come back from the most disappointing season in the Snyder era?

Or the bigger question: Are they going to be able to come back swinging from last season's knock out, or will they be smacked around and forced to take a standing eight count?

As easy as it would be to bury the team and say "wait until next year when the majority of the starters return," I can't.

If any season is a make-or-break season for the football program, it is this one.

Not only do the Wildcats have to prove nationally the multiple 11-win seasons were not a fluke, but they have to win back the trust of the fans.

The hardcore fans will never go away, and maybe those are the only ones they should be worried about.

But there are also the fans who fill out the rest of the seats in the stadium and line the program's pockets with the extra dollars needed to compete with the rest of the Big 12 Conference.

They are the ones who were part of the mass exodus in the fourth quarter last season as Fresno State took apart the Wildcats in the second game of the season.

That's who K-State needs to win for this season.

The fans on the bubble; unsure whether they can once again believe in the program.

If not, those fans will find another sanctuary to put their hopes and dollars into.

A fresh start

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Coach Bill Snyder is looking to resurrect the Wildcat football program after a 4-7 outing last season. K-State faces Florida International Saturday at KSU Stadium. Kickoff is set for 1:10 p.m.

True freshman could see time

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State football team held its weekly press conference Tuesday, where the Wildcats discussed several topics heading into Saturday's opener against Florida International.

HURRICANE KATRINA AFFECTS TWO WILDCATS

When Hurricane Katrina slammed into parts of Louisiana and Mississippi this week, two Wildcats were affected by the devastating storm.

Smith's parents live in New Orleans, and were forced to relocate to Houston. They have been told not to return to their home for a while.

"Michael has had dialogue with them and they're fine," coach Bill Snyder said. "They're a little uncertain as to how much damage has been done. From what I gather, they're not optimistic that their residence in intact."

Dennis is originally from St. James, La., a town about 56 miles north of New Orleans.

"His family is, as I understand it and from what we've been told, is that they're fine," Snyder said.

ONE TRUE FRESHMAN MAY SEE TIME SATURDAY

Snyder indicated he is looking at one true freshman, linebacker Reggie Walker, to play this weekend.

"I dislike addressing freshmen who are here for the first time and really haven't done anything yet, but I really kind of like Reggie Walker," Snyder said.

Walker is working behind starting weakside linebacker Maurice Mack, though it is unclear where Walker is on the depth chart, as one has not been released yet.

AFTERNOON START IS FOR A REASON

The game will begin at 1:10 p.m., and it is expected to be sunny with temperatures in the upper 80s.

Snyder said the afternoon start was to prepare the Wildcats for their game against Marshall next week, which will start at 9:30 a.m. central time.

"The 1:00 schedule was predicated on the Marshall game, and Marshall having an opportunity to play on Thursday night," Snyder said. "and for preparation time and trying to get a little preparation time Saturday evening."

NO MARVIN SIMMONS

Snyder said fans should not expect to see senior linebacker Marvin Simmons on the field Saturday.

"I don't know that Marvin will be prepared to play in this ballgame," he said. "That's not factual, as we speak, but I'm not sure that he will."

Snyder sees improvement

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Since the end of last season, K-State coach Bill Snyder has stressed his team needs to be more spirited, tough and consistent.

On Saturday, the Wildcats will have the chance to prove whether or not they can come back from one of the worst seasons under Snyder, as they finished 4-7 and missed a bowl game for the first time in 11 years in 2004.

"All those things that we've been talking about since December of last year, we've enhanced our position, in perhaps all those areas," Snyder said. "We've talked about spirit so often, we've talked about the toughness of our football team, we've talked about the persistence of our football team, and I honestly believe we have made strides consistently in all areas."

Jeromey Clary, team captain and the only returning starting offensive lineman from last year, said the team is more confident than it was last year.

"We're a lot more emotional, a lot more spirited, a lot more physical and a lot more hopeful this year," Clary said.

Struggling through an injury-plagued season last year, the Wildcats offense finished fifth in overall offense in the Big 12 Conference and was one of five teams nationally to score 21 points or more in each of their games.

The other four were national champion University of Southern California, Utah, Boise State, and Louisville. None of those

NFL | Former Wildcat Butler placed on injured reserve

ST. LOUIS — The St. Louis Rams cut 13 players Tuesday and placed former K-State cornerback Jerametrius Butler, who had season-ending knee surgery, on injured reserve.

Butler

The most notable cuts were sixth-round pick Dante Ridgeway, a wide receiver, and oft-injured offensive tackle Grant Williams, who started 11 games when the Rams were needy at right tackle.

All together, the moves left the team with 65 players.

CBB | Former Kansas basketball player charged

LAWRENCE — Former University of Kansas basketball player J.R. Giddens was charged Tuesday with misdemeanor battery and disorderly conduct for a fight in May outside a bar, during which he was stabbed in the leg.

Giddens

Announcing the charges against Giddens, Douglas County District Attorney Charles Branson said another man involved in the fracas, Jeremiah D. Creswell, of Olathe, Kan., was charged with misdemeanor battery for the fight but was not charged for stabbing Giddens.

Branson declined to discuss specifics of the May 19 altercation between Creswell, 24, and Giddens, 20.

NFL | Broncos make Clarett cut official

DENVER — The Denver Broncos released Maurice Clarett, quarterback Danny Kanell and veteran defensive linemen Luther Elliss and Raylee Johnson on Tuesday, making official moves they earlier told the players about.

Clarett

Clarett's release was reported Sunday, soon after coach Mike Shanahan notified him he would be cut. The third-round draft pick goes on waivers for 24 hours and if nobody picks him up, he is free to negotiate with any team.

Clarett missed about two weeks of practice with a nagging groin injury that prevented him from making the trip to Houston, where the Broncos practiced three days and played the Texans in their preseason opener.

CFB | LSU postpones game due to Hurricane Katrina

LSU has also canceled classes until Sept. 6.

LSU's Carl Maddox Field House is being used a Special Needs Shelter, the Pete Maravich Assembly Center has been designated as a triage unit for medical emergencies and the Bernie Moore Track will be used as a helicopter landing site.

The school hoped to announce the date for the postponed game in the next two to three days. LSU is ranked fifth in the country.

MLB | Report: Bellhorn leave Boston to join Yankees

NEW YORK — Mark Bellhorn is switching sides, signing with the New York Yankees after being released by the Boston Red Sox, according to MLB.com.

Bellhorn

Bellhorn will sign with the Yankees on Tuesday after he clears waivers, the Web site reported Monday night.

The infielder was put on unconditional release waivers by Boston on Friday after he refused to accept a minor-league assignment. He had been designated for assignment on Aug. 19.

Bellhorn hit three postseason homers last year but was hitting .216 with 109 strikeouts in 283 at-bats this year.

He went on the disabled list with a sprained left thumb July 18, a day after getting hurt while diving for Jason Giambi's grounder at Fenway Park.

Like clockwork, each year thousands of new freshmen flock to K-State. For many, the year is a time of learning, change, maturity, confusion and, for some, even embarrassment.

However, there are many resources. The following is a compilation of ten things incoming freshman should know when beginning their journey at K-State.

By Jessica Holland | KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

10 Things freshmen need to know

1. THERE IS A LOT TO LEARN, SO GET READY.

Heather Reed, assistant director of student life, suggested students ask questions frequently to absorb all the information possible.

"Know that you won't know everything and when you don't know what to do, get advice," Reed said.

2. SITTING THROUGH BORING CLASSES DOES ACTUALLY HAVE A PAYOFF.

"The obvious thing they can do is go to class. It can make your freshman year a much more successful endeavor," Reed said.

Attending classes frequently will let the teacher know students are serious and will better prepare students for tests.

3. ONE OF THE BEST WAYS TO ADJUST IS TO GET INVOLVED.

"Get involved in activities here and join clubs associated with your major," Dr. David Andrus, professor of marketing, said. "Go to a club's first meeting and sign up to be a member."

Doing so will allow freshmen to branch out and meet other freshmen. Also, students can build their resumes and learn hands-on about their interests.

Garry Bowman, sports information director for K-State, said attending sporting events are a great way to show your school spirit.

"Buy K-State athletic tickets because it's part of the college experience to support your fellow students and the athletes here," Bowman said. "Also, take pride in your institution because these are the memories you'll have for a lifetime."

5. ALL WORK AND NO PLAY MAKES FOR A LONG, BORING YEAR.

Daralyn Gordon Arata, a pre-law adviser, said freshman should take time to enjoy their experience here at K-State.

"Take a course just because it sounds interesting and you want to," Arata said.

6. FOCUS ON SCHOOL AND REMEMBER THAT THIS ISN'T HIGH SCHOOL ANYMORE.

"College is a full-time job and it's not just the hours you spend in class that you must think about. It's also the two or three hours per hour of class that you should spend preparing and studying," Arata said.

Taking time to stay focused on academics now can have huge payoffs in the future.

7. AVOID THE URGE TO SPEND ENTIRE HOUR BLOCKS ON THE FACEBOOK.

It's easy to get sucked in and even easier to forget about those homework assignments that are supposed to be getting done.

8. THE ADD/DROP OFFICE IS LOCATED IN WILLARD HALL.

The process for adding or dropping a class can also be completed online.

9. KEEPING IN TOUCH WITH THOSE BACK AT HOME IS KEY TO STAYING SANE.

Lauren Hatfield, senior in management, advises freshmen to make contact with family and friends at home as often as possible. Even simple phone calls can fight off homesickness.

"Call your parents," Hatfield said. "They will always be your biggest fans."

10. THERE IS ENOUGH OF EVERYTHING AT K-STATE TO GO AROUND. JUST RELAX AND ENJOY!

Windi Singers, junior in mass communications and a resident assistant for Moore Hall, said students should stay patient and respectful of other students.

"You don't have to get to the dining center 20 minutes early," Singer said. "There will be enough food."

New album consolidation of Spoon's talent

"Gimme Fiction"

Album review by Mark Sibilla

Austin, Texas' brilliant indie rock band, Spoon, has been through an array of changes throughout its 10-year career.

There have been changes in labels. When Elektra dumped the band in 1998, Spoon remained unsigned until Merge Records picked it up in 2000.

The line-up has been modified, although the core players, multi-instrumentalist Britt Daniel and drummer Jim Eno, have remained the same. The band's sound also has refused to stand still throughout each of the band's five releases.

One thing that has remained constant for Spoon is front man Britt Daniel's ability to craft wonderful melodies. After the band's derivative debut, "Telephono," Daniel has crafted albums that improve upon each other with new sounds and ideas. Yet with each release, Daniel has put such a personal touch into each of his songs that even with these changes, they still manage to sound uniquely like Spoon.

Earlier this year, Spoon released its fifth album "Gimme Fiction." The album is more of a coherent statement than 2002's "Kill the Moonlight" which, while pushing the band's sound in new, exciting directions, seemed more like a compilation of great tracks rather than a uniform artistic statement. "Gimme Fiction" does not venture as far musically as "Moonlight," but rather is more of a consolidation of Spoon's strengths as a band.

"Gimme Fiction," it could be argued, is a concept album, exploring how we allow our lives to be overcome with various fictions: whether to blind ourselves from truths or deeper meanings in situations, or to screen others from our own personal pratfalls and foibles. The album seems to be divided into three distinct sections, each exploring certain musical and lyrical themes.

The album opens with "The Beast and Dragon, Adored," a semi-bluesy dirge consisting of piano, guitar, bass, and drums that states the album's purpose. The track would be a fairly straightforward Lennon-esque number, but Daniel pollutes it with messy guitar attacks and strange samples that blur the track's hooks wonderfully – like a well-crafted fiction.

"Two Sides/Monsieur Valentine," a jaunty guitar rock ditty about a charming knave, follows. Here, fictions are directly addressed: "You think things are straight but they're not what they seem/Til you know the two sides of Monsieur Valentine."

"I Turn My Camera On" is a minimalist funk song consisting of high hat, finger snaps, sound effects and a four-chord bass groove.

Courtesy art

"My Mathematical Mind" is an intense, piano-driven song. The lyrics chide someone for their apparent phoniness: "I'm looking through you/You know who you are."

The second third of the album takes a more pared-down approach to the music. After the revelations made by "My Mathematical Mind," Daniel finally wants some truth. Lines like "I'll own up to you if you own up to me," in "The Delicate Place" highlight this.

"Sister Jack" is a foot-stomping acoustic number that is followed by the near perfect "I Summon You." Here, Daniel has the weight of the world "coming down like a mother's eye." He needs a release and he summons his love to him to deal with these realizations.

The final third of "Gimme Fiction" is less immediate than the rest of the album, but repeated listens show its brilliance.

"The Infinite Pet" is a slithery song that runs along a pounding piano and fuzzy synthesizer lines. "Was It You?" is a claustrophobic funk number. The simple instrumentation brings an uneasiness to the song, perfectly complimenting the lyrics about a late-night walk in the park: "Someone doing something not right/Who was it that we saw that night/Was it you?"

This bleeds into thunderstorm sound effects and the pounding synths of "They Never Got You." After the revelations made earlier in the album, this song perfectly marks the shifting theme in the final third: the cover-up. Daniel has let us into his psyche, but now he is trying to push us back out. "Don't let 'em in/ Don't go to far/And cover your tracks/ Cover the path to your heart." The album ends with the rollicking "Merchants of Soul."

Throughout its career, Spoon has managed to endure much, through releases that further the argument that Spoon is one of the best indie bands working today. With "Gimme Fiction," Spoon has created a consistent, musical testimonial to its lasting virtuosity.

THIS DAY IN HISTORY

1997 Princess Diana died

Diana, Princess of Wales, died in Paris' Pitie-Salpetriere Hospital after suffering massive chest injuries in an early morning car accident.
Her companion, Dodi Fayed, was killed instantly in the 12:25 a.m. crash, as was driver Henri Paul, who was drunk and who lost control of the Mercedes in a highway underpass. He was driving at excessive speeds in a reckless attempt to escape paparazzi photographers.

Diana's bodyguard, Trevor Rees Jones, escaped with serious, but nonfatal, injuries. He was the only one wearing his seat belt. The death of Diana, beloved by millions for her beauty and good nature, plunged the world into mourning.

1985 The "Night Stalker" was attacked by a mob

Richard Ramirez, the notorious "Night Stalker," is captured and nearly killed by a mob in East Los Angeles, Calif., after being recognized from a photograph shown both on television and in newspapers. Recently identified as the serial killer through a partial fingerprint, Ramirez was pulled from the enraged mob by police officers.

1965 Ky refuses to negotiate with the Communists

Premier Nguyen Cao Ky announced that South Vietnam would not negotiate with the Communists without guarantees that North Vietnamese troops would be withdrawn from the South. He also said his government would institute major reforms to correct economic and social injustices. Also on this day: In the United States, President Johnson signs into law a bill making it illegal to destroy or mutilate a U.S. draft card, with penalties of up to five years and a $10,000 fine.

1957 Death Of A Daredevil

He was founder of the "Jimmie Lynch Daredevils" stunt drivers show.

1955 Sun Power

The world's first solar-powered automobile, designed by William G. Cobb, was demonstrated at the General Motors Powerama in Chicago. Today, solar car competitions are organized all over the world, pitting design teams against each other in grueling races. However, a mass-produced solar car has yet to hit the market.

1939 Germany prepared for invasion of Poland

At noon, despite threats of British and French intervention, Nazi leader Adolf Hitler signed an order to attack Poland, and German forces moved to the frontier. That evening, Nazi S.S. troops wearing Polish uniforms staged a phony invasion of Germany, damaging several minor installations on the German side of the border. They also left behind a handful of dead German prisoners in Polish uniforms to serve as further evidence of the alleged Polish attack, which Nazi propagandists publicized as an unforgivable act of aggression.

teams finished with more than one loss all season.

Snyder said he feels better about his defense and is optimistic it will be better this year.

"I think we tackle better, I think we pursue better and I think we're playing with a greater amount of depth," Snyder said. "We play with a little bit more spirit, and I think we are a little better coverage team right now than we were a year ago."

The attitude of the team has been adjusted this year, junior wide receiver Yamon Figurs said, as a "team first" attitude has been emphasized, bringing the team closer together.

"There's a big difference, we're more together this year," Figurs said. "It's more of a family thing this year. That was the emphasis. We had too much 'I,' too many selfish people on the team that didn't want to step up."

K-State senior finds home as tuba player after Color Guard

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kyle Walters is not afraid to be different.

He proved this last spring, when he auditioned for the K-State Color Guard, the predominantly female visual asset to the K-State Marching Band.

"You've got to just do your thing," he said.

Walters, senior in music education, auditioned unsuccessfully for the K-State Color Guard once before, but he decided to give it another shot.

"I did (flag line) as a senior in high school," he said, "and I just figured I'd give it another try."

In K-State history, only one other male has entered the Color Guard. That was in 1995 or 1996, band director Frank Tracz said.

However, since band participation has decreased from last school year, Walters was asked to consider abandoning his role on

Sproles donates jersey for center

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The KSU Child Development Center is raising funds for a new building with help from Darren Sproles, K-State football team's all-time leading rusher.

The center is selling raffle tickets for a chance to win a K-State football jersey autographed by Sproles who is now in his rookie season with the NFL's San Diego Chargers.

Debra Ring, director of the KSU Child Development Center, said she hopes to raise about $50,000 through ticket sales, which will go toward the first phase of a new building.

Ring said the center needs a new building so they can take care of more children and help alleviate the child-care shortage in the community. Currently the center is at capacity with 197 children.

"There are only about 500 slots for child care in Manhattan," Ring said. "The average waiting list for an infant is one year, for a toddler it's five to seven months."

In addition to the fundraiser, the university is also looking at what would be best for the center's future, which may or may not include a new building on

K-State ranks among best U.S. colleges

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The 2005-2006 Princeton Review is out – and K-State made the list once again.

K-State placed on the Best 361 Colleges list, and was also named one of the 122 best western colleges, an award based on geographic location.

"We have an incredibly caring faculty," Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco said. "Our students are engaged, not only in the classroom, but outside the classroom."

This year's Princeton Review was based on 110,000 student surveys from at least 361 colleges across the nation. The students surveyed were asked to rate their schools and report on their campus experiences.

K-State usually does very well in rankings concerned with students' accomplishments during their time at K-State, Bosco said, though K-State does not typically score well in surveys dealing with the general characteristics of incoming students.

Bush says Gulf recovery will take years

By David Espo
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. – President Bush pledged Wednesday to do "all in our power" to save lives and provide sustenance to uncounted victims of Hurricane Katrina but cautioned that recovery of the Gulf Coast will take years.

"We're dealing with one of the worst natural disasters in our nation's history," he said at the White House after breaking off his Texas vacation and viewing the devastation from Air Force One.

With a vast federal relief effort grinding into operation – from food and shelter to spraying for disease-carrying

Local Red Cross offers relief

As aid pours in from across the nation to help the victims of Hurricane Katrina, several local residents are packing their bags and making their way to the affected areas.

Three are already there and more are on the way, said Jason Lantz, director of operations for the American Red Cross of the Flint Hills. The first, Bob Stamey, owner of Kanza Capital, is serving as a government relations supervisor in Baton Rouge, La.

Lantz said Stamey is working as a link between the Red Cross and the government, and he is helping coordinate transportation of refugees from the Superdome in New Orleans to other shelters. Wire reports said conditions in the Superdome, home field of the New Orleans Saints football team, are deteriorating for the thousands of people who weathered the storm there Monday but are unable to return to their homes.

Lantz said Deb Swoboda, emergency preparedness coordinator for Washington County, and Lucy Voisine of Junction City arrived in Louisiana yesterday with an emergency response vehicle, or ERV. He said the vehicle is essentially a box truck that delivers food and water from Red Cross kitchens to disaster victims.

"By the time it's all said and done, we'll have 10-12 people down there," Lantz said.

Lindy Jensen, health and safety coordinator for the Riley County Red Cross, will be flying to Houston, Texas, where the Red Cross is organizing much of their resources. She expects to go to Louisiana from there to help with recovery efforts.

"Jason asked me if I could go, and I said 'if you can handle this place alone,'" she said. Jensen said her current job is mostly CPR and aid training, and said she was nervous about going.

The relief organization is searching for volunteers to take three weeks off to go to places in need of help. Those interested should attend disaster relief training from 9 a.m to 5 p.m. Sept. 8 at the American Red Cross of the Flint Hills at 2601 Anderson Ave.

Lantz said all transportation, food and lodging expenses for volunteers who go are paid by the Red Cross.

"It's a cot, but it's still lodging," he said.

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Railroad derailment

A 17-car train with two tanker cars carrying a highly flammable liquid jumped the tracks at about 10:40 p.m. Tuesday, forcing evacuations of 40 to 50 nearby homes in Hutchinson, Kan. Crews worked Wednesday to clean up the spill from the tanker cars and they were able to minimize the danger. No injuries were reported.

Lyons gas leaks

Crews in Lyons, Kan., are fixing at least 16 potentially explosive natural gas leaks that were uncovered near a school and a hospital. It will cost the city about $350,000 to repair the leaks and replace old pipes. Some of the pipes are near Lyons Middle School and Rice County District No. 1 Hospital.

CBGB lease not renewed

Despite several hundred supporting New York City's CBGB, the landlord of the venerable punk club announced Wednesday the lease on the 32-year-old club would not be renewed. Punk bands the Ramones, Blondie and Talking Heads were spawned at the club, and it is said to be the birthplace of punk music.

DIVERSIONS

A waste of time — but hey, it's better than lecture

Who came up with that?

THE STAPLER

Brass paper fasteners were introduced in the mid-1860s, and by 1866 George W. McGill had developed a machine to insert these fasteners into papers. The first stapling machine had a supply of preformed wire staples and were fed automatically to the staple-driving mechanism; it was patented in 1878.

THE ERASER

A lot of erasers are made by pencil manufacturers. That makes sense, since we think of the eraser as a regular component of the everyday pencil. But pencils didn't always have erasers. The first patent for attaching an eraser to a pencil was issued in 1858 to a man from Philadelphia named Hyman Lipman. And even today in Europe, most pencils are sold without erasers. The eraser was originally referred to as a "rubber," because the tree resin it was made of "rubbed out" marks made by a pencil. While some of the erasers you find on pencils are made from synthetic rubber, an increasing number of erasers are made from vinyl.

THE TEA BAG

Tea bags were pioneered by New York tea and coffee shop merchant Thomas Sullivan who sent samples of his various tea blends to customers in small hand-sewn muslin bags. Finding they could brew tea simply by pouring boiling water over a tea bag in a cup, customers placed hundreds of orders for Sullivan's tea bags, which were soon packed by a specially developed machine.

THE FORTUNE COOKIE

The history of fortune cookies dates back to the 13th and 14th centuries when China was occupied by the Mongols. The traditional lotus-nut paste moon cakes were used to hide secret messages regarding the date of a popular uprising against the invaders. The uprising was successful and so the basis of the Ming Dynasty was formed.

When the Chinese were building the great American railways through the Sierra Nevada to California, they put happy messages inside biscuits to exchange at the moon festival instead of cakes, and so fortune cookies began. A cottage industry emerged as the Chinese settled in San Francisco and until 1964 — when the first automated production started — they were made by hand.

KLEENEX

In 1924, Kleenex Brand invented the facial tissue category, promoted by screen legends Helen Hayes and Jean Harlow. A steady stream of innovations marked the decade. The first pop-up cartons with a perforated opening were introduced in 1928, and in 1929, the brand was the first to sell colored tissue.

SILLY PUTTY

James Wright, a Scottish engineer working for General Electric in 1943, combined boric acid and silicone oil in a test tube. The compound became "polymerized." Wright removed the gooey substance from the test tube and tossed some on the floor. In 1950, marketing consultant Peter Hodgson decided to sell 1-ounce wads of the compound in plastic eggs for $1. After studying 15 possible names for the product, Hodgson chose the one the one that he said summed up the product perfectly — Silly Putty was born!

THE SPORK

The name "Spork" is a blend of the words spoon and fork. Spork is the trademarked name for a piece of cutlery combining the features of a spoon, a fork and sometimes a knife. It is also called the Runcible Spoon. A patent for the Spork was issued on Aug. 11, 1970, to Van Brode Milling Co. Inc. of Clinton, Mass.

4-H celebrates 100 years

Club gives opportunities, personal development

By Tessa French
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kansas 4-H is nearly a century old and still going strong.

Though the anniversary isn't officially until October, the 100-year celebration will be Sept. 9-18 at the Kansas State Fair in Hutchinson, Kan.

The fair, a blend of concerts, comedians and carnival rides, will also give 4-H members a chance to display projects and have them viewed and judged.

4-H stands for head, heart, hands and health. At each meeting, members recite: "I pledge my head to clearer thinking, my heart to great loyalty, my hands to larger service, and my health to better living."

From age six to age 18, children can join a local 4-H club and participate in projects ranging from showing pigs and lambs to painting, ceramics and cooking.

Many people associate the program with agriculture but it involves an array of branches.

Projects completed by 4-H members are displayed at county fairs and sometimes state fairs.

At monthly meetings, members learn parliamentary procedures and how professional meetings are conducted. Officers are elected within the club and members are required to give at least one speech to the club about their 4-H experiences. Committees manage volunteer opportunities and organize parties.

Jessica Sievers, sophomore in fine arts, was a 4-H member for 10 years.

"As for life skills acquired, I definitely learned fast how to get up in front of a group of people to give a presentation because that's part of it," Sievers said.

Terry Tracy, sophomore in secondary education, agreed with Sievers. A 4-H member for a few years, he said it shaped who he is today.

"It helps you evolve better communication skills," Tracy said.

Many 4-H members plan to involve their children in the organization.

"There are so many opportunities that 4-H gives you," Sievers said.

Sievers, who lives at Alpha of Clovia, a scholarship house for former 4-H members, said her participation in 4-H helped her earn scholarships, specifically one she received this year. She said her involvement in the program showed her leadership abilities.

"The 4-H experience also allows for growth as a leader in one's club, community, state and with opportunities such as Citizen Washington Focus, the participants become involved in taking part in national government," Sievers said.

Sievers said 4-H had a large effect on her. Her interest in photography stems from her enjoyment of a 4-H project.

"We had an awesome program in my area and that's what made me decide to make a career out of it," she said.

Another part of 4-H is the Rock Springs 4-H Camp in the Flint Hills.

"It is the largest privately-operated facility of its type in the United States," Gordon Hibbard, president of the Kansas 4-H Foundation, said. 4-H members of all ages flock to the camp every summer.

"I actually was in 4-H just so I could go to the Rock Springs camp," said Josh McGinn, freshman in history. "I literally would just go to the meetings so that I could sign up."

The camp, though, will soon look different than it did when McGinn attended. It recently received a $15,000 Sunflower Foundation grant to be used for the construction of a new walking trail at the camp, Hibbard said.

Sievers was a 4-H camper and later worked as a counselor.

"I loved it. It's one of the best experiences," she said.

The first 4-H activity occurred in 1898, and by 1915 there were 4-H clubs in almost every state. As the program grew through the 1920s and 1930s, less emphasis was put on projects and more on the development of the individual.

Some Kansas 4-H chapters, however, are seeing a drop in membership numbers.

"More people are getting into sports now," Sievers said. "4-H doesn't place as much emphasis on competition, but rather on bettering yourself. You get feedback from experts and are constantly improving. The values that 4-H teaches are things that America as a whole is straying away from."

Study finds women study more, get better grades

By Megan Green
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A recent study proves women get better grades than men.

The study, conducted by the research group Student Monitor, found women study more, read their textbooks more thoroughly, are more likely to earn A's in their courses and graduate in less time than men. Men are more likely to earn C's in their classes.

"I totally agree," Scott Stecklein, sophomore in open option, said. "We are procrastinators. I wait until the last minute."

More than one in four men study late at night compared to fewer than one in five women.

"I study for a test maybe two days before I have it," Jacob Wieneke, sophomore in mechanical engineering, said.

Women, however, seem to carry a more long-term perspective.

"Depending on the class and whether it is a hard test or not, I study at least a week before the test takes place," said Kristin Stang, senior in interior architecture.

The study found women are 35 percent more likely to study daily, 21 percent more likely to study 15 or more hours per week and 23 percent more likely to read their textbooks thoroughly.

"I look over my notes once a week and do the assigned reading for when it is due," said Amy Aadalen, junior in secondary education.

So what do guys do instead of studying? According to the study, they party. Men tend to party 20 percent more than women.

"The last thing on my mind is to study," Stecklein said. "This is college."

These statistics show study habits do make a difference when it comes to grades.

Students who study daily are 40 percent more likely to earn an "A" than students who don't, and students who study between 6 p.m. and midnight are twice as likely to earn an "A" as those who study after midnight.

The study confirmed the more a student studies, the better their grades are, regardless of gender.

"Get as much knowledge as possible," Linda Harvey, instructor in journalism and mass communications, said. "Read everything. You can't spend 24/7 studying but you can't spend 24/7 partying either. Remember that you are only human and set realistic goals."

- are 35% more likely to study daily
- are 21% more likely to study 15 or more hours/week
- are 23% more likely to read textbooks thoroughly

Team creates alphabet-shaped beef jerky tailored to kids' tastes

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Four K-State graduate students might not earn the favor of parents with a new product that encourages kids to play with their food.

The product, Jumble Beef Jerky, is shaped into the 26 letters of the alphabet, and the backs of the vacuum-sealed packages feature word games meant to inspire kids to play with words.

Jeannine Grobbel, Shanna Hutchison, Suzanne Ryan and Chris Raines, all graduate students in meat science, took their product, Jumble Beef Jerky, to Baltimore, Md., Aug. 8-12 to the joint conference of the International Congress of Meat Science and Technology and the American Meat Science Association. There they placed third of five teams in the "Taste of ICoMST" competition.

The students created the product while Mike Dikeman, Liz Boyle and Melvin Hunt, professors of animal sciences and industry, advised the team.

The competition's theme this year was "shelf stable." Jerky, having no moisture, fits this bill. The process of drying meat into jerky has been used for centuries to preserve food.

"We're biased, but we think they had the most unique product at the competition," Dikeman said.

Grobbel said the four team members took 40 pounds of lean-cut beef, chopped it and formed the letters using cookie cutters. They then dried the meat. They aimed the product at a young demographic with the flavor as well, she said, making its sweet-barbecue taste less spicy than most jerkies.

The process gave the team 14.6 pounds of the finished product to hand out to judges and conference attendees for sampling, Grobbel said. The amount of Jumble Beef Jerky left over is less than the eight ounces that would come in a $4.46 package.

The international conference comes to the United States every 10 to 12 years, Dikeman said. In between, the AMSA has its own conference, the Reciprocal Meat Conference, each year.

Grobbel said there is no plan to sell the jerky commercially yet, but she hopes the team can find a business willing to produce and sell it. She said larger-scale production would require a faster and more efficient process than the one the team used.

A business wouldn't want to make every piece by hand with cookie cutters, Grobbel said.

Wildcat Walk keeps students safe

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When it gets dark outside, students who don't want to walk alone can have an escort.

Wildcat Walk is an escort service available to all students at any time through the K-State Police.

K-State offers a safety service not many students use, Troy Lane, university police captain, said.

This service has been around for at least 10 years, Lane said. However, he has seen it evolve and change leadership.

It was once run by Hale Library, and at one point, Lane said one of the residence halls chaired the service.

"It kind of fell into our laps," he said.

Lane said the service falls under the campus police's priority of student safety, but that if students walk in pairs or groups, it achieves the same result as Wildcat Walk.

This semester, though, Lane said there haven't been many incidents with students walking alone.

Lindsey Jones, senior in animal science, said she feels fairly safe on campus, but not so safe around City Park.

"Usually I have a friend accompany me if my boyfriend's not around," she said.

Jones generally takes Prince, her Australian Shepherd, with her when she walks anywhere. Jones said the dog is more protective than a boyfriend.

Kelly Grant, senior in bakery science, said she also feels safe on campus, but not as safe walking to Aggieville or City Park.

Wildcat Walk is only available for use on campus.

Thinking about Graduate School?

If so, you should consider applying to the Kansas State University

McNair Scholars Program

The McNair Scholars Program will:

* Help you choose the right graduate schools for your career goals,
* Help you get ready for the G.R.E. and other entrance exams,
* Help you apply for graduate admittance and financial aid,
* Help you prepare to be successful in graduate school, and,
* Provide financial support while you complete a research internship in your chosen field.

To be eligible for the McNair Scholars Program, you must:

* Be a U.S. citizen, or hold a valid work permit (or "green card"),
* Be a Kansas State University sophomore, junior, or senior,
* Be academically successful (with a G.P.A. of 3.0 or above), and,
* Be at least one of the following:
  - a low-income student whose parent(s) or guardian(s) have not received a four-year college degree, or,
  - a member of a group presently under-represented in graduate study as defined by the U.S. Dept of Education

For more information, contact Lora Boyer at 532-6137 or lorajb@ksu.edu, or see the McNair Homepage at http://www.ksu.edu/mcnair

TO THE POINT

K-State offers more than top ranking

In a recent publication released by the Princeton Review, K-State was ranked as one of the 122 best western colleges.

Each year, the university lauds its accomplishments and achievements to incoming students, their parents and others.

However, these awards are merely recognitions for the quality education and experience student receive here and should be treated as just that – recognition.

K-State should be proud of such accomplishments but remember Rhodes scholars and Princeton Review rankings are less important than providing the best education to students who decide they want a degree from this institution.

Every higher-education institution in the country has some type of awards list to impress prospective students and others with.

K-State is lucky to be able to boast much more than other schools. Winning sports programs and high-quality academics are only a small portion of what K-State has to offer.

The rankings published in some book do not show the true quality and depth of the K-State experience.

So keep touting those awards, but don't rely on them to hook students into attending.

Allow the K-State atmosphere of friendliness and quality to speak louder than the Princeton Review rankings.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Moving to the funhouse

Meadowlark Hills turns out to not be such a great place for a junior

GRANT REICHERT

When we last left off, our hero had just escaped from the nightmare dystopia that is the K-State residence halls, his sanity intact despite the brutalizing conformity of "The System." He is a man, not a number. He will be free!

Dang. Where to live now?

Luckily, I (yeah, I'm just going to abruptly drop the whole third person concept right now) picked up a brochure titled "Meadowlark Hills: An Abundance of Senior Lifestyle Choices."

True, I'm just a junior, but this place looked posh. It's expensive if you get the best package, so I just picked the essentials – basic cable, 20-meal plan and twice-daily ass-wiping. Who needs all those channels, anyway?

But I had to get out of there, because the chicks were just too crazy – being 60 plus, they had nothing to lose, besides the odd fingernail or unnatural fleshy protuberance. They were so hard core they not only took drugs intravenously, but all liquids, assorted caloric mushes, vitamins, television and bingo. I couldn't keep up.

So, finally, I settled on a house with a couple other guys – or, as they prefer to be called, my "same-sex housemates." Really, when are conservatives going to stop being bigots and realize that any combination of people incidentally living together deserve the full accoutrements of marriage? You can't restrict marriages to just two people that love each other; how about us hateful triads? Who's going to march for us?

Anyway, it was still difficult to pick a house. So many questions: Does it have central air? In the event of a zombie apocalypse, can it be quickly converted into a makeshift fortress? Is the house built on an ancient Indian burial ground?

In the end, the salesman took us in with his sweet talk. "Oh, yeah, it definitely has a basement. It's just flooded right now. With dirt. And concrete."

"The ants? If you lay on the deck, they'll carry you off – you'll feel like Gulliver after the Super Bowl. That'll cost you extra."

"And those flames on the roof? They keep large predators away. You don't want you or your same-sex housemates to be devoured by large predators, do you?"

But it's a good house. We stayed there this summer, and decided, being cheapskates, that we'd largely forego air-conditioning. Best decision – ever.

It was so hot, we could tan inside. And since we sweated so much, we saved money on showers – the traditional "hippie bath" was just fine. Sure, we might have smelled like an anti-war rally was taking place in our armpits, but on the upside you could just rub foods up against your body for a nicely salted treat.

Food was scarce, though. We quickly progressed from eating food, to eating pictures of food, to eating at Gumby's Pizza. But, after having our appendixes removed and buried in a mile-deep Utah bunker, we realized it was a time for a dietary change.

So we picked up an intern from the American Institute of Baking – but he only lasted a week. Plus he was stringy and not at all well-marbled – what are they teaching these kids? And he would not shut up: "I need more salt; just a pinch of basil; aargh I'm burning alive; ketchup is the barbarian's condiment," etc.

Well, that's all for today's episode: Tune in next week as our hero attempts to do his laundry – but finds out he lacks sufficient detergent! He is a man, not a number – he will be free!

Bringing troops home not a new issue

ZACHARY T. ECKELS

Believe it or not, until last week I intensely argued there was no way our soldiers could come home from Iraq. What many people failed to understand was these arguments in no way meant I supported this war.

As far as I'm concerned, the debate on whether the war in Iraq is right or wrong was settled long ago. Sorry to say all you warmongers lost.

I have no idea how any government can claim the right to preemptive strike. If every nation in the world claimed another country had the potential to attack them, the end of the world wouldn't be far away. But I digress.

The real argument on whether to bring the troops home or not is eerily similar to the same situation we faced in Vietnam. Can the country we're supporting really take care of itself when we leave?

The answer in Vietnam, of course, turned out to be a huge no. We were betting all our chips on a government led by a corrupt leader, Nguyen Van Thieu.

Although Iraq does not appear to be corrupt like Vietnam, I have finally given up all hope Iraq will ever be able to stabilize itself enough without our help.

Their government alone can't make up its mind on what they want. Even if the constitution – which has met strong opposition from Sunni Arabs – is passed, there will remain a huge rift between the Sunnis and the rest of Iraq's population.

This tension in their country only leads to tragedies like we witnessed on Wednesday. Shiites, thinking the Sunnis were targeting them again, trampled each other on a bridge, killing up to 1,000 people.

Sadly, this isn't what finally convinced me that Iraq will end up in a total civil war. Even with the mistrust and disputes between the different sects in Iraq, a strong military should be able to retain the peace.

A strong military is something that won't be coming to Iraq in the near future. This should have become obvious to anyone long ago after hearing about Iraq's troops.

It's amazing to me that, even after the best training in the world, these soldiers can't seem to function at all.

There are several instances of American soldiers having to take cover while the Iraq troops fired blindly in all directions.

Situations like this might be explained by the claims from an Iraqi major who said the Iraqi officers only receive eight weeks of training. Eight weeks was hardly enough time to learn all the material for my one class this summer, and I guarantee you becoming an officer is quite a bit harder than digital photography.

I realize the idea of letting civil war take over this country is a very bloodcurdling thought, but so was realizing that Vietnam was going to be taken over by communists.

It is now our commander in chief's duty to once again focus on actual terrorists. We need to put our focus back on the troops fighting daily in Afghanistan trying to find Osama Bin Laden.

The only thing worse than starting an unjust war is to lose an unjust war, but as my mother used to say to me: "you should have thought about that in the first place."

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

5th year choice wrong

Editor,

I am concerned with your choice for the "Ask the 5th year columnist". Call me crazy but hanging out on the fifth floor of Goodnow Hall doesn't qualify one as having, and I quote, "range of knowledge is extremely broad, especially on the 'whole college experience.'" I hope no freshman would look to this as an example.

After all the basic topics are covered in this type of column, is he going to be able to describe something like Aggieville to an interested audience? No. I have had classes with the columnist, and could pick him out of a crowd.

Basically what I am trying to say is I have never seen him in Aggieville or a normal social setting with the rest of older K-State students that do not hang out in the dorms on weekends. Not that going out makes you cool, but it does make life a little more interesting.

The point I am trying to make is this columnist does not bring justice to the majority of the fifth-year students at K-State. As the campus newspaper, one would think they would choose a columnist that fits the group they are trying to represent. Was this position open to all fifth-years so they could have the opportunity to pass knowledge to the underclassmen? Did multiple people apply for this position or was it just given to a friend of a Collegian staff member?

CIM sets record straight

Editor,

Citizens for Independent Media takes issue with the Collegian's editorial "To The Point" of Friday Aug. 26, for the following reasons:

1. Your opening statement is a lie. CIM does not seek more government control. The spectrum on which KMAN and all other radio and television stations broadcast is the property of the citizens. The airwaves are given to the broadcaster with the understanding that they will provide programming that is of service to the community.

2. Secondly, we want to address the "logical solution" of starting a competing local station. With this statement the editors show not only their ignorance of the situation but also the true nature of their editorial: partisan propaganda. The Telecommunications Act of 1996 has allowed not only the massive consolidation of the media market on the national level but also at the local level where the four leading radio stations are controlled by the same single interest who also owns the Manhattan Mercury.

3. Finally, the editors' reference to "infringement on the First Amendment" is outrageous. The editors themselves are stepping on the First Amendment by supporting the narrow and bigoted programming that currently fills KMAN's scheduling that allows no room for opposing points of view to be expressed.

CIM seeks to improve the quality of media in the Manhattan area. The editorial was about something that the editors had no solid facts or information about. We charge that the editorial was written entirely out of innuendo.

We hope the editors of the Collegian will take this opportunity to reflect on their hastily-constructed editorial.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Collegian should put more thought into editorials

Editor,

"Group should not force KMAN format change."

I must say, if this is any indication of the quality of work we can expect on the opinion page, it's going to be a long year.

Please, put a little more thought into your editorials.

First of all, there is nothing in the CIM mission statement calling for greater governmental regulation of media.

I can't imagine where you got the notion that it was. Please try to get your facts straight.

Secondly, nobody has the ability to "force" KMAN to do anything.

CIM is trying to persuade KMAN that it would be in their best interest, and the community's, to offer a wider range of news and commentary.

Or are we now living in a society in which people are afraid to hear views they may disagree with?

I hope not, but if so, democracy is doomed.

Thirdly, on the idea that the "logical solution would be to start a competing radio station": you make that sound as though it would be easy to do, when in fact, it would probably be impossible.

We are pretty much stuck with the ones we have. What is wrong with asking them to serve the public better?

I would not want to live in a society in which people really believe it's just fine if only those who can afford to own a radio station get to decide what ideas are heard.

You can't have a "free market of ideas" if the marketplace is controlled by the almighty dollar.

CIM just wants the opportunity for a better mix of ideas to be heard in Manhattan. Again, how could that possibly be a bad thing?

"The choice was to walk or to bowl. So I chose to walk."

Terri Eddy

By Nick Dunn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Bowling has been a part of Terri Eddy's life for as long as she can remember.

Years ago, when Eddy was 11 years old and bowling in junior leagues on Saturday mornings, she had no idea her passion for bowling would eventually land her in the Kansas Women's Bowling Hall of Fame.

"To me, it was quite an honor," Eddy, recreation manager at the K-State Student Union, said. "The induction into the hall of fame really put the icing on the cake. The sport of bowling has been good to me, and that made it complete."

On April 16, the Kansas Women's Bowling Hall of Fame inducted Eddy as a member.

"I think it's great," Kelly Umscheid, technician at the Union's basement recreation center and Eddy's coworker for 20 years, said. "It should have been done a long time ago, because it is something that she really deserves."

For 12 years, Eddy had the Kansas women's record for best score in a series, with a total of 812 in three consecutive games in 1984. This marked the first time a Kansas woman ever bowled more than 800 in a series and was the main reason for Eddy's induction.

With the advancing equipment, a score of 800 has become more attainable in recent years, making her record score 20 years ago even more impressive.

"That is definitely the greatest experience I ever had bowling," Eddy said of the day she bowled 812, which included a personal-best score of 298 in one round. "It is something I will never forget."

Then, five years ago, Eddy discovered she would be unable to bowl for medical reasons.

Golf team looks to rebound from disappointing season

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With what some call a disappointing season for the K-State women's golf team behind them, the women are looking forward to this season's tournaments.

The Wildcats' best finish last year was a tie for fourth place with San Francisco at the Ptarmigan/Ram Fall Classic in Fort Collins, Colo. They finished fifth at the Marilynn Smith Sunflower Invitational in Lawrence and sixth at the Susie Maxwell Bering Classic in Norman, Okla.

Junior Helene Robert said the team is ready to redeem itself after last year.

"We are prepared to have a better season than last year," she said. "All the girls are ready to go and ready to start the season."

Robert said one of the goals for the season is to play well in all phases of the tournaments, from the first round to the last hole.

"We need to work on being consistent," she said. "We had some good rounds last year, but it was hard for us to have three good rounds."

K-State qualified for the NCAA Regionals – which will be at Traditions golf club in Bryan, Texas, this year – in four of the last five seasons.

Last year, however, the squad didn't qualify for the tournament, after finishing eighth at the Big 12 Championships in Austin, Texas.

Robert said this year, qualifying for Regionals is a major goal for the team, but there is a greater goal.

"The ultimate goal is always to qualify for nationals," she said.

The NCAA Championship will be at the Ohio State Golf Club in Columbus, Ohio, this year. K-State has never qualified for the National Championships.

Sophomore Kali Quick said she is ready to play in tournaments and begin the season.

"I'm ready to get playing again and being competitive and see how low our team scores can be," she said.

Quick said she is trying to help two freshmen, Christine Arsenault and Krista Nelson feel more comfortable with the collegiate level of play.

Sophomore golfer Kali Quick lines up a putt during a match last season. Quick and the women's golf team will play their first tournament of the season, the Badger Invitational, Sept. 11.

"I'm helping them through the way the other girls helped with me," she said. "Being away from home and keeping them motivated and wanting to play every day is important."

Most of the team members competed at individual tournaments during the summer. Robert said she competed in amateur events in her hometown of Lac Brome, Quebec, to prepare for the season.

But competing is something that comes naturally to Robert.

USC's Leinart tough for rival fans to root against

KENT HILDEBRAND

You all know Matt Leinart, right? The guy who's basically been on the cover of about every major sports publication in the country this fall.

Well, if you don't know it, Leinart plays quarterback for the University of Southern California. He has led the Trojans to a pair of national championships the last two years and, oh yeah – he won the Heisman Trophy last season.

Just for good measure, when he's not busy being the best college quarterback in the country, he hangs out with Jessica Simpson and Alyssa Milano. Not too shabby.

Here's a guy who apparently won the genetic lottery – an amazing athlete with movie-star looks who lives in Southern California (he's the guy who looks like a manlier version of Seth Cohen, but is actually from the real O.C.)

So, of course, the media loves him. He's living the boyhood dream of every male. You'd think he might just be a touch cocky.

He ought to be the perfect person for K-State fans to hate. Like the Jason Whites of the past, there should be nothing we like more than seeing a high-profile quarterback from another school do poorly.

But this is the worst part: You just can't bring yourself to root against him.

First off, he's not in the Big 12 Conference, so the only way K-State will play him is in the national championship game (more on that later).

Then, there's the good guy factor.

Really, he's not cocky. People who know him say he's humble, charming and the perfect gentleman. After winning the Heisman and a couple of rings, he had nothing left to prove in college and probably would have been the No. 1 pick in last spring's NFL draft. But he opted to return so he could enjoy college.

When faced with the choice of filet mignon or Ramen noodles, Leinart went with the noodles.

Some darn tasty noodles they are, though.

Now, Leinart has the chance to win an unprecedented third-straight title and a second Heisman, a feat matched only by Ohio State's legendary Archie Griffin. He'll still have to go to class, but his one course this semester is ballroom dancing, which he's taking with his girlfriend, who plays basketball for the Trojans.

That'll be a tough load, even for a sociology major like Leinart.

Staff Reports

SPT | K-State to collect donations for storm victims

To help with the relief efforts involving those affected by Hurricane Katrina, the K-State Athletics Department will be accepting monetary donations on behalf of the American Red Cross prior to the Wildcats' season-opening football game vs. Florida International Saturday at KSU Stadium.

From 10:30 a.m. until kickoff, various locations around the stadium will be open to collect donations, with only cash or checks accepted.

All proceeds will go directly to the American Red Cross Disaster Relief Fund, which enables the Red Cross to provide shelter, food, counseling and other assistance to victims of Hurricane Katrina.

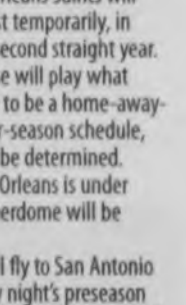
Additional information on the Red Cross and other ways to assist victims of Hurricane Katrina is available via the Internet at www.redcross.org.

YTH | Volunteer coaches needed for fall sports

The Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department is currently seeking volunteers interested in coaching a youth sports team this fall.

Leagues offered include soccer (grades 1-8) and volleyball (4-6).

Practices begin the week of Sept. 5, with games starting the week of Sept. 18 and running through Oct. 30.



Volunteers must be able to commit four to six hours per week for practices and games, with schedules determined by each coach.

Those interested should contact Mike Buchanon or Adam Dolezal at (785) 587-2757.

TEN | Hewitt advances easily at U.S. Open

NEW YORK — With the wind gusting up to 36 mph and blowing around everything that wasn't nailed down, Lleyton Hewitt wanted to finish his match as quickly as possible.

Hewitt

And win, of course.

Hewitt accomplished both goals, romping to a 6-1, 6-2, 6-1 first-round victory over Albert Costa at the U.S. Open on Wednesday. The ease of the match was in stark contrast to the stunner Tuesday night at Arthur Ashe Stadium, where Andy Roddick was swept 7-6 , 7-6, 7-6 by a little-known guy from little Luxembourg.

NFL | New Orleans Saints to practice in Houston

Displaced by the fury of Hurricane Katrina, the New Orleans Saints will set up shop, at least temporarily, in San Antonio for a second straight year. Where the franchise will play what now appears likely to be a home-away-from-home regular-season schedule, though, has yet to be determined.

Much of New Orleans is under water, and the Superdome will be evacuated.

The Saints will fly to San Antonio following Thursday night's preseason finale against the Oakland Raiders, will be reunited there with their families and begin preparations for the Sept. 11 season opener at Carolina. The Saints have spent this week practicing in San Jose, Calif.

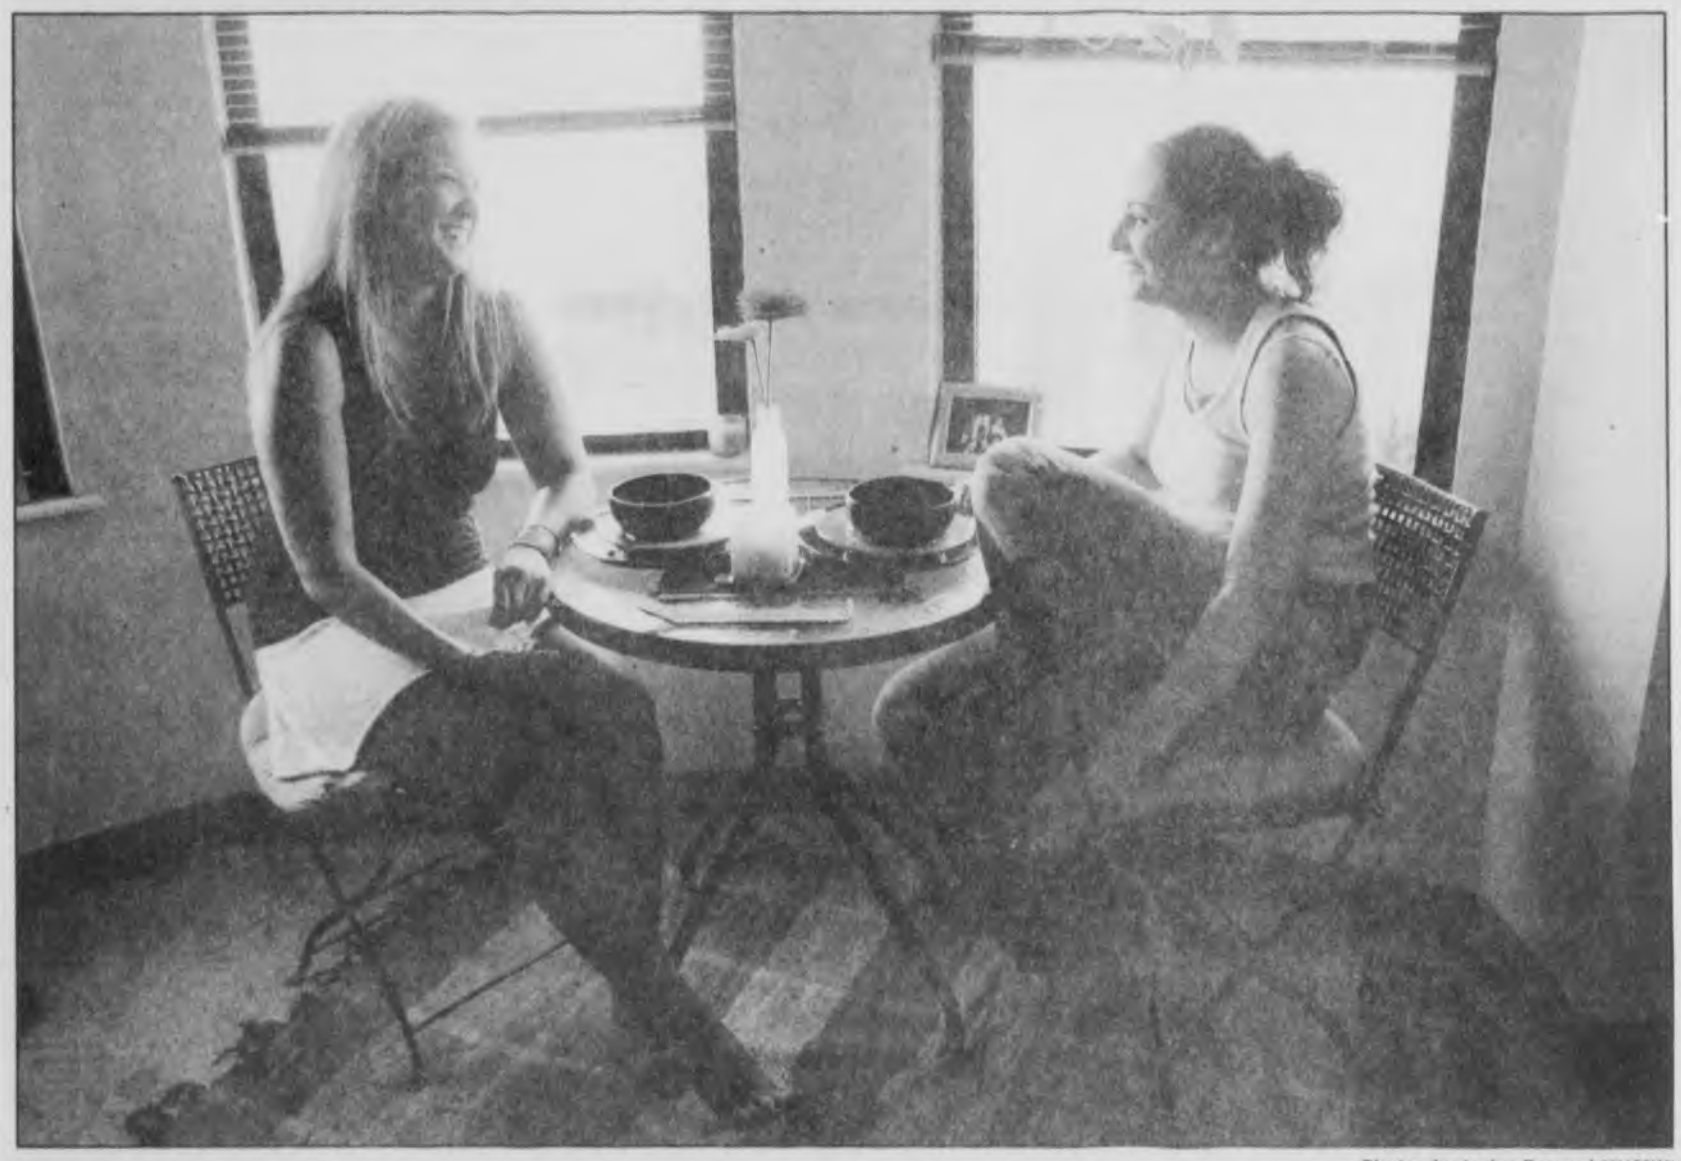
The Saints practiced for three days in San Antonio last year when they were forced to flee New Orleans in advance of Hurricane Ivan.

NFL | Colts' Pope suspended for drug violation

INDIANAPOLIS -- Indianapolis Colts linebacker Kendyll Pope was suspended for the season by the NFL on Wednesday for violating the league's substance abuse policy.

Pope

Pope, a second-year linebacker, cannot practice or play with the Colts until next August. The length of the suspension means Pope has tested positive for a banned substance at least three times.



The suspension begins immediately. Neither the Colts, who announced the suspension, nor the NFL said what substance Pope had tested positive for.

Pope's agent, George Mavrikes, did not immediately return a message seeking comment.

Indianapolis coaches thought Pope was progressing well after missing most of last season with a hip flexor injury.

Living in the 'Ville

ABOVE: People-watching and talking in their apartment above Aggieville, Natalie Anderson, senior in advertising, and Charlotte Kersten, senior in media production, enjoy the cafe with a view that they've set up. The pair just started their second year in one of the apartments in the Aggieville Penthouse, above Kite's.

Aggieville apartments blend social, home lives

By Matt Peterworth
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For many, attending K-State not only means going to classes but also making a pilgrimage to Aggieville every weekend to partake in an adult beverage or two. A select few have chosen to spend a little more time in Aggieville – they have rented loft apartments and get to call Aggieville home.

Charlotte Kersten, senior in media production, and Natalie Anderson, senior in advertising, have just started their second year living in an apartment above Kite's. They were excited to be by the bars.

"We weren't even 21 when we moved in," Kersten said.

Residents don't have to go any farther than their window for parades or just to see what's going on.

"There's always something fun going on in Aggieville," Anderson said.

Since they are close to all of the bars and pass them as they walk to campus, Anderson and Kersten know which local bands are playing each night and where all the good deals are in town.

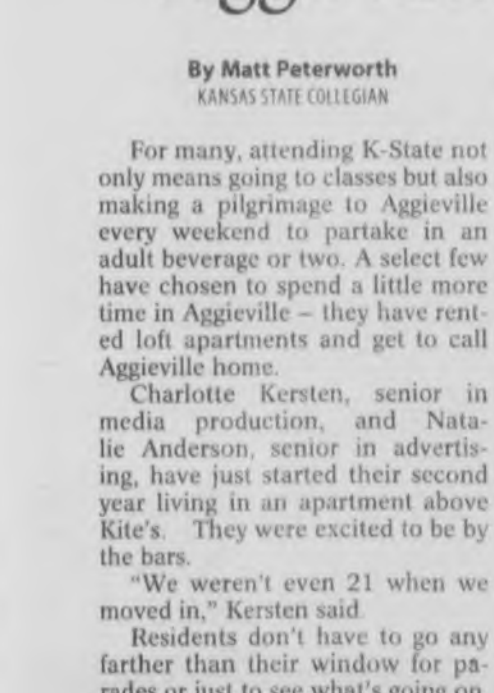
Kersten said living in Aggieville allows her and her roommate to go to more events but has the drawback of becoming more expensive.

Living above a bar, noise might be an issues especially on the weekends. However, Kersten said only Sunday nights bother her because that is Kite's karaoke night.

"We learn to block it out," Kersten said.

Another problem is parking. They sometimes park in the public lot right next to their building, but that has a two-hour time limit. They both have gotten several parking tickets. They are then left to parallel park on the streets just south of Aggieville.

They both agree, though, the benefits of living in Aggieville definitely outweigh the bad. They don't have to worry about drinking and driving because they are always within walking distance of home.



Gina Riffel of Diamond Real Estate Management, the company that leases the apartments above Kite's, said that they start advertising for the apartments in early January. They have seven two-bedroom apartments at various prices, and they fill up very quickly, she said.

There are two other options for living above Aggieville. Across the street from Kite's and above the Pita Pit are the 12th Street Lofts managed by MK Property Management.

Home cooking

By Kelly Schmitt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Memories of mom's home cooking grow fonder after a couple of weeks eating microwave meals and fast food.

Some college students may now even be inspired to turn on the oven.

Potato round casserole has very little preparation time.

It's also baked in the oven, bringing it one step closer to mom's cooking.

This recipe is easy and tasty. Students can refrigerate the leftovers and reheat later for a quick lunch.

If you have a recipe you would like to share, send an e-mail to collegian@spub.ksu.

Family recipes, ethnic recipes and tasty-but-easy recipes are welcome from students and faculty.

Quick and easy recipe

Potato Round Casserole:

1 pound ground beef, browned
1 can cream of potato soup (any brand)
1 package frozen potato rounds cheese slices
salt pepper
ketchup

First, preheat oven to 350 degrees.

Spread the ground beef into an even layer in a casserole dish.

Sprinkle with salt and pepper.

Spread the cream of potato soup into a thin, even layer.

Cover with a single layer of frozen potato rounds.

Bake for 30 – 40 minutes until potato rounds are golden.

Take it out of oven.

Allow to cool slightly. Serve with ketchup.

Put a twist on this recipe by substituting cream of mushroom soup for the cream of potato soup.

"Red Eye"
Review by Christina Hansen

Lisa Reisert hates flying.

After attending her grandmother's funeral, she reluctantly books a ticket on Fresh Air flight 1019 — the red eye to Miami. Lisa is eager to put a hellish week behind her, and return to her quiet life as a manager at a luxury hotel.

Inevitable flight delays, however, ground Lisa's flight for several hours. A confrontation with an exceptionally rude passenger unites Lisa with a charming stranger who introduces himself as Jackson.

The two meet for drinks at the airport lounge, and later discover they have adjacent seats on their very delayed flight. A cautious friendship begins to develop as the disarmingly funny Jackson eases Lisa's nerves throughout the plane's turbulent takeoff with polite inquiries about her family and career.

Lisa's calm quickly turns to horror, though, when Jackson reveals their meeting was no accident.

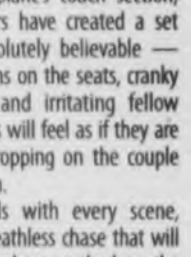
"As fate would have it," he says, "my business is all about you."

Jackson says she must use her position at the hotel to help him arrange a high-profile assassination, or he will have her father killed.

Faced with an impossible dilemma, Lisa begins a desperate race against time to both save her father's life and halt the terrible chain of events she has been forced to set in motion.

Red Eye marks a departure for director Wes Craven from his past body of work. Best known for horror bloodbaths such as Scream and A Nightmare on Elm Street, Craven skips the serial killers this time around and delivers a smart and suspenseful thriller.

Much of the film takes place in the confines of an airplane's coach section, and the filmmakers have created a set that makes it absolutely believable — complete with stains on the seats, cranky flight attendants and irritating fellow passengers. Viewers will feel as if they are passengers eavesdropping on the couple seated behind them.



Tension builds with every scene, leading up to a breathless chase that will keep audience members perched on the edge of their seats.

The film also boasts top performances by two up-and-coming young actors: Canada's Rachel McAdams (Mean Girls, The Notebook) and Ireland's Cillian Murphy (Batman Begins, 28 Days Later). McAdams plays Lisa with just the right mix of girl-next-door innocence and worldly intelligence. Murphy makes Jackson's transformation from a kind stranger to a ruthless killer believable and delightfully chilling.

Strong characters and clever thrills make this flight worth movie-goers' time.

BOOKS

"Shoot the Moon"
Review by Brigette Burandt

Though decent, I have to admit that Billie Letts' third book, "Shoot the Moon," was a bit disappointing.

You might remember the author, Billie Letts, from her first book "Where the Heart Is," which Oprah chose for her book club in 1998. "Where the Heart Is" was a wonderful book. "Shoot the Moon," on the other hand, I found lacking.

The summary on the back of the book sounds intriguing: a woman is murdered and her baby boy disappears, only to suddenly reappear almost thirty years later. But the story left me feeling uninterested and unfulfilled.

The novel begins with a prologue consisting solely of background information. While useful later in the story, it doesn't make for particularly engaging reading.

The pace picks up after the first chapter until it reaches a steady progression maintained through most of the book, but that isn't saying much.

Though I was constantly intrigued by tidbits of the mystery that occasionally appeared in this book, there weren't many exciting events. The book dragged on and on., not really going anywhere.

In addition, the conclusion of the book was a bit puzzling. It just ended, and I was left wondering what had happened at the end.

Though the epilogue did provide some information, I would rather have had a solid, interesting conclusion than a summary of what had occurred.

The novel did have a couple of redeeming qualities. The characters were incredibly lifelike, and I was always kept wondering what clue would turn up next. "Shoot the Moon" was also an easy read.

Overall, this book was not altogether horrible. I did enjoy it somewhat, but mostly just because of the down-home Oklahoma culture accurately portrayed in it.

when I was really young, and it's just another golf tournament," she said. "Every round is different and every round is a challenge."

Coach Kristi Knight said although not reaching postseason play last year was disappointing, the girls are looking up.

"We learned from it, and we're using it to become a better team," Knight said. "I'm not focusing on result-oriented goals. I'm more focused on the girls – their attitude and energy and how they respond to adversity."

Knight, who will start her 11th season as the women's golf coach, said she hopes leaders will step up as the season progresses.

"Leadership is all about personality and the way people go about things," she said.

Most of K-State's tournaments this season take place over three days, with the first two days for qualifying and the third day for final placings.

Each year, the team co-hosts a tournament with the University of Kansas.

Last year, the tournament was in Lawrence, so K-State will host this year at Colbert Hills Golf Course, Oct. 10-11.

Facing the prospect of placing and really competing well is something Knight wants everyone to experience.

"It's nice, waking up on the last day, thinking, 'I have a shot,'" Knight said. "The satisfaction of the sport is in the tournaments and being in contention is something I want all the girls to experience."

Some may say Leinart is stupid for not taking the fame and fortune of the NFL when he had the chance, instead risking injury by playing another year in college.

As for fame, Leinart has about all he can handle as one of the most recognizable people in Los Angeles, a city fairly well-stocked with recognizable people.

As for fortune, like me, he understands the money will still be there when he graduates. I'm a senior, but I'm going to stick around for a fifth year, and no amount of money they throw at me to become a teacher or a journalist is going to convince me to leave early.

Leinart loves college, and I think a lot of us can respect that.

He knows what he's passionate about, and he's sticking around another year to savor it.

I admire that, and, as much as it hurts me, I hope he has a great season.

Until the national championship game, that is. Then I want to see our own defense eat his lunch.

Sure, I know what you're thinking. That means K-State will have to make it to the title game. But hey, dreams do come true – just ask Matt Leinart.

USD 383 enrollment down; schools prepare for military families, student influx

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Fewer kids are in the classroom this year.

But USD 383 is not too concerned.

According to recent school reports, enrollment in the Manhattan-Odgen 383 School District is down by nearly 100 students.

These numbers, however, are expected to change.

Schools around Fort Riley expect enrollment to increase when soldiers and their families return to the fort beginning in October.

Katha Hurt, Woodrow Wilson Elementary School principal, said enrollment at that school is down from a year ago by about eight students.

"We expect to break even," she said.

When soldiers return to Fort Riley, Woodrow Wilson and other schools in the Manhattan-Ogden school district are preparing for an influx of students.

Hurt said they have room for about 60 more students in all grades except kindergarten.

She said they will need to add paraprofessionals if there are any more special needs students, but otherwise they are fully staffed.

Ogden Elementary School Principal Jim Armendariz said enrollment at that school is up a little, by about a dozen students.

"Actually it's fewer than anticipated," he said.

Armendariz said the school has hired teachers to prepare for the expected surge in enrollment.

They did so at this time to compete for the best teachers, instead of waiting for October, when the enrollment is expected to increase.

The state legislature provided for a second head count of students Feb. 20, in addition to the regular count Sept. 20.

This second count will influence schools surrounding Fort Riley, Fort Leavenworth and Wichita, he said.

With the influx of expected students, there will also be an increased need for programs such as special education, English as a Second Language and other special needs programs.

"We will have an increase in special ed and ESL, but also in gifted programs," Armendariz said.

Karen Franz, fourth grade teacher at Woodrow Wilson Elementary School, looks over Zoey Botkin's math assignment Wednesday morning. The average class size was reported at twenty students.

Katie Lester
COLLEGIAN

Enrollment in Manhattan Catholic Schools has decreased this year, but a possible influx in enrollment keeps the school hopeful.

With the return of the soldiers, the school hopes to gain some students, said Tom Schmitz, principal.

"We sure hope that some of these students would select this school," he said.

TUBA PLAYER | Walters fits in where he is needed

the Color Guard to play tuba for the band once again.

"We're down about 20 kids," Tracz said. "We were probably at an all-time high last year, so this is probably about normal for us."

Because Walters' wanted what was best for the band as a whole, he had no problem with the change in plans.

"Either way is good," Walters said. "Whatever benefited the band the most. I would have made a good contribution on the flag line or tubas."

Several sections of the band are low in number this year, Walters said, including the Color Guard. This year's Color Guard has 16 members, down from last year's 26.

"I think that in some ways we're closer together this year than we were last year with so many people," Color Guard coordinator Jeanne Copeland said. "We know we have to be extra good with less girls performing and so many people out there."

Because male Color Guard members are few and far between, the season could have had a different vibe with a male on the team, she said.

"I think that we would have noticed a difference during the season in the way people reacted to us – more comments from the crowd, positive or negative, about that," Copeland said. "Kyle was doing really well. We're going to miss his talents on the guard."

"I just want to do whatever's best for the band. The sound is the most important thing. We're auxiliary. We just support whatever they put on the field musically."

Walters also said he began having second thoughts about his brave ambition.

"I kind of chickened out too," he said, "because it was getting close to the season and I was getting freaked out about what people would think."

Walters began playing the tuba as a freshman at Atchison High School. As a high school senior, he auditioned for and made the band's color guard, where he learned the skills necessary for his April 22 K-State Color Guard audition.

He has played the tuba in the K-State Marching Band since he was a college freshman in 2002.

Walters is the Web master for the Asian American Student Union, of which he was formerly president (2004-2005) and vice president (2003-2004), and a member of Students for Environmental Action.

Walters has not yet made post-graduation plans. Teaching music, joining the Peace Corps or attending seminary are some of his options, he said.

"I just have to play things by ear, so to speak," he said.

BOWLER | Game still important to hall of famer

"The choice was to walk or to bowl," she said. "So I chose to walk."

Although she can no longer play, Eddy still participates in the sport by cheering for her team every Tuesday night.

Eddy said it is exciting to see the popularity of bowling on the rise.

"It is the top participation sport in America," Eddy said. "The game has evolved so much since I first began playing."

Perhaps most important to Eddy is the time she spends around the game as the recreation manager at the Union.

Her passion for the game is evident to all who work with her.

"I know she enjoys the fact that she can spend time around bowling while she works," said John Garetson, assistant recreation manager at the Union.

Now, in her free time, Eddy has begun to golf and read, as well as watching her favorite sports on television.

Nothing, however, will take the place of her first love – bowling.

"What I liked most about bowling was the camaraderie," she said.

"I made some lifelong friends through the sport. It is such a fun sport. It is easy to learn, but very hard to master."

campus.

Bernard Pitts, assistant vice president for institutional advancement, is working on a business plan that will show how the university will operate with the center in the future and what role the university would play.

Pitts said he is considering five basic options.

The center could remain as it is, a non-profit center, or it could become a funded division of the university, become a local agency, be outsourced to a private agency or a combination of the above.

Ring said child care in Manhattan will be desperately needed with the influx of more than 3,000 Fort Riley soldiers scheduled to arrive this fall.

According to a study by the governor's Strategic Military Planning Commission, those soldiers will bring with them an estimated 2,500 children below the age of five. With child care centers already full, Ring said there is a big problem.

"You can't have new businesses and growth in the community without adequate child care," Ring said.

Pitts said the next step is to present the plan to the center's board of directors for review.

mosquitoes – Bush cautioned that the effects of the storm will be felt far beyond Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and Florida.

He said he had ordered steps to cushion the impact of the storm on the nation's oil industry at a time when consumers are paying $3 a gallon for gasoline in some regions.

Flanked by senior members of his administration, Bush recited some of the actions already taken to help victims of the storm – more than 50 disaster medical assistance teams and more than 25 urban search and rescue teams, both from the Federal Emergency Management Administration.

He said the Transportation Department has provided trucks to convey 5.4 million ready-to-eat meals, 13.4 million liters of water, 10,400 tarps, 3.4 million pounds of ice, 144 generators, 20 containers of prepositioned disaster supplies, 135,000 blankets and 11,000 cots.

While Bush offered no immediate estimate for the cost of the federal effort, administration spokesman Dana Perino said a funding request would be prepared quickly.

Congressional leaders in both parties said they were eager to respond to a disaster.

K-STATE | Review ranks university among the best

"We shine in the area of students and faculty," he said. "K-State is an outcome school, and we should be proud of that."

During the 2004-2005 academic year, K-State placed in the Best Colleges list, and was also ranked in the category for best value college.

This category was based on the price of tuition and overall value, and was not replicated in this year's review, though it may be coming in the future, Bosco said.

"I think in terms of the type of education we're offering to students at the price is really, really competitive," student body president Michael Burns said. "Other than that, we have a welcoming campus, there are just a lot of exciting things going on in our university."

Wildcat fans come together to kick off season at Purple Power Play on Poyntz

Purple shirts, smiling fans and business vendors lined Poyntz Avenue Thursday evening at the 21st annual Purple Power Play on Poyntz.

The hot, sunny evening drew a large crowd of K-State students and community members who went to support the football team. The event is staged prior to the first home football game.

Megan Bergkamp, sophomore in English and theater, attended the event with her sorority sisters. She said Purple Power Play brings K-State to the community.

"I came tonight to support the team and be immersed in K-State atmosphere," she said.

Tyler Hands, a senior in milling science and member of the Big Cats, said Power Play helps drum up support for the football team, a more difficult task than usual after its 4-7 season in 2004.

"I'm excited about getting out and interacting with the fans and watching good football," Hands said.

Manhattan residents and K-State alumni Dan and Deanna Hall have attended Purple Power Play since its first year. Deanna said the two enjoy running into people they know every year.

Football wasn't the only varsity sport represented at Purple Power Play. Members of K-State Women's Equestrian team handed out their media guides and signed autographs as an effort to get the word out about the team.

But even they had the upcoming football season on their minds.

"I'm looking forward to screaming loud and tailgating at the games," Gentry Horigan, a junior in animal science and Equestrian team member, said.

K-State cheerleaders and Willie the Wildcat danced with young Wildcat fans during performances by 1950s and 1960s cover band The Benders, setting the stage for the K-State Marching Band and Classy Cats to add even more school spirit.

SGA to vote on garage

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate will vote next Thursday on an $18.8 million campus parking garage.

Senators viewed a presentation by the Council on Parking Operations at their first meeting of the semester Thursday that outlined plans for a parking garage south of the K-State Student Union.

If approved, the construction of the garage would begin in May 2007 and would take about 18 months. The garage will provide 1,406 parking stalls for a net gain of 966 stalls.

Student Body President Michael Burns said he strongly favors the parking garage and hopes it will be approved.

"The bottom line is, without a parking garage we will not be able to fix the parking problem at K-State," he said.

During Burns' campaign for Student Body President, he supported the plans for four parking garages as outlined in the University Master Plans, which guide the long-term development of campus for the next 50 years.

The plans propose four parking garages located around campus. One would be north of Rathbone Hall, another north of Justin Hall, the third would be west of Memorial Stadium and the garage south of the Union.

During construction, a bus system would be in place to shuttle people in from the KSU Stadium parking lot.

The parking garage plans include 134 reserved stalls, 300 student stalls, 300 faculty stalls and 672 unaffiliated stalls. However those numbers may change.

The unaffiliated stalls include visitor and by-the-hour stalls, which would be similar to meter parking in place now.

Many of the student senators addressed concerns with the number of spots allocated for student parking, but Burns said they are worrying about logistics too soon.

"The timeline here will give us two years before the parking garage is utilized," Burns said. "We don't know after we get the parking garage built what utilization will look like. These are logistics we can work out after we pass the

Alternative routes

Road construction may make football fans late for kickoff on Saturday.

The city is working on several projects that could impede traffic to and from Wagner Field.

Officials expect a new turn lane on Kimball Avenue and Tuttle Creek Boulevard to be finished Friday afternoon.

"If it's not done, Tuttle Creek will suffer substantial delays," Riley County Police Captain Brad Schoen said.

Other projects will continue through the football season.

The construction of a new bridge has reduced traffic to one lane at K-18 and Seth Child Road.

Schoen recommends fans coming from the west consider taking the scenic drive instead.

Construction at the intersection of Claflin Road and Beechwood Terrace may slow post-game traffic, Shoen said.

One other area of concern is along 12th Street as K-18 enters Fort Riley. Shoen said a new stoplight on the 60 mile-per-hour road may cause problems.

"Keep an eye out and know cars may be stopping," he said.

Jim Muller, manager of operations for K-State athletics, said he doesn't anticipate traffic problems.

"Just avoid those areas, if possible," Muller said.

He said parking shouldn't be an issue, but fans should arrive 2-3 hours before game time if they want a spot.

Schoen said fans may want to allow 30 to 45 extra minutes to get to the game.

"It's better to leave early than miss kickoff," he said.

Hurricane Katrina refugees take shelter in Junction City

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With conditions in Louisiana unlivable, people are taking refuge across the nation.

About 31 people from New Orleans arrived in Junction City's Days Inn after Hurricane Katrina destroyed their homes, said Paul Stagner, Program Manager of Geary County Red Cross.

"A group of 20 is extended family of a soldier in Iraq, based out of Fort Riley," he said.

Stagner said he doesn't know yet whether other families are coming to Junction City.

Jason Lantz, Flint Hills Red Cross worker, said the Red Cross has the capability of serving 500,000 meals a day for people who are taking refuge in Junction City.

The rescue workers are staying in the northern parts of the damaged states, because the southern parts aren't safe enough for rescue workers to travel to.

Herman Clark and his wife Natricia arrived with their extended family and will be staying at the inn for an unknown period of time.

"The city will rebuild," Clark said.

Arriving with Clark and his wife, were his brother, Kentriel, his mother, Gilda, his father in law, Curtis Turner, a 7-month-old niece and 4-year-old nephew.

Gilda Clark, who works for Harrah's Casino on Canal Street in New Orleans, said she remembers hurricanes from the late 1960s. People were advised to fill their bathtubs with water so when the faucets stopped working, they would have water to drink.

She said her place of employment is in a poor district and she often goes out the door, leaving work and gives money to the homeless.

"I don't know how they got there. Now here I am, homeless," she said.

Watermelon Bust raises money for Flint Hills Bread Basket

By Megan Green
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In between the water balloon toss and the jumping castle at Fifth Street and Poyntz Avenue, K-State students launched chunks of watermelon at each other.

Thursday night's Watermelon Bust, Lambda Chi Alpha's 50th annual, benefited the Flint Hills Bread Basket.

"Last year we made over $1,000 for the Flint Hills (Bread Basket)," said Will Janousek, junior in wildlife fishery and biology and coordinator of the event. "This year we made way over that."

Eleven sororities contributed to the philanthropy and competed in watermelon bowling, watermelon-eating contests, chariot races, watermelon twister and a watermelon toss.

Events earned each sorority points. Gamma Phi Beta captured this year's title, followed by Alpha Xi Delta in second and Kappa Alpha Theta placed third.

"The watermelon-eating contest was messy, sweet and sticky," Ashley Weixelman, freshman in occupational therapy, said. "I am going to have to take a shower after this."

Leading each sorority in the events were Lambda Chi's new members, serving as coaches.

"We have to lead our teams to victory," Eric Heany, freshman in architecture, said. "We're having fun while doing it for a good cause."

Football parking stressful, expensive

By Chris Carpenter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Parking during a normal week at K-State can be stressful enough to make even the most patient student frustrated. However, the problem is compounded even more when throngs of rabid Wildcat fans swarm Manhattan for Saturday football games.

"Parking is a real problem at the games," Daniel Spachek, freshman in open option, said. "I've come here with my parents, and I can tell you it's a real mess, especially during the bigger games."

Most of the lots west and east of the stadium are used by alumni and supporters from outside the immediate area. These spaces can cost between $30 and $40 and are reserved for donors to the Mike Ahearn Scholarship Fund.

An additional 250 spaces are available in front of the Peters Recreation Complex.

"We have about 5,000 spaces reserved already," Jim Muller, manager of facility operations for K-State intercollegiate athletics, said. "That means we have about 11,000 different cars on an average gameday that are fighting for unreserved parking."

Several lots around the area also offer discount parking. While these are a little further from the stadium, they are often cheaper.

The Grain Sciences building along with the Agriculture Farm and Sheep Farm offer parking on their lawns north of the stadium, and other inexpensive parking is often advertised by organizations willing to open their yards and parking lots to football enthusiasts – for a fee

For those on a tight budget, $5 parking can be found the College of Veterinary Medicine.

"The further away that a person parks, the cheaper it is," Ron Fehr, Manhattan city manager, said.

Whichever option is chosen, students should be aware that parking on unauthorized lawns is illegal and punishable by impounding the vehicle. Also, there are several streets where parking is illegal, at least on one side of the street.

Clinic offers students free non-emergency services

By Humberto Gonzalez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan residents with low income or those who are without health insurance can now receive non-emergency medical services free of charge.

The Flint Hills Community Clinic officially opened its doors for operation July 12, 2005.

The VIM is based on the use of retired health care professionals and lay volunteers to care for the working uninsured.

The program has been two years in the making with financial funding from sponsors that include Mercy Regional Health Center and Agency on Aging in cooperation with Manhattan Ministerial Association along with other donations from residents.

These sponsors saw this program as necessary due to the growing number of uninsured people in Riley County.

Currently, one of every 10 Riley County residents 18 years or older is without health insurance.

Former Lafene Health Center health educator of, Reita Currie, has accepted the position of Clinic Coordinator.

"This is a very needed service that research has only reinforced with the growing number of patients and the ongoing changes in our economy," she said.

An appointment must be made to receive a consultation by Medical Director Joseph Schlageck.

Availability for patients are every Tuesday, where five patients will be seen at 5:30 p.m. and another five at 6:30 p.m.

Currently there are three examination rooms available for patients.

Although, Tuesday evenings are patient nights, these clinic hours are expected to expand.

"All patients will be seen and are asked to fill a registration form on their first visit," Currie said.

Disclosure of all patient information will be held confidential as with any medical clinic.

TO THE POINT

Students should join Gulf Coast relief effort

On Sept. 11, 2001, people across the United States rallied in the wake of crippling attacks on New York City, the Pentagon and in Pennsylvania.

Now we must do so again.

On Thursday, Congress allocated $10.5 billion in relief aid for Gulf Coast victims of Hurricane Katrina, while Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff pledged thousands of National Guard personnel to the devastated region.

But it's not enough. Preliminary damage estimates are soaring above $25 billion, and no price can be put on the loss of life.

While Kansas may appear far removed from the catastrophe, one needs to look no further than Junction City – where refugees are taking shelter in hotels – to see how much people here can make a difference.

On Saturday, student-athletes will accept monetary donations marked for the Red Cross prior to the Wildcat's season-opening football game against Florida International.

In the K-State Student Union, sororities and fraternities are planning booths to accept donations, and churches across Manhattan have implored their congregations to join the relief effort.

Some community members have even left for the region, donating time and energy in lieu of monetary support.

Every person can make a difference.

Sept. 11 was proof of that.

Nice guys finish later

Confidence, consideration outweigh youthful attraction to 'bad boys'

ADDIE LAUE

Over the weekend, I realized how old I was getting.

No, obviously I'm not talking Steven Tyler or Ozzy Osbourne old, I'm just creeping up on 22. But what I discovered this weekend was I am becoming less and less a part of the adolescent world and I am beginning to see things from a new perspective – an adult perspective.

So what was my revelation? I realized I am officially over bad-boys.

Furthermore, I think more and more women my age are stepping out of the muscle car and into the real world.

My epiphany came last weekend as I watched a friend's high school-aged cousin flirt shamelessly with a skinny 16-year-old as he leaned on his new car and blew cigarette smoke slowly out the corner of his mouth.

It got worse when I witnessed a phone conversation she had with her friend. She said she just hated that she had such a "huge" crush on him because he had already slept with two of her friends. Gag.

At this point, I nearly lost it. Only my personal shock at sounding like someone's mother stopped me from demanding she get away from this kid immediately and giving her a speech on safe sex.

As the weekend passed and I came to grips with my new attitude, I hit on something even bigger. After a night out at the bars, a discouraged guy friend bitterly muttered that nice guys finish last, and it all came together for me.

Nice guys don't finish last, just a little slower.

Let me explain.

In junior high, insecurity and our desperate desire to find a place in the social hierarchy lead us to sneer at the kid who brought a rose to our dance recital. Ok, maybe that was just me, but I know plenty of other stories like it. Instead, I wanted the kid who called himself "Superman" (I kid you not) and bragged about his band.

In high school it only got worse – especially when hormones and cars got involved. Then it was going out with the guy who didn't wear the right clothes or play varsity sports and in with the puffed-up jock who bonged the most beers at the field party.

If this sounds like you, guys, don't worry. There will always be the women who haven't had enough. And it's true, the bad boys are fun for awhile, but inevitably they end up disappointing us and breaking our hearts. Let's face it, a man whose biggest concern is how his biceps look in his favorite shirt just doesn't have time to remember your dance recital.

With the transition from school to career and all the other responsibilities women my age are facing, we don't have time for the drama of our earlier years. I am staring my future in the face, and it's time for a nice guy.

A nice guy means a man who is confident and thoughtful. It doesn't mean fast cars and maybe even a few tattoos are out of the question, I just mean someone that I can count on.

And I wouldn't mind a rose on graduation day.

Women should embrace natural beauty

RACHEL THOMPSON

A fashion model is often thought of as a thin, tall, tan and toned girl who looks perfect in every outfit without a flaw in sight.

Well, about 2 percent of the women in the world fit that category, while the rest of us try to see where we fit into the definition of beauty. Women have a much wider array of beauty than the typical airbrushed and digitally mastered, 5'8", 110 pound, size two model.

The unrealistic and unhealthy models, who have been presented as beautiful, drastically limit the boundaries of aesthetically pleasing and diverse ways a woman can be beautiful. The range of beauty is so massive and varied that the stifling presentation of a "beautiful" model does not allow for the real world.

But still women are trying to fit into an impossible expectation, as shown by widespread plastic surgery and weird, restrictive fad diets.

As the accepted standards of beauty in American society widen, more women may be able to see themselves as the lovely, unique, curvy women that we always have been. With a wider definition, a woman won't have to feel like she is fighting to be herself, and she could express herself with more ease.

Media is often credited as having a large impact on how women and girls view themselves and how much self-esteem and acceptance they experience, not to mention the current "ideal" body, which is usually physically impossible for most women to meet. The role models women and girls see and often try to emulate need to be healthy, diverse and realistic women.

Recently there has been a change in advertising that has attracted attention. Dove has launched a Campaign for Real Beauty, which portrays women of more realistic shapes, sizes and ages, while questioning whether they can be considered beautiful women or if the distinctions that make them unique are negative. In doing so, Dove makes a loud, visible statement that real beauty has a much wider application than skinny models.

The change of direction this advertising has taken and the responses it has gotten is a signal that the portrayal of women may be changing to a more positive, varied and diverse attitude. The Dove Web site at www.campaignforrealbeauty.com has opened a dialogue that allows women to talk about aging, body image and the standards of beauty in society. Dove sponsored programs to help girls with self-esteem and provided a grant through Harvard University to study the way people talk and think about women's beauty and created a touring photography exhibit that captures women in unique images. These actions are a start to change, but it needs to be taken further; it needs to be taken personally.

One amazingly common idea I have seen and heard is that women are trying to fit into the stereotype of beauty and in the process are losing who they are as a person. This is one of the greatest losses of power and confidence a woman can experience. Thinking you have to become someone you are not in order to be seen as a lovely, gorgeous woman is heartbreaking. Accepting and embracing the little differences and uniqueness of your body and celebrating the contradictions of your personality create an aura of confidence that is the greatest beauty possible.

So instead of wanting and trying to be someone that has been digitally altered, try embracing who you are and what you look like.

The changes in the media, like Dove's campaign and the dialogue it has created, needs to be continued and broadened, but the real power is within women to see themselves as beautiful.

My friend wrote this the other day:

"I shouldn't complain about gas. People have lost homes, lost lives, lost a lot more than I have. But paying $36 for a tank of gas today still made my soul throw up a little bit in my mouth."

It sums up what everyone was trying to say about gas prices and puts the whole issue in perspective. Next time, let's be nicer when criticizing someone's article.

Local man goes to Louisiana, works with hurricane victims

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Normally, Bob Stamey would be running his Manhattan business, Konza Capital Advisers. But now he is working with the American Red Cross to help save lives.

Stamey is working out of Baton Rouge, La., as a volunteer to help organize efforts to feed and shelter victims of Hurricane Katrina. Stamey is working as a liaison for the Red Cross to help coordinate efforts with government officials.

Thursday morning, he said he was heading to Houma, La., about 60 miles west of New Orleans, where the damage is considerably worse.

Stamey said the damage he has seen so far is "not very spectacular," and the places he's been so far have power back on in most homes. Some of the refugees he has met, however, have seen much worse.

"I'll stop at a McDonald's, (and) every time I stop, somebody comes up and has a gut-wrenching question to ask," he said.

"I haven't seen my husband for three days. Can you help me? That sort of thing."

Stamey said that the Red Cross is working out of Baton Rouge, Louisiana's state capital, to bring help to the rest of the state.

He said the organization was working in New Orleans before the storm, but Katrina had something to say about that.

"We do know that the New Orleans chapter of the Red Cross was completely destroyed, as well as their backup chapter," he said.

The chapter was now working from a third location about 50 miles away, he said.

While wire reports told of looting and violence in the city on Thursday, Stamey had heard about this from local law enforcement.

"I just talked to a sheriff's officer who was near New Orleans [Wednesday] and said his crew is not going back there because they were getting shot at," he said.

Stamey asked for Manhattan residents to contribute what they could to the effort to help those affected by the hurricane. He said the Red Cross will not leave until the job is finished, and the organization already plans to be in the area for at least the next 18 months.

"Not down playing 9/11 at all, but this is much bigger... and far bigger than the total of four hurricanes in Florida last year," he said.

Sophomore recalls memories of his grandparents, their Louisiana home

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Paul Ragusa was younger, he used to pick oranges off trees at his grandparent's house around New Orleans.

Now those trees are under water – along with the remains of his grandparent's two-story home.

"The picture my aunt gave me to think of was someone taking a giant lawn mower to my grandparent's house and then dumping tons and tons of water on it," he said. "She said it was like nothing was ever there."

He said he couldn't believe it happened.

"Just knowing that I won't be able to see that anymore sucks," the sophomore in microbiology said.

Ragusa has family in Baton Rouge, New Orleans and Pointe La Hache, La., where the Associated Press said about 80 percent of the state is under water.

His uncle and aunt's house was filled with water, which rose five feet above the second floor.

"When I heard about the devastation, I felt like someone had punched me square in the chest and knocked the wind out of me."

Paul Ragusa
SOPHOMORE IN MICROBIOLOGY

"When I heard about the devastation, I felt like someone had punched me square in the chest and knocked the wind out of me," Ragusa said.

He was in the middle of chemistry class when he got the call about what happened.

"I bet my face went white because I thought something bad happened," he said. "I was definitely relieved nobody was hurt."

Hearing of the destruction made Ragusa think of going to his grandparent's house when he was younger.

"I used to go down there all the time to be with my family, and I have a lot of memories there," he said. "Now it's all destroyed. It hurts."

All of the banks are frozen, so his grandparents and uncle and aunt can't get money.

But, they are getting help from Ragusa's parents and his brother's fiance's family.

"They're a wonderful family," he said. "They went to Sam's Club and got them tons of food."

Although they knew the hurricane was coming, the family didn't think destruction of this magnitude would happen to them.

"We didn't think anything this tragic would happen," Ragusa said. "They've been through some pretty crazy stuff, but nothing like this."

While his extended family can not go home, they are staying at Ragusa's parents house in Hurst, Texas.

Ragusa said because his family's home is gone, they are forced to rebuild or move.

"They don't know how long it's going to take to get the water out and rebuild, so they might as well move," he said.

While the hurricane may have been hard for his family, Ragusa said it made him realize how valuable his life is.

"I will always appreciate what I have now," he said. "Life's too precious not to."

Freshmen dominate line up

By Chris Patch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's youth-laden men's and women's cross country teams head to Wichita Saturday to open the season at the Wichita State Gold Classic.

Both squads enter the season with a plethora of freshmen – seven on the men's side and five on the women's.

Competing will be K-State, Wichita State and a handful of junior college teams. The Wildcats do not even plan on running all of their athletes and are approaching the meet as a chance for the younger runners to get a taste of Division I-A athletics.

This first meet could provide an opportunity for the newcomers to get their feet wet, coach Michael Smith said, as the field should not be particularly challenging.

"It is really a preseason meet, so we'll run a split squad," Smith said. "Particularly in the men, we'll run half the group. We're just trying to get some of them started, and then some of the ones with more experience, we'll let them race in the more competitive meets.

"It's like early non-conference for football. We don't get to scrimmage, so this is kind of like a scrimmage in many ways."

Senior Joe Moore, who will likely be the No. 1 runner for the Wildcats this season, said he doesn't plan on competing in the meet, but said it should be a comfortable way for the freshmen to start their season.

If you go
What: Wichita State Gold Classic
Where: RAFT Golf Course, Augusta, Kan.
When: 10 a.m.

"A lot of people will be running their first cross country race, pretty much all of them," he said. "It will be a good race for them to have as their first race, because it's not real big."

The primary source of competition for K-State will be Wichita State's women's team that placed in the top 10 in the NCAA regionals last year.

While the course and the rest of the field may not challenge the Wildcats, the Shockers could provide a nice gauge for where the young K-State women are beginning the year, sophomore Morgan Bonds said.

"I know the course, it's pretty flat, there is one little hill," Bonds said. "It's also going to be late in the day, so it might be hot. We just look to compete with Wichita State, because they are pretty good. So if we can hang in there, especially our new girls, we'll be okay."

Smith echoed the same sentiment, adding that for a lot of the younger women, the change from high school to college will feel drastic.

"I think Wichita State's women are very good, so it will be difficult for us to compete with them right now," he said. "I think with the young people we have, down the road we can be very competitive. Right now, I think they're in for a little shock, as far as collegiate racing goes."

"Some of these younger women are used to winning, and that changes when you get to this level," Smith said. "Not for everyone, but in many ways you're running with a lot more people, so things are more competitive."

The Gold Classic begins a schedule that will become tougher for K-State.

It is followed by the KSU/KU dual in Manhattan, which is the only home meet for K-State before it hits the road for the rest of the season at progressively tougher meets, Smith said.

Building momentum

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Wildcats hope to build on their perfect record this weekend as they travel to the C & C Services Arkansas In-vitational today in Fayetteville, Ark.

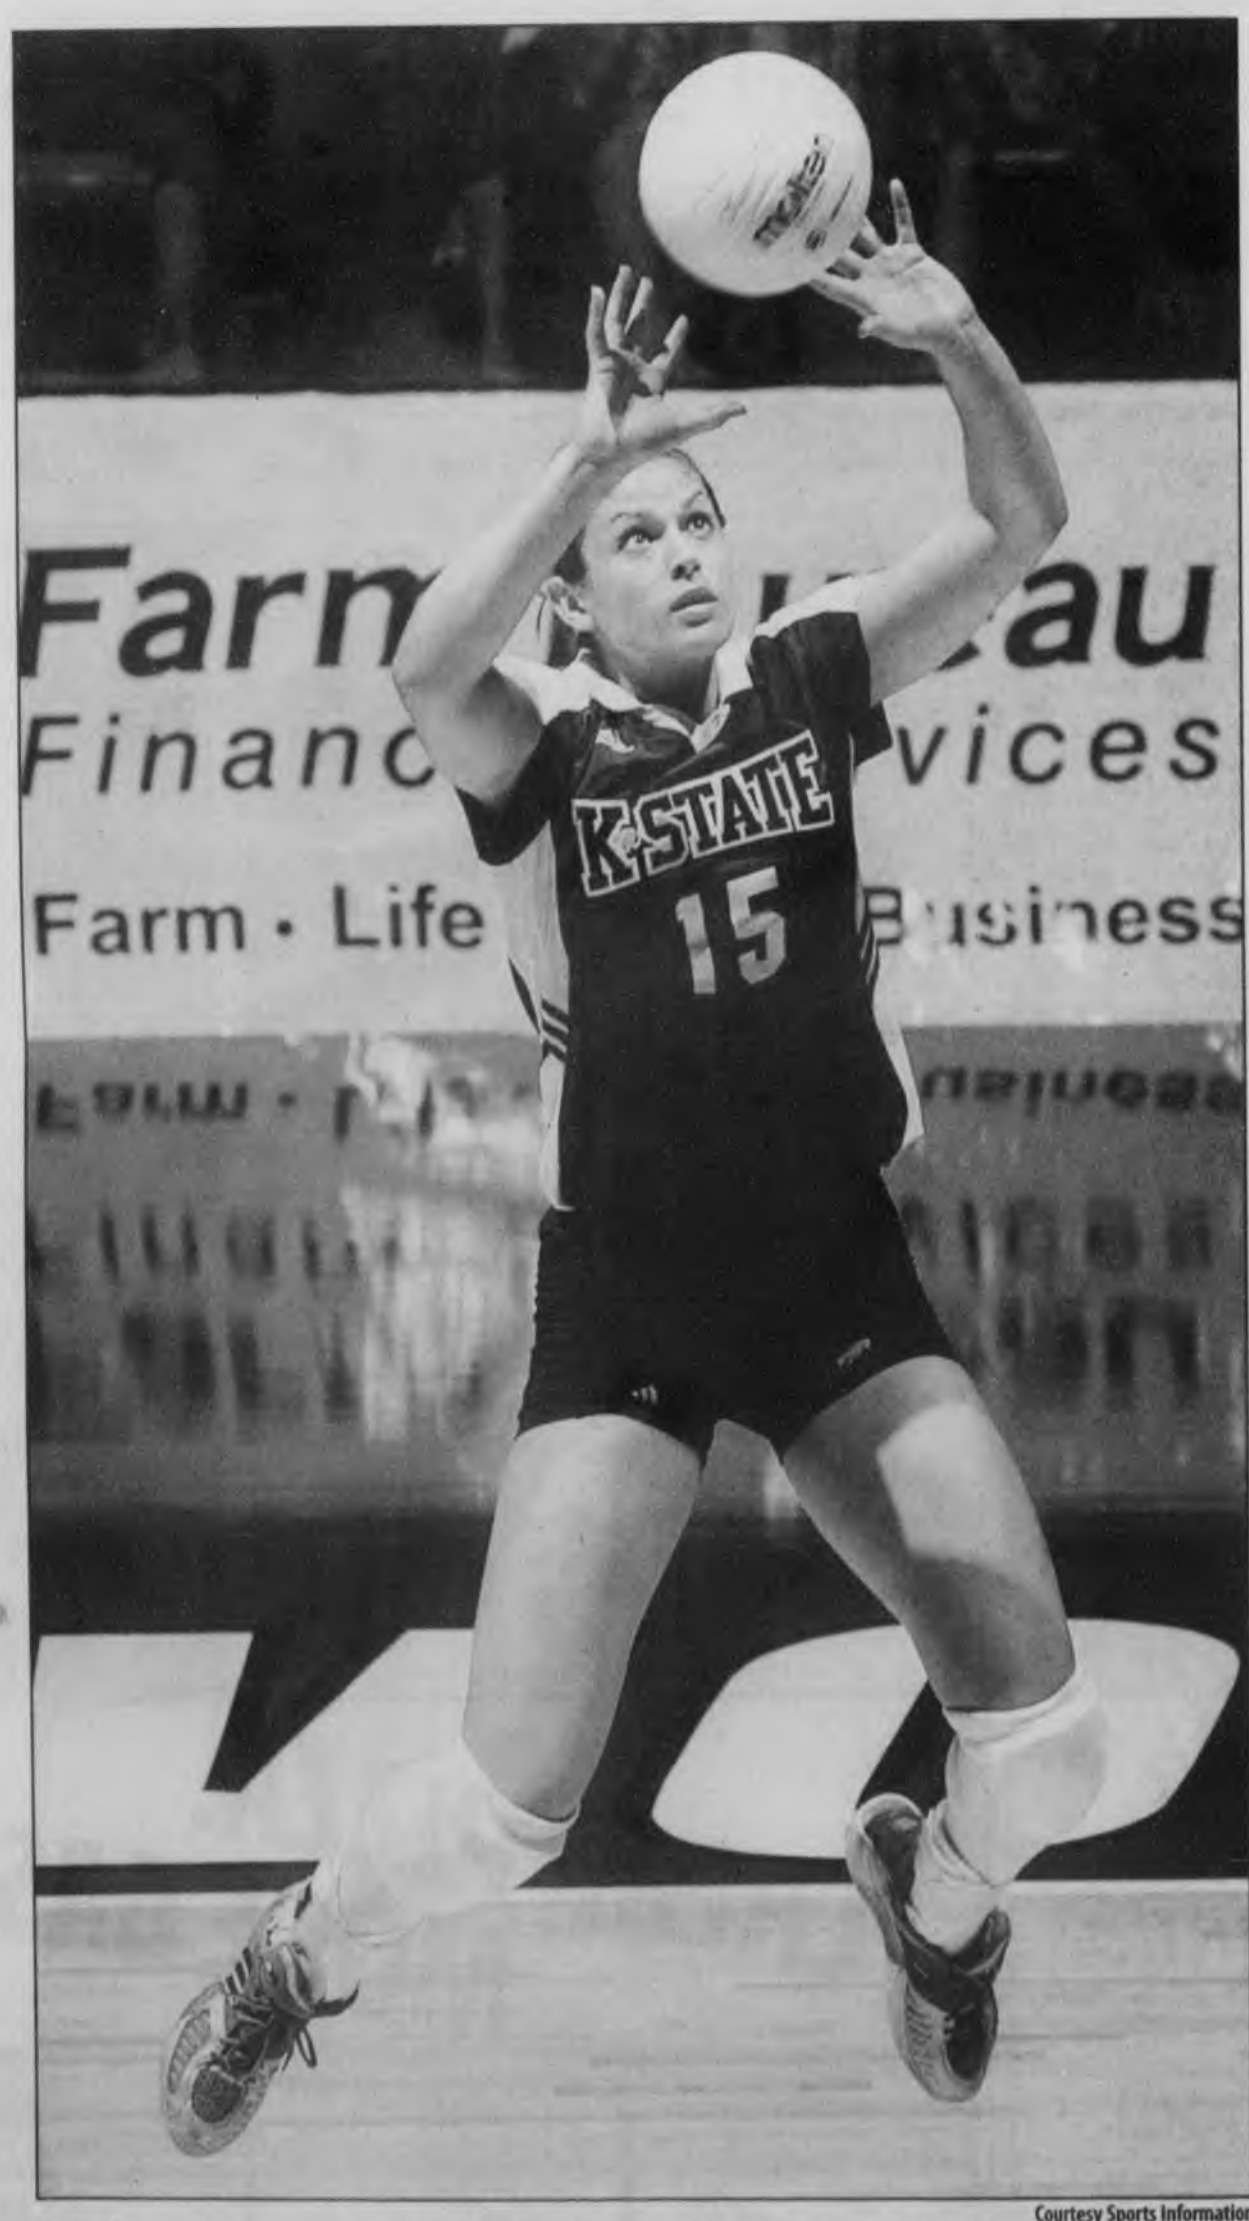
The K-State volleyball team (3-0) began last weekend, sweeping Arkansas-Little Rock, St. Louis and Missouri State in its first three matches of the season.

The Cats will try and keep their momentum rolling today against two other undefeated teams when they face Arkansas (3-0) at 11 a.m. and Utah State (4-0) at 6 p.m.

The aftermath from Hurricane Katrina forced K-State's other scheduled opponent, Nicholls State – located in Thibodaux, La. – to withdraw from participating in the tournament.

Coach Suzie Fritz said she does not know much about Arkansas or Utah State, but she likes her team's chances of winning.

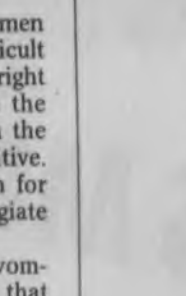
"I think our team stacks up well," Fritz said. "If we play well, I think we will have an opportunity to be in each one of those matches."



Fritz said she was pleased by her team's performance at the Clarion Hotel Missouri State Invitational last weekend, but her squad must work to cut down on its mistakes.

"At times, I think they exceeded our expectations, but we are still enduring the ebbs and flows," she said. "Volleyball is a game of momentum, and we are still playing like a young team. A young team plays with some highs and some lows, and we are trying to minimize them (the lows) as much as possible.

"We are still making too many service errors at this point, but we have been pleasantly surprised that we are becoming a very good blocking team."



Sophomore libero Angie Lastra said the Wildcats have started to

K-State should use local band's music to take the field on Saturday

MATTHEW GIRARD

The countdown is finally over.

Saturday, the K-State Wildcats open their 2005 football season against Florida International at 1:10 p.m. at KSU Stadium and fans will finally get the chance to see this "new and improved" team up close and personal.

Like so many of you, I'll be watching the offense and defense closely, but the unfolding of one particular story line is what I'm waiting for: What introduction music will play before the Wildcats rush the field to take on the Panthers?

Since coming to K-State in 2003, I have been to almost every home game as either a fan or as a reporter, and in that time, the Wildcats have had Ozzy Osbourne's "Crazy Train" as their entrance music.

As far as I'm concerned, the "Crazy Train" was derailed last season, and it is time to move on.

Some might think the choice of entrance music at a football game is trivial.

In reality, it sets the tone for not only that particular game, but the entire season – especially this season.

So what would be the perfect song for the Wildcats to make their entrance?

I'm glad you asked.

If you were paying attention at this spring's annual Purple-White game (which I know was difficult to watch after the first five minutes), the song I am speaking of made a short appearance at some time in the first half.

It's a song that's a little bit older, but fits perfectly with K-State's new slogan, "Be Proud, Be Purple, Go State."

The song is "Roboflow" by Manhattan's own Pomeroy.

If you've heard it, you know what I'm talking about.

There is no better song to get 9,000 students jumping up and down and ready for a football game.

The song starts with an infectious beat and the words, "Come on, get up," and even a "Boom" later on that could be timed with one of junior linebacker Brandon Archer's hits from last season.

If you haven't heard it, you need to check it out. I guarantee if you close your eyes while listening to the song, you will see K-State football.

If it's too late to change, I understand.

Hell, I would even take the football team coming out to that damn Crazy Frog ringtone song if it meant we didn't have to hear "Crazy Train" ever again.

HOUSTON — Yao Ming signed a five-year contract worth more than $75 million Thursday, keeping the 7-foot-6 center with the Houston Rockets through the 2010-11 season.

Yao

The extension, the maximum allowed under the NBA's new labor deal, ended days of speculation about Yao's future. Owner Leslie Alexander called the agreement "as important as anything I've done as an owner."

The contract will be 25 percent of the salary cap, meaning the first year will be worth an estimated $12.5 million. The three-time NBA All-Star has one year remaining on his rookie contract, which will pay him more than $5.5 million next season.

San Francisco Giants slugger Barry Bonds says he might work out with the team next week when the Giants play in Los Angeles.

Bonds

The 41-year-old has not played this season. He underwent three surgeries on his right knee and has been rehabilitating the knee in the Los Angeles area since June.

He recently took batting practice at UCLA and has held out the possibility of playing for the Giants before the season ends.

Bars, coffee shops maintain local music scene with live acts, open-mic nights

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan music scene gets a bad rap.

Students inevitably compare the Little Apple with other markets, such as Lawrence. They complain about the lack of local venues and musical offerings available.

Local bars and coffee shops, however, create a very different picture of the city's musical climate.

Instead of a bleak and barren wasteland, owners and employees describe the city as a thriving arena for local and national bands.

"We really try to support live music here to keep the scene going in Manhattan," said Mollie Hull, senior in fine arts and a bartender at PJ's Bar.

PJ's schedules live acts every Monday, Wednesday and Friday night, and has an open-microphone night every Sunday. Rock music is common, but Hull said the bar also offers a wide variety of artists and styles.

O'Malley's Alley also has an open-mic night every Wednesday.

"That's really how our live music got started," booking manager Clint Hutchens said.

Hutchens said O'Malley's supports Kansas musicians, and usually has live shows Tuesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings. The music is usually basic or acoustic rock 'n' roll.

Auntie Mae's Parlor usually offers a weekly live show on Thursdays or Fridays.

"We do a wide variety of local and traveling bands – mostly underground, indie rock and country," George Pemberton, assistant manager, said.

Jace Johnson, owner of Longhorns Saloon, has booked enough live acts to cover K-State's entire first semester.

"Most music here would be considered red dirt – mostly bands out of Texas and Oklahoma," Johnson said. "It's country, but not the country you hear on the radio."

Longhorns Saloon's schedule of upcoming shows is posted on their Web site, www.longhornssaloon.com.

Buffalo Wild Wings also schedules a regular live music night. Styles such as rock, folk and new-age jazz can be heard every Thursday from 9 to 11 p.m.

Music lovers who want to avoid the bar scene also have an option. Radina's Coffee House and Bakery features acoustic artists, such as guitarists and cellists, every Wednesday evening.

Singing at an open-mic session at O'Malley's Alley, Stephen Keith, Manhattan resident, plays acoustic guitar on the patio area of the pub. Keith is the host of the open-mic night and plans to start another on Mondays at Joe's Tap Room.

GAS PRICE COMPARISON

Gas Prices vs ?

People have been complaining about the rising price of gasoline recently, but have they thought how gas was a good value (especially if you the $0.30, $0.40 per gallon tax was taken off at the pump)! Obviously others need a little convincing. So the article in this week's "Autoweek" magazine brought it all to light. What if a person were to buy a gallon of . . .

■ Diet Snapple 16 oz for $1.29 = $10.32 per gallon

■ Lipton Ice Tea 16 oz for $1.19 = $9.52 per gallon

■ Gatorade 20 oz for $1.59 = $10.17 per gallon

■ Ocean Spray 16 oz for $1.25 = $10.00 per gallon

■ Quart of Milk 16 oz for $1.59 = $6.32 per gallon

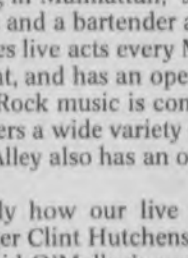
■ Evian (water) 9 oz for $1.49 = $21.19 per gallon

■ STP Brake Fluid 12 oz for $3.15 = $33.60 per gallon

■ Vicks Nyquil 6 oz for $8.35 = $178.13 per gallon

■ Pepto Bismol 4 oz for $3.85 = $123.20 per gallon

■ Whiteout 7 oz for $1.39 = $254.17 per gallon



■ Scope 1.5 oz for $0.99 = $84.84 per gallon

So next time gas prices rise, be glad cars doesn't run on Nyquil or Scope or Whiteout!

Online girl not real student, columnist's search continues

Ask the 5th year

MATT PETERWORTH

You're a senior. You must know a lot of people. Do you know Mika, the girl from the sign-in page to K-State Online?

I do know a lot of people. I can't walk through campus without having to say "hi" or nod to people I recognize.

I also was excited to see a picture of Mika when I logged into K-State Online. Every time I go to the sign in page, I keep hitting refresh until her picture comes up. I even recently started a Facebook group dedicated to her.

But I have some bad news. I work for the Information Technology Assistance Center and I asked the K-State Online people who this was. Apparently they used a stock photo. Mika is not her real name and she does not go to K-State.

I was heartbroken. Even so, that does not take away from the fact that she is hot, and I will continue to hit refresh until I see her beautiful face every time I need to check my grades. I think I'll go take a celebratory nap now.

I'm new to Manhattan. Should I be worried when I go to Aggieville for any reason?

Apart from the general advice of always go with friends and order your own drinks, I do have some rather odd advice. I don't know if you are familiar with "loafing," but I would be worried if I were you.

As far as I can tell, loafing is unique to Manhattan. If you go out to Aggieville and stay until the bars close, you better watch out. After the bars close at 2 a.m., the drunk people are hungry. So they head to any number of fine establishments to satisfy their late night hunger craze.

You want to worry about the people that go to Jimmy John's. As Jimmy John's is about to close at 3 a.m., they have been known to give out free bread that they know they aren't going to use. A loaf of bread in the hands of a drunk can be a dangerous thing.

You may find yourself walking down Moro Street at 2:30 a.m. When you get whacked in the back of the head by a loaf of bread by a drunk guy. You have just experienced loafing.

Watch out K-State students! It could happen to you.

What's with the poking on the Facebook?

Seriously. I want to know what meaning the poke has. Clearly, it has different meanings to each individual who uses it, and may, in addition, have different meanings to any one person who uses it at different times, under different circumstances. Can we establish poke etiquette? SHOULD we establish poke etiquette? Some may say that the ambiguity of the poke is the very thing that makes it such a valuable and useful tool in the Facebook realm of things.

To me, the poke on the Facebook is meant to get someone's attention when you really don't have anything to say to justify sending a message. A poke may be useful for someone you don't know and have never met but whose profile you like.

Poking them is a great way for them to look at your profile and see if they find you as interesting as you find them. Who knows, maybe a Facebook friendship will develop, and maybe you will happen to run into each other at the coffee shop and realize, as you're standing in line, that this complete stranger ordering the triple espresso in front of you is really already your Facebook friend.

And we could all use more friends.

Mutual respect, appreciation key to long marriage

KELLY SCHMITT

My in-laws have been married for 40 years, and they still hold hands and sneak kisses when they think nobody is looking. We all laugh and shake our heads, but the truth is, it's nice to see a married couple with such lasting respect and appreciation for each other.

What's the secret to a happy marriage? Americans like quick-fixes and easy answers, but every person is different, so every relationship is going to be different. What works for my in-laws won't necessarily work for my husband and me.

My husband and I have been married only four years, and we still remember one of the best pieces of advice we were given.

"You don't have to think alike," we were told. "You just have to think together."

That's good, because we sure have different views on a lot of issues, like if it's really necessary to watch every football game on television.

He doesn't understand why any woman needs more than three pairs of shoes. I don't understand why he thinks golf is so fun when the stupid ball never goes where I want it.

The good thing is, we don't get too worked up over little issues. This is where a sense of humor comes in handy. Of course, that's one of the first things that drew us together. I never laughed so much in my life as I did the first night I met my husband.

I have friends who get pretty worked up over the toilet seat issue. She thinks he should put it down when he's done. He thinks she should put it back up for him when she's done. I grew up with three brothers, so I'm just glad my husband remembers to lift the lid before he goes.

When it comes to big issues, like money and children, we make sure we are absolutely on the same page. Obviously, the big issues are the points that are really important to think together on.

Of course we have disagreements at times. We're not, however, a couple that yells at each other. I think that plays into the mutual respect aspect of any relationship.

I do recall a situation just after our first anniversary. An old friend asked my husband the usual "How's married life treating you?" He answered, smiling at me, that we can get frustrated with each other once in a while, but it's all been great.

I was surprised. I remember thinking, "I can be frustrating? What's he talking about? I'm adorable." If anyone could be frustrating, it was my husband when he thought he was right instead of me.

I might be frustrating at times, and he might be frustrating at times, but we don't hold grudges. This has worked out well for our relationship. Life is just too short to stay mad or to keep hashing out old issues.

With any luck, someday we'll have the opportunity to embarrass our kids by being overly affectionate in our old age.

Arranged marriages can be happy, long-lasting

By Tessa French
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Even today, even in the United States, some people don't choose their spouses.

K-State anthropologist Martin Ottenheimer said arranged marriages still exist and succeed in today's society.

Erin Dekat, senior in elementary education, said she thinks arranged marriages are unfortunate.

"I'm getting married in December and I can't imagine not being in love with the person I'm marrying and going to spend the rest of my life with," she said.

Ottenheimer said arranged marriages are still a preferred form of marriage in places around the world. Many people choose to have their marriage arranged. He said places in the United States also practice this. However, his definition of "arranged marriage" might be slightly different.

Ottenheimer sees the reality television show "Married by America" – in which viewers vote to select the couple who will marry – as a spin on the idea of arranged marriages.

"If you think of an 'arranged marriage' as simply the situation in which parents select the marriage partners without giving the children some choice in the selection, then you are narrowing the meaning to something that occurs only in relatively rare cases," he said.

This doesn't convince Dekat.

"It's just a show," she said. "When production is done with then that's it. The couple doesn't have to stay together or even really get married. It's not the same thing at all."

Miwa Yoshinaga, graduate student in education, is accustomed to arranged marriages.

"It's an important thing to notice that in arranged marriages, the entire family is involved."

Martin Ottenheimer
K-STATE ANTHROPOLOGIST

Originally from Japan, Yoshinaga's parents had an arranged marriage.

"It is common there for the older generation, like my parents, to be in these kinds of marriages," she said.

She said while her parents don't always get along with each other, they are still together, which is a success.

Yoshinaga, who is dating someone, sees arranged marriage as a possible option, but said her family does not expect that of her.

"For some people, if they cannot find someone then they always have this option," she said. "For me, it is just like a safe option that I can use if I do not find someone, something possible for later in life."

Ottenheimer said other forms of arranged marriage exist in the United States today as well.

"There are services for single, professional people who are very wealthy," he said. "They hire someone to set them up with a potential mate who is compatible with them."

These marriages are designed for those who don't have time to date or maybe cannot choose someone on their own.

"The service provides, for a rather large fee, a means for selecting partners," Ottenheimer said.

He has performed global research on marriage and has seen many arranged marriage situations.

"I did research in the Indian Oceans, and many couples in arranged marriages will be happy and stay married for several years, while others will get divorced because the situation doesn't work out," he said.

Ottenheimer said there is no significant difference in divorce rates between couples in arranged marriages and couples in the Western tradition that involves choosing a partner.

"Divorce rates are because of several other factors which change from place to place over time," he said.

For some, arranged marriages are not only traditional but also a happy affair.

"The thing with arranged marriages is that people do not marry for love. However, love is something that often develops from the marriages," Ottenheimer said. "It's an important thing to notice that in arranged marriages, the entire family is involved. The marriage is not just about the individuals but involves everyone and that makes it more exciting, something to be celebrated even more."

"I'm planning my wedding right now, and it's hard for me to imagine not really knowing the person that I'm marrying," Dekat said. "I think marriage should be a personal choice for the individual, not arranged by the two families. It's one of our freedoms – to choose who we want to live with and make a life with."

Cake tips and tricks

THEKNOT.COM

Your cake can't just look good – it needs to taste good, too. We've dug up the info on getting a cake that's delicious and gorgeous.

START YOUR TALENT SEARCH
Never feel obligated to let your caterer (or banquet hall) make your cake. You may wish to seek out a pastry chef or cake designer who specializes in wedding cakes – these specialists often offer more creative options. But don't underestimate the talent of your caterer. They may be able to craft the creative confection of your choice. Request to see samples of various bakers' work to find your ideal designer.

CHECK ON REPUTATIONS
If you're getting your cake from an independent designer or bakery, check out the baker's or designer's reputation. If your friends haven't referred you to anyone, ask your caterer or banquet manager for recommendations. The most brilliant pastry chef in the world (or the most affordable one) could be notoriously unreliable. A slight delay or careless transport can potentially ruin one of your wedding's highlights. Before you sign a contract, get that seal of approval.

SELECT A STYLE
Deal with the cake after all decisions about dress style and reception decor have been made. These elements can serve as a blueprint for the design and structure of your wedding cake. Choose a cake that's compatible with the style of the venue, the season, your gown, the flower arrangements or the menu. If you want colorful accents (such as sugar flowers or icing ribbons), give your baker sample fabric swatches. The cake should be part of the wedding, not a glaring sideshow.

CHOOSE YOUR FLAVORS
Definitely sample the cake, complete with fillings and icing, before the wedding – nothing is more disappointing than a breathtaking cake with cloyingly sweet or bland icing. Is the chocolate too intense? Too bitter? Are the subtle hints of almond extract too subtle? Don't be afraid to strive for sublime sweets.

TAME YOUR SWEET TOOTH
Don't order a different flavor and filling for each layer: Variety is expensive. Go all out, but don't go nuts (... and vanilla mousse and mocha cream and pineapple). If you must feature multiple flavors, limit your order to just two types of cake.

BE CAUTIOUS WITH FRESH FLOWERS
If you're using fresh blooms, triple-check with your florist that they have not been sprayed with pesticides. Make sure all inedible decorative elements are removed before the cake is sliced and served.

CHOOSE YOUR CAKE DECORATIONS
Can't decide between fresh or sugar flowers? Have the best of both worlds: Crystallized edible flowers such as violets can have a magical, old-fashioned effect.

BE WARY OF WEATHER
If you're having an outdoor wedding in a hot climate, stay away from whipped cream, meringue, and buttercream: they melt. Ask your baker about summer icing options: Instead of pure butter, vegetable shortening, which melts at a higher temperature, is added to buttercream icing. This increases the cake's ability to withstand the heat.

Traditional to trendy

Color, comfort combine in latest wedding dress fashion

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While many couples choose a traditional wedding ceremony with a white dress, three-tiered cake and a bouquet toss, new trends are mixing with yesterday's traditions.

Jenne Andrews, owner of Premiere Events, said couples are trying to take a breath from the chaos and enjoy their day.

"Everyone's into comfort," Andrews said. "In the past, the brides would try to enjoy their evening and sometimes they didn't even get to eat."

Now everything from color choice to dress style is getting a makeover.

"This summer, we've had a lot of color, even neons – like gerbera daisies," Andrews said. "It's trend instead of just traditional."

Wendy Allison, of Weisner's Sew Unique and Bridal Boutique, said many brides are choosing different styles from the traditional look.

"Ten years ago, it was long-sleeved and really conservative," Allison said. "We've also seen some military weddings when navy and white are used in the gowns."

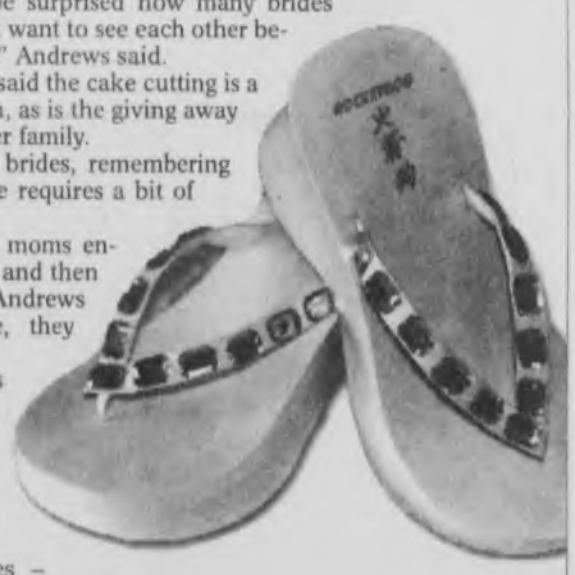
Charlotte Bailey, certified wedding specialist for Wonderful Weddings, said brides are still likely to choose traditional colors but with a few alterations.

"For brides, still white, but not so puffy, and a lot are strapless," Bailey said. "And the bridesmaid dresses are a lot less god-awful ugly."

The past tradition of a bride wearing her mother's wedding dress is almost extinct, Bailey said.

"Some brides maybe incorporate something from Mom's wedding, but if they don't, the moms are usually not upset," she said.

But not just the dresses are different. Bailey said people are waiting until they are older to wed, couples are footing the bill and brides are having it their way.



Some traditions are still important to couples and are incorporated into the ceremony.

"You would be surprised how many brides and grooms don't want to see each other before the wedding," Andrews said.

Andrews also said the cake cutting is a standing tradition, as is the giving away of the bride by her family.

But for some brides, remembering how it used to be requires a bit of prompting.

"They do it if moms encourage them to, and then they want to," Andrews said. "Otherwise, they forget about it."

As the past's traditions and today's trends melt together, the choice, Andrews said, is the couple's.

"Anything goes – being creative, your personality and your groom's personality," she said.

Fall weddings offer variety

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Burgundy, indigo and gold will line the wedding aisles this fall as brides look to match their colors to the changing leaves.

Sarah Boggs, manager of Celebrations of the Heart, 401 Poyntz Avenue, said brides tend to go with bridesmaids dresses that have deeper hues in the fall instead of the pastels that are popular in the spring and summer.

"You see a lot of darker colors that are more rich to fit in with the season," Boggs said.

Connie Lee, owner of Kistner's Flowers and Greenhouses, 1901 Pillsbury Drive, said wedding flowers are also deeper colors in the fall, although the rose is the most popular flower in any season.

"This year I am seeing a lot of burgundy and white roses," Lee said.

Not only is fall good for its color palette, it also offers different scenery.

According to www.theknot.com, a Web site that helps brides plan their wedding day, the fall leaves can be a beautiful backdrop.

Outdoor weddings are another alternative with the temperate fall temperatures.

However, the fall trends aren't for all brides, so Lee suggests each bride choose something that fits their personality.

"Your wedding doesn't have to follow the seasons," she said. "It's about matching the couple's personality."

Consultants handle wedding details

By Melissa Brownlee
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It is the best of times and it is the worst of times.

Planning a wedding can send brides' stress levels through the roof. But a budding industry seeks to prevent just that.

Wedding consultants assist couples in planning their special day – from the key requirements, like date and place, down to the smallest details, such as wedding party favors.

Jenne Andrews, owner of Premiere Events, is a Manhattan wedding consultant. Her company does event planning, including wedding consulting. Premiere Events helps plan about 20 weddings per year in the Manhattan area.

Premiere Events charges from $500 to $3,000 per wedding, depending on the services performed.

The company can make arrangements for locations and vendors, create timelines, manage budgets, decorate sites and handle other last-minute details.

"We make sure your wishes are done the day of," Andrews said. "We are a calming influence on the wedding day."

Another type of wedding consultation is offered through many churches.

Lindsey Youngs, senior in family life and community services, and Ryan Ebright, senior in industrial engineering, are getting married in May at their church in Kansas City, Mo.

The church requires couples to use a staff wedding consultant for about a $200 fee. The consultant manages the process for Youngs and Ebright – including wedding workshops, pre-marital counseling appointments, the rules of the church and decorating ideas. She will also oversee the wedding day.

Youngs said she is thankful for her consultant. Without her, Youngs said she would have to keep track of her school work along with all the details of wedding planning.

"She keeps me updated on everything and gives me all my options," Youngs said.

Nonetheless, many brides forgo a consultant.

Amy Hughes, senior in animal sciences and industry, is planning her summer wedding without the help of a consultant.

"If I had the money I would hire one, but I have a lot of help from my family and friends," Hughes said.

It doesn't bother Hughes that she can't hire a wedding consultant. She said she is excited about the time she'll be spending with her family and friends in preparation for her wedding.

For couples on a tighter budget, planning a wedding on their own is a must. A multitude of books and Web sites are available to help couples select sites, choose decorations, create invitations and manage other aspects of a wedding.

Questions to ask Prospective Consultants

1. Is the consultant willing to work with your budget?
2. How will the consultants fees be determined? (percentage or flat fees)
3. Does the consultant know the best venues and vendors in the area of your event? If so does she get discounted rates with them?
4. Will the consultant handle the whole invitation process including not just printing but, addressing, mailing and handling RSVPs?
5. Is the consultant willing to over see all details of your big day so you and your family will be worry free?
6. Ask to see a portfolio of past events they have coordinated.
7. If the consultants fees are out of your price range, ask if they are willing to handle only the day of duties?
8. Most importantly, make sure they are willing to work with you and your ideas.

Market offers more variety

Eralene Suggs, Manhattan resident, decides which watermelon to buy from Britt's as Ivan Lopez, an employee, helps her with her choice Saturday morning at the Manhattan Farmer's Market. The market is open Saturdays from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. and during the evenings at CiCo Park until the end of October.

By Jonas Hogg
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Not everyone sleeps in on Saturday mornings.

Many locals come to the Manhattan Farmer's Market to either sell or buy meats, crafts and locally grown vegetables.

The market opens the first Saturday in May and is open every Saturday from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. until the end of October, with a smaller market open Wednesdays at CiCo Park.

The Manhattan Farmer's Market has a long history.

"It's the oldest farmer's market in Kansas," Lee Rucker, who sells flowers at the market, said. "It's about 25 years old."

Drawing a wide range of people, the market offers everything from bison meat, eggs, baked goods, crafts and peaches.

Many vendors, like Rucker, have been selling at the market for several years.

Tom Lane and his wife Jennifer own Honey Lamb Farm in Onaga, Kan. He comes out to sell bread, honey and other goods made with bee products.

"My wife has always made bread for ourselves, at home," Tom Lane said. "We grind our own flour. It's just kind of stuff you can't get anywhere else."

With a stand next to Lane, Freal Frazier has been selling at the market for three years.

"I came out here to sell soap," he said.

Some vendors diversify their products over time.

"I've expanded into making wooden bowls, lotions and insect repellent," Frazier said.

Many of the vendors grow organic produce, even though they have not been certified.

The off-the-beaten-path feel of some of the products is what draws some people to the market.

For some, the products offered at the market simply can't be had elsewhere. Hicram Koc said she could find more variety of produce at the market.

"I can't find some vegetables in big markets like Wal-Mart or Dillons," she said.

For others, like K-State student Mo Wahl, it is a good place to set up shop for a day.

"Being somebody that doesn't have a brick and mortar business, it's kind of nice that this is something that we have going on in the community," Wahl said.

For many of the vendors, the market is an important part of the community.

"I think it is tremendous. It adds to diversity. It brings out the local flavor and gives people a chance to experience something they wouldn't experience anywhere else," Lane said.

Cell phones provide text, photo options for communication

Alltell	1,500 text messages, instant messaging, picture and video messaging	$14.99 a month
Cellular One	2,500 text messages 60 picture messages	$19.99 a month $4.99 a month
Sprint	unlimited text and voice messaging	$10.00 a month

The Zach Morris brick-sized cell phone is a thing of the past, because as cell phones have shrunk in size, their capabilities have greatly expanded.

Not only can cell phones be used for calls, they can now take pictures, record videos, access the Internet and send text messages. All this communication power is packed into a piece of equipment that is small and as easy to misplace as a set of car keys.

Many college students are toting cell phones these days and carrying them into the classroom – a place text messaging can be useful.

"It's something to do during class," Frank Pizzuti, freshman in business administration and a T-Mobile user, said. "It blows sometimes. I just texted my friend in class today."

Text messaging in also popular because of its cost-effectivness compared with using phone plan minutes during an actual call.

"I use text messaging about 15 times a day, walking to and from class," Michele Evans, freshman in animal science and industry and T-Mobile user, said. "If it's not an urgent message, I can text and save my minutes."

Different cell phone providers offer rates and phone plans that have a specific number of texts included.

With T-Mobile service, customers can text message, instant message, take pictures and video message all for one price depending. T-Mobile offer unlimited messaging for $14.99 per month.

"I think it makes it more personal if you see it written," Ali Johnson, junior in public relations and Alltel user, said. "And it's easier to say something in a text message if you are afraid to say it."

Alltel services offers packages that include text messaging, picture, video and instant messaging for 1,500 messages at $14.99 per month as well.

Competing with that pricing is Cellular One, offering up to 2,500 messages per month at $19.99. As for picture messaging, they offer 60 messages for $4.99 per month, however, once the 60 message limit is passed, customers have to pay 25 cents per message.

Students can text message as many people as they want, providing the receiver has text message capability as well.

"I text my brother and my sister," Kelly Nemec, freshman in marketing and Sprint user, said. "If I have one question, it's easier to text instead of having a whole conversation."

Amongst the bicycles, Patience Jackson, sophomore in pre-nursing, parks her 2003 Honda Metropolitan moped behind Dickens Hall. Jackson bought her moped last summer because she wanted something that would get better gas mileage due to high gas prices.

Popularity of mopeds on the rise

By Tessa French
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

They get 75 miles per gallon and it takes only minutes to find a parking place for them.

K-State students have discovered mopeds, a mode of transportation whose popularity is rising faster than gas prices.

Most models get at least 60 miles per gallon, while others reach close to 90.

Students can park mopeds one of two ways on campus, Jeff Barnes, assistant director of K-State Parking Services, said.

"If it's under 50 cubic centimeters then it can be registered as a bicycle and those permits are free," he said.

Students can also buy a motorcycle permits for mopeds, even if they are under 50cc. Then they have the option of parking in either the bike racks or the motorcycle section. Mopeds bigger than 50cc are required to have a motorcycle pass, Barnes said.

There are fewer campus regulations on mopeds, making it less likely to get a ticket.

"The only way to get a ticket with a moped is if you park it illegally, just like a bike or a car," Barnes said.

There are several local and state laws regulating the use of mopeds. They cannot be driven on sidewalks or state highways but must remain in the street, Riley County Patrol Officer Steve Boyda said.

Drivers under 18 must wear a helmet and, depending on the make of the moped, drivers older than 18 also must wear helmets.

"If the moped has no windscreen, then eye protection is required," Boyda said.

Eric Mueller, sophomore in business administration, bought a moped after his license was suspended because of a DUI.

"You have to have a valid driver's license to operate a moped, but if it is suspended then you just apply for a moped-only license," Boyda said.

However, getting two DUIs prohibits citizens from obtaining even the moped license, Boyda said.

Mueller said the best aspects of driving a moped are the free parking pass and how easy parking is. And though he didn't buy the moped specifically for the excellent gas mileage, he said he appreciates it.

Just like cars, many mopeds need tags and insurance.

"If the moped has a Vehicle Identification Number or title, then it is required to be tagged," Boyda said.

Mopeds over 50cc must have insurance, but Boyda said it is a good idea to have insurance on all mopeds.

There have been a few problems between the RCPD and moped drivers.

"We've had people who got false information and don't think that a driver's license is required for a moped," Boyda said.

Other problems stem from students who don't think their mopeds have to be registered, Boyda said. He said the Riley County Treasurer's Office can answer questions about tags.

Though smaller mopeds look like they could pose danger on the streets, Boyda said the RCPD has only seen one minor accident in the past couple of weeks.

Sometimes vehicle drivers have trouble seeing mopeds, so Boyda suggests driving defensively and being extra cautious when operating a moped.

Democrat to challenge Morris for school board

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

State of Kansas school board member Connie Morris has been involved in several controversial issues since beginning her term in 2002, but now one past ghost has come back to haunt her.

Former Garden City, Kan., mayor Tim Cruz will run against Morris when she goes up for re-election next year. In 2002, Morris accused Cruz of being in the country illegally, although he is actually a third-generation Garden City resident.

Cruz, a Democrat and assistant manager at Sears, said his decision to run has nothing to do with Morris personally.

"That happened three or four years ago," he said. "I've tried to put it behind me. That's definitely not the reason I chose to run. We happen to share the same district, and it was the best time for me."

Morris said she had nothing to say on the subject, except, "That is old news."

Morris opposes the current law that allows the use of public tax dollars to educate the children of illegal immigrants.

Cruz said while Garden City has a large number of immigrants, that will not be a central issue for many schools in the district.

"The most important thing is that our children are educated," Cruz said. "When our kids are educated, our communities are successful. It's a benefit to our economic development when you have kids graduating high school and going to two- and four-year colleges."

Morris said she hasn't given much thought to the campaign.

"I will continue to focus on the viability of rural schools, holding down educational costs to taxpayers and addressing the educational consequences of unprotected borders," she said.

While Cruz doesn't criticize Morris, he doesn't think their district, which covers nearly 40 percent of the state, is well represented.

"It's important as a representative, if you really want to do a good job, to get out and visit those people at least once a month," Cruz said. "That's my goal."

Cruz accused Morris of visiting Garden City, by far the largest school system in her district, only twice in the last three years.

Morris has recently been under fire for other reasons, including her stance on the revision of state science standards and spending during an official trip, for which she eventually reimbursed the state.

Beach exhibit to feature history of Kansas farming

By Maria Nilges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The new exhibit at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art features works portraying farming in the 1920s through the 1960s.

The exhibit, "All in a Day's Work: Images of Farming and Ranching From the Collection of the Beach Museum of Art," will be on display from now until Dec. 23.

The collection includes prints, watercolors and drawings illustrating rural landscapes, daily chores, and social issues of the day. William Dickerson, John Helm, Herschel Logan and E. Herbert Deines are some of the featured artists.

Kathrine Schlageck, education and public services supervisor of the museum, is the curator of the exhibit. She said the museum expects about 7,000 people to view the exhibit.

"Local schools, freshman seminars and Jim Sherow's Kansas History class are the groups that we know will be coming," she said.

Schlageck said the theme was chosen for a variety of reasons.

"This works well as a fall exhibition. Educationally, it can be a piece of regionalism for local schools," she said. "Farming lifestyles are changing, and this is a way to look at the past and future of them."

Coach Bill Snyder and several football players also took the stage, but a sudden rain shower did not stop fans from listening to Snyder's enthusiastic speech.

"I appreciate the fact that you've been there through thick and thin," he said during his speech.

Fullback Victor Mann said K-State fans are "one-of-a-kind," while offensive lineman Jeromey Clary said the fans' loyalty that makes the game possible.

Snyder, however, simply wanted to say thank you.

"We've experienced some wonderful things here at Kansas State University," he said.

SENATE | Bond, parking fees to fund new garage proposal to build."

The parking garage will be funded by a bond that will be repaid with parking fees.

Student parking fees will increase $25 each year for three years, doubling the current fee to $150 for non-garage permits. Garage permits will cost $200 and will guarantee students a parking spot in the garage.

Faculty and staff permits will increase $34 each year for three years, doubling the fee to $200.

If Student Senate approves the plans, fees would be implemented in fall 2006.

Darwin Abbott, director of parking services, said a new parking garage would help minimize the "ripple effect."

"The ripple effect happens when we have a function, like senior day, that reserves 200 stalls out of the West Stadium lot and displaces 200 people," Abbott said.

Burns said he hopes student senators recall parking experiences when deciding their vote next week.

"Think about how many times during the evening you drive around the south side of campus to find a parking spot to attend a function at the union," he said. "It's going to be an inconvenience for a year, but look at how many years of convenience we are going to have past that."

In other business, Student Senate will also vote next Thursday for funding the Student-Centered Tuition Enhancement, which includes the Student Readership Program, Diversity Programming and classroom improvements.

come together, and last weekend's victories helped raise the team's confidence.

"It helped us see that we can beat good teams," Lastra said.

"So, we are fired up for our games this weekend."

Captain Agata Rezende said she believes the Wildcats can continue their streak of wins.

"Our goal is to win both matches and sweep again," Rezende said.

"We just want to beat everybody. It does not matter who we are going to play."

Rezende, an outside hitter from Franca, Brazil, was named Most Valuable Player of last weekend's tournament after she collected 44 kills and a .468 hitting percentage over the three games.

Rezende credits her play to K-State's coaching staff.

"I am so grateful for the coaches, because they are doing a great job with me," she said. "I give this award to all my coaches."

Two of Rezende's teammates joined her on the all-tournament team: sophomore setter Stacey Spiegelberg and redshirt-freshman outside hitter Megan Kroeker.

Spiegelberg dished out 127 assists and six service aces, while Kroeker rang up 22 kills while hitting .364.

"Making the all-tournament team was awesome," Kroeker said.

"I was surprised, and it was an honor. I have been working hard, and I felt like I achieved something. All that work is starting to pay off."

Roberts nominated to succeed Rehnquist on court

By JP Wilson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Chief Justice William Rehnquist died at his home in northern Virginia on Saturday, after a 33-year tenure on the U.S. Supreme Court and a long battle with thyroid cancer. He was 80 years old.

President George Bush moved quickly to fill the position of chief justice, elevating John Roberts' nomination from associate justice on Monday.

"Even during a period of illness, Chief Justice Rehnquist stayed on the job to complete the work of his final Supreme Court term," President Bush said in a statement. "His departure represents a great loss for the court and for our country."

Rehnquist
CHIEF JUSTICE

Roberts, a former law clerk for Rehnquist, was originally nominated to replace Sandra Day O'Connor, who announced her retirement this summer.

"Since positions of the Supreme Court are for life, many of the issues that these new justices will render will be on issues that affect our adult lives," Mike Kelly, sophomore in electronic journalism, said.

Rehnquist, a World War II veteran, will be buried at Arlington National Cemetery in Virginia on Wednesday, after lying in repose today at the Great Hall in the Supreme Court building.

His legacy on the court began as the sole dissenter in numerous cases as an associate justice. He was one of two justices to dissent from the landmark abortion case Roe v. Wade, and ruled on such controversial issues as the right to die, affirmative action and the death penalty.

Kansas Attorney General Phill Kline will argue before the Supreme Court in December, when the court hears arguments dealing with death penalty litigation from the Kansas Supreme Court case, Kansas v. Marsh.

"The type of justices that President Bush appoints will have a great effect on the outcome of the decisions for the nation, " Kelly said. "I am most concerned with the issues of abortion and same-sex marriage, because they seem to be at the forefront of national concern."

Appointed to the court at age 47, Rehnquist previously served as a lawyer for the U.S. Department of Justice. He graduated first in his class at the University of Stanford Law School and clerked at the Supreme Court for Justice Robert Jackson.

Rehnquist was nominated to the high court by President Richard Nixon in 1971 and was elevated to chief justice 19 years ago by President Ronald Reagan.

Diagnosed with cancer last October, Rehnquist vowed to remain on the bench despite his illness. He underwent chemotherapy, a tracheotomy and radiation treatments and

Targeted Excellence, funding discussed

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

New goals, current accomplishments and future policies were all discussed at the annual K-State State of the University speech Friday.

One of the major topics discussed was the Targeted Excellence program at K-State.

The policy is meant to pick the areas of expertise where K-State has the greatest chance of being nationally recognized.

"There is no way that every program at K-State can be nationally or even regionally recognized," K-State President Jon Wefald said during his presentation.

Along with picking out areas of focus, the strategy is also meant to encourage interdisciplinary cooperation.

"We cannot be all things to all people, that day is over," Wefald said.

"We have to have the agility, the creativity, the willingness to work together, for colleges and departments and the whole university to set priorities."

The series of speeches began with Tom Herald, president of the faculty senate, then M. Duane Nellis, the provost.

Nellis discussed K-State's budget and the lack of funding coming from the state.

Only 25 percent of K-State's budget is funded by the state, compared to 40 percent only a few years ago.

"We've gone from state funded to state supported to state located," Herald said.

"We throw in state molested," Bob Krause, vice president of Institutional Advancement, said, who spoke after Nellis.

Nellis also discussed K-State's vision of becoming a top 10 land grant institution, a goal set nearly five years ago, and how K-State is "at a crossroads."

"We can sustain ourselves, do things like we have been, or we can look forward aggressively," he said.

After Nellis spoke, Wefald discussed the Targeted Excellence program and acknowledged several of the programs at K-State that are nationally recognized.

He also mentioned the many achievements of K-State scholars.

Lee Borck, president of the K-State Foundation's board of directors, spoke after Wefald, and discussed the new "Changing Lives" campaign the foundation will kick off publicly Oct. 7.

The program hopes to raise $500 million for K-State over the next three years.

Trying to avoid the water, Kate Gillespie, junior in dance, fires a water gun in the direction of the hose that is soaking her Monday outside the Cats for Christ Student Center.

Hal Hockersmith, freshman in computer engineering, slides to the end of a slip n' slide in front of the Cats for Christ Student Center as a part of the annual H2O Yeah party sponsored by Cats for Christ. The slide was one of three ways to get wet, others were with water guns and water balloons.

2nd annual H2O Yeah party celebrates new school year with water slide, games

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Hal Hockersmith threw himself down the homemade water slide on Denison Avenue, he went a little too far and slid off the end.

"Quick, somebody shoot me because I need to get this mud off," the freshman in computer engineering said.

Several wet bystanders, using water guns and a garden hose, gladly granted his request.

Hockersmith was at Cats for Christ's annual H2O Yeah party Monday, where water was everywhere.

Cats for Christ, sponsored by the Manhattan Church of Christ, is a non-denominational organization for Christian students.

Campus Minister Matt Carter said this was the second time the event has been called "H2O-Yeah!" but the eighth time Cats for Christ has started the school year in this fashion.

"It's pretty fun. It kind of makes you feel like a kid again," said Eric Wright, junior in kinesiology.

The water slide was made from a long black sheet of plastic tied down by black stakes with a gray tarp at the end for extra stopping room.

Water came from a garden hose that had a leak so strong it was used to fill water guns.

If you go

The group meets at 7 p.m. every Wednesday for worship, and there is a free meal for college students every Sunday after the 6 p.m. service. The church is at 2510 Dickens Ave.

E-mail scams, fake Web sites take advantage of donors to relief efforts

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When disaster strikes, people want to help.

Hurricane Katrina damage estimates range from $14 billion to $35 billion, according to a Reuters AlertNet report. A majority of this bill is paid by contributors from across the nation, most of whom divert their money to noteworthy charities.

However, even some of the most trustworthy charities are not what they seem. And the contributions of unwary donors go to waste.

Should anyone decide to make a donation to the Hurricane Katrina relief efforts, ScamBusters.org highlights five common Internet scams that erupt after disasters.

1. Chain letters: Common chain letters noted by the ScamBusters Web site include e-mails requesting recipients forward the e-mail to other individuals. The letter claims for each forward sent, a charity will make a donation to the relief.

2. Fishing scams: According to the Washington Post, several fraudulent Web sites are pretending to be legitimate Hurricane Katrina relief organizations. These sites, while requesting humble donations, aim to steal financial information that later is used for identity theft.

3. Viruses and trojans: e-mails with photograph or document attachments have the potential of being dangerous. These attachments might contain computer viruses and trojans, some of which give full access of the victim's PC to the hacker.

4. Investment and security scams: The U.S. Securities and Fire destroys grocery

St. Mary's lost its only grocery store Saturday, after an early morning blaze burned Gockel's Thriftway. The nearly 2,200 residents of the town must now make a 16-mile trip to buy groceries at the nearest full-service market in Rossville. The cause of the fire has not been determined.

Healthy hot dogs

Scientists at the National Institutes of Health said the salt that preserves hot dogs could preserve people's health. They said it could prove a cheap, but potent treatment for sickle cell anemia, heart attacks, brain aneurysms and an illness that suffocates babies.

Prehistoric site found

Archeologists have found evidence of prehistoric farmers at the proposed site of a new wastewater treatment plant in El Dorado, Kan. American Indian sites were found when the waste water treatment plant was updated in 1983, so the city has arranged for a study of the area.

When Garmin set out to create a one-of-a-kind product, they gave Hank and Wai, engineering project leaders, a clean slate. No rigid specifications, no constraints on product design and capabilities. From this blue sky blueprint was born Rino, the worlds first two-way radio and GPS that can send and receive locations. Thanks to its unique design and innovative features, Rino had thousands of advance orders before it even hit store shelves. According to Hank and Wai, it's all about engineers with the freedom to dream and leaders willing to listen.

TO THE POINT

Roberts the right choice for chief justice

Only 17 men have filled the position of chief justice of the U. S. Supreme Court.

Now President Bush has nominated Judge John Roberts to be number 18, filling the vacancy left after the death of Chief Justice William Rehnquist.

Originally nominated to fill retiring Justice Sandra Day O'Connor's seat on the court, Roberts will now face increased scrutiny by the Senate during his confirmation hearings.

The president made the correct choice when deciding to adjust his tactics and nominate Roberts for the chief justice position.

Rehnquist sat on the Supreme Court for 33 years and spent 19 of those years as chief justice. If Roberts is confirmed, it will mean another long period of leadership in the court.

Roberts, who is only 50 years old, will have multiple decades to preside over the country's highest court.

His nomination also solves another potential problem facing the court. With the departure of Justice O'Connor and death of Chief Justice Rehnquist, two positions on the court would be vacant.

Since Justice O'Connor said she would remain until her successor was in place, a speedy confirmation of Roberts would allow the Supreme Court to begin its next session in October without any vacancies.

President Bush correctly nominated not only a highly-qualified individual, but also an accomplished judge to become the next chief justice. The U.S. Senate should confirm John Roberts and allow him to take his seat on the Supreme Court.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Kline's motives

Elected officials mislead, misdirect American public when it comes to aid

LOLA SHRIMPLIN

According to the Kansas City Star, the Kansas House of Representatives passed a resolution in 2002 that required a legal challenge to abortion and the use of Medicaid funding.

They also put a stipulation that it be filed after Feb. 1, 2003, because, according to the Star, "anti-abortion legislators had misgivings about leaving the challenge to Phill Kline's predecessor, Carla Stovall, who supported abortion rights."

This is your government, folks. These are the people you elected. It should bother the hell out of you that they are meddling with your liberties. That they are finding in-roads to eliminate your rights, piece by piece.

I don't care if you're pro-choice or pro-life. What I do care about is that the Attorney General of this state can't be honest about what he is trying to do. The House of Representatives tries to hide and obfuscate their true motives.

When the Vice President of the United States tells an opposing party's senator to, essentially, go screw himself, don't you think he was telling the entire nation the same thing?

It's all a design to mislead and misdirect the public. Confuse everybody with enough rhetoric and get the nation riled up with ultra-patriotic jargon about "Freedom Fries" and "Freedom Toast", and you might just retain your job and stay in Washington/Topeka/Jefferson City.

Is anyone really hearing what is being said? Does anyone really see what is going on? Or are we truly a Prozac nation, content to be drugged and led around by the hand while our leaders...our elected officials, piss off the rest of the world in our names?

With the disaster in New Orleans, Bush took the high road, once again, and refused help. We're Americans, by God, and we can stand by ourselves.

The world, our allies and those who dislike us intensely, looked beyond the rhetoric and offered aid to the victims.

Then State Department spokesman, Sean McCormack, said offers of assistance would be accepted.

"Whatever they ask for will be given, from reserves of oil that different countries have provided, to any other thing that they may need," said Javier Solana, European Union Foreign Policy Chief.

The rest of the world is looking beyond our government, beyond this divider of a President.

It's easy to stand tall and announce that you're "Proud to be American" when you are in the United States.

It's that kind of myopic ignorance that makes the rest of the world so uneasy, yet when we are in the middle of a national disaster, they rush to our aid.

Why would they do that?

Why would they care, when we so obviously consider ourselves an island unto ourselves, if you listen to our government rhetoric.

For the answer to that, consider what the French said when September 11 happened.

They said "Today we are all Americans."

But in all our xenophobic mania, we glossed over that and decided anyone who wasn't with us in our crusade was against us.

Maybe Cheney wasn't telling the United States to screw ourselves. Maybe he was telling the rest of the world.

Luckily, they are hearing and not listening.

Sex ed should be mandatory for students

True or false: you can't get pregnant if you have sex underwater.

I think most of us know enough by now to safely answer, "false." But, if members of the Kansas Board of Education have their way, students could easily pass through the state public school system without ever having rumors like this cleared up by a formal course in sex education.

JACI BOYDSTON

Currently, parents who don't want their children to participate in public school sex education classes must inform the school of their decision to "opt out." However, under a plan proposed by John Bacon, a conservative board member from Olathe, all children would be automatically excused from sex-ed classes unless their parents sign a permission slip "opting in."

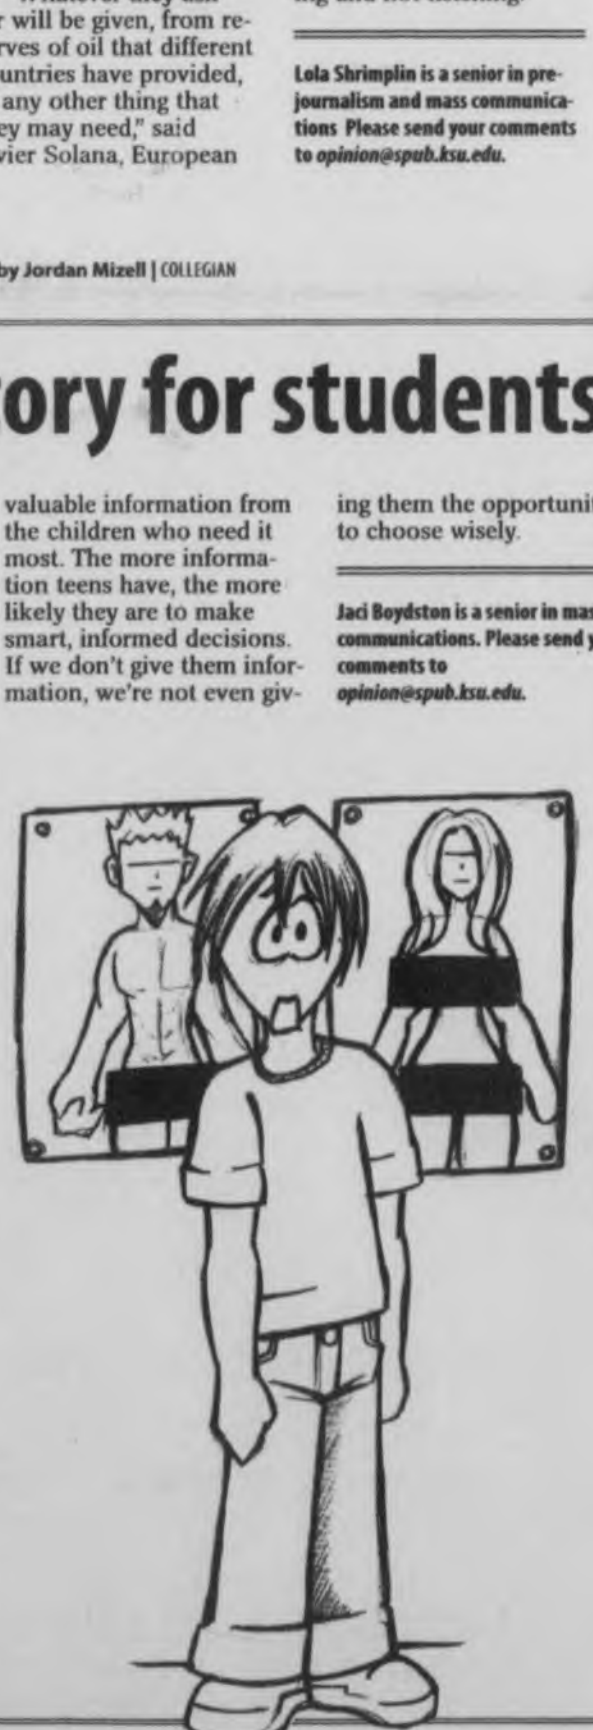
By requiring a signed permission slip to participate in sex-ed classes, the Board would be ensuring that only a minority of public school children would ever receive a formal education in human sexuality.

Under this proposed system, the decision to take sex-ed would be left entirely up to the child – if a child doesn't want to learn about the biology of human reproduction, it would be easy to simply "forget" to pass the permission slip along to mom and dad. And if the children not taking sex-ed get an extra recess while the other children have to go to class, how many kids are going to go out of the way to get that permission slip signed?

The worst part of this plan is the type of children that will be hurt by its effects. The parents who get involved in their children's lives and encourage open and honest discussions will be the first ones to get those permission slips signed. Their kids aren't the ones we should be worried about.

It's the parents who don't pay attention to their kids, who never sit down to talk to them about sensitive issues and who won't get the permission slips turned in. If parents don't care enough to talk to their children about sex, they certainly won't care enough to sign a piece of paper allowing their children to receive that information from another source.

These are the kids who will be hurt by Bacon's plan. With no sex education at school and no caring parents to give them "the talk" at home, these kids will enter adolescence with little chance of being able to distinguish the truth from silly playground rumors.



When it's time for these kids to make personal decisions about sex, birth control and disease prevention, how likely are they to make smart decisions? With a complete lack of information, how can we possibly expect them to be smart about sex?

With the average age of first sexual activity getting lower and lower in this country, we should be providing Kansas children with as much information about birth control and disease prevention as possible.

Classes on human sexuality should be mandatory for all students, and they should cover all options available to sexually active teens. And although abstinence should be encouraged, it definitely shouldn't be the only bullet point on the syllabus.

Bacon's plan would rob valuable information from the children who need it most. The more information teens have, the more likely they are to make smart, informed decisions. If we don't give them information, we're not even giving them the opportunity to choose wisely.

Fort Riley soldiers honored

Soldiers from Fort Riley hold the American flag during halftime as the K-State Marching Band performed patriotic songs Saturday afternoon.

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Roaring crowds of K-State fans greeted hundreds of local soldiers at the Florida International football game as part of K-State's Fort Riley Day.

Saturday's game was dedicated to the soldiers returning from service in Iraq, those who will soon deploy and the many soldiers who have been activated.

The day began when a six-man color guard from the 1st Brigade Combat Team carried the American flag onto the field.

Decked out in camouflage, Willie the Wildcat rode into the stadium on top of a Humvee, waving an American flag.

Also, several soldiers wounded in action in Iraq assisted with the coin toss and two helicopters from the 82nd Medical Company flew over the stadium before the game.

During halftime, about 560 soldiers took the field, accompanied by the K-State Marching Band.

The band played a medley of patriotic songs, including "Stars and Stripes Forever" and "God Bless America" while soldiers unfurled the garrison flag.

"We extend our heartfelt gratitude for your continued service for our country," coach Bill Snyder said in a pre-recorded message played during halftime.

The crowd cheered and applauded as the soldiers took the field and chanted "U-S-A".

"I thought it was very appropriate for the situation going on right now. It's just what America needs," Brock Kendrick, sophomore in education, said.

The soldiers were given discounted admission to the game, Specialist Jason Newton said.

"It was really nice to have everyone cheering us on," he said. "I'm really glad to be here."

Specialist Joel O'Malley said he appreciated the patriotic support K-State fans showed.

"All the respect, everyone cheering us on, it really makes you feel good," he said.

Campaign for nonviolence kicks off rally, film series

By Tessa French
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"Nonviolence starts with me/you."

The motto of Campaign for Nonviolence. This theme is put into action in several events the organization facilitates each year, including the annual Rally for Nonviolence.

This year's rally is 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. tomorrow in the Union Courtyard.

Started in 2000, K-State's Campaign for Nonviolence works to share nonviolence principals and ways to deal with discrimination, abuse and harassment problems.

Promoting a safe community that is respectful and equitable for all citizens is its main goal.

The group's web site said its mission is "...to reduce the incidence of violence and reduce tolerance for violence by fostering a community-wide culture of respect, fairness and safety."

The rally will kick off a film series called "Movies on the Grass," designed to make students aware of social and human rights issues and to connect them with the world around them. The rally is not only a way to recruit new members, but also provides resources for K-State students and staff that promote a safe campus.

Dorinda Lambert is the director for clinical services at University Counseling Services and chair of the K-State Campaign for Nonviolence.

"We hope to energize the campus community and start the school year with a positive, grassroots push toward nonviolence and safety," she said.

Erica Besler, freshman in architecture, said she had not heard about Rally for Nonviolence but would be interested in it.

"I would probably go, maybe even get into volunteering for it," she said.

Information tables will be set up at the rally by different organizations.

Those who have significantly affected the nonviolence movement will be recognized at a noon ceremony.

"Movies on the Grass" will show its first film, "Hotel Rwanda," at 7:30 p.m. on Sept. 11 in Coffman Commons, south of Hale Library.

A different movie will be shown every Sunday until the end of October.

At each showing, students can buy $1 raffle tickets that places them in a drawing for a $500 international travel grant.

K-State Women's Center, K-State Libraries, CrossRoads, the Manhattan Alliance for Peace and Justice and Amnesty International are among the series' sponsors.

Matt Prascher, junior in physics, said he supports the nonviolence organization.

"I support nonviolence and if it weren't for my busy schedule and hard classes I would consider volunteering," he said.

missed several months before returning in March.

Rehnquist struggled in presiding over President Bush's second inauguration in January.

"I was deeply touched when he came to the Capitol for the swearing in," Bush said in a statement.

Roberts' Supreme Court confirmation hearing in the Senate was expected to begin this week. President Bush said Monday he is confident Roberts will be confirmed by the time the Supreme Court reconvenes on Oct. 3.

"I don't think the court will change too much based on his background and his work with the Bush and Reagan administration," John Fliter, a political science professor, said

Fliter said the only change in the court would depend on who takes the seat of O'Connor.

"I would hope Bush picks a moderate woman," he said. "But he hasn't shown any tendency to do that."

If the Senate is unable to confirm Roberts, John Paul Stevens, as senior associate justice, would perform chief justice duties.

"I'm certain that Chief Justice Rehnquist was hoping to welcome John Roberts as a colleague, and we're all sorry that day didn't come," President Bush said in a statement.

"Yet it's fitting that a great chief justice be followed in office by a person who shared his deep reverence for the Constitution, his profound respect for the Supreme Court, and his complete devotion to the cause of justice."

DAY OFF | Cats for Christ relax

Sliders put dish soap on their bodies to make it extra slippery and managed to wear a six-foot-long swath of mud into the lawn at the end of the slide by the time lunch arrived.

Carter said Cats for Christ was started in 1939 as a campus ministry by the Manhattan Church of Christ, which has been its only sponsor ever since.

Carter said the group's next big event will be an "anti-road trip" for the football game at Oklahoma. He said the group sets up a projector to watch the game at their building at 1501 Denison Ave. and charges admission for students to come watch.

Carter said the group did the same thing before for a Kansas City Royals baseball game and raised about $1,000.

"They were good seats. You were much closer to the action," he said.

Late food:

Aggieville restaurants cater to after-hours crowd

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For some bar patrons, the search for food is on as soon as they stumble out of their favorite watering holes. The added element of hungry drunks can make working the late shift in some restaurants a stressful situation.

The "bar rush" generally occurs from midnight to 3:30 a.m. for Gumby's Pizza employees, Holly Meadows, manager for Gumby's and freshman in art, said.

"At about 1 a.m. or 1:30 a.m. we just get massacred," Meadows said. "Like, last night (Saturday) we had a $1,000 hour, which means we had $1,000 in sales in one hour. It gets really crazy, but it's frustrating as well."

Meadows said Thursday, Friday and Saturday are some of the busiest days with Sunday and Monday generally being the slowest days.

Bar crowds start coming through the doors of Pita Pit around 1:30 a.m. and generally the rush lasts for an hour and a half, Peter Burghart Pita Pit employee said.

"I've worked late nights quite a bit and it gets pretty consistent," Burghart said. "But in that hour and a half you usually have a line that goes right out the door. Most of the people are kind of drunk, but most of them are pretty friendly."

Pita Pit shift manager Andy Litwiller said they can count on serving at least three dozen people on busy nights, but it is generally more.

"During the week we get some bar rush but it's not as much as on weekends," Litwiller said. "We have three people work during the week, but generally we have five on the weekend and we have managers come in and help when it gets crazy."

Litwiller said the busy nights bring louder crowds and, in some cases, mischievous people.

"We have to move the chip rack to the back because people try to lift chips for free," he said. "We also have to control the line and make sure everyone gets their receipts, otherwise people will jump in line to get free food."

He said at times one might expect a scuffle or argument, but for the most part, people eat their food and leave. He said when the bar rush leaves, they also leave a mess.

"Once they leave, then we have to clean," he said. "And it can get bad. Sometimes it looks like a hurricane just came through here."

Jimmy John's employees generally expect a rush starting around 11 p.m., Tom Hodapp, manager for Jimmy John's and senior in family studies said.

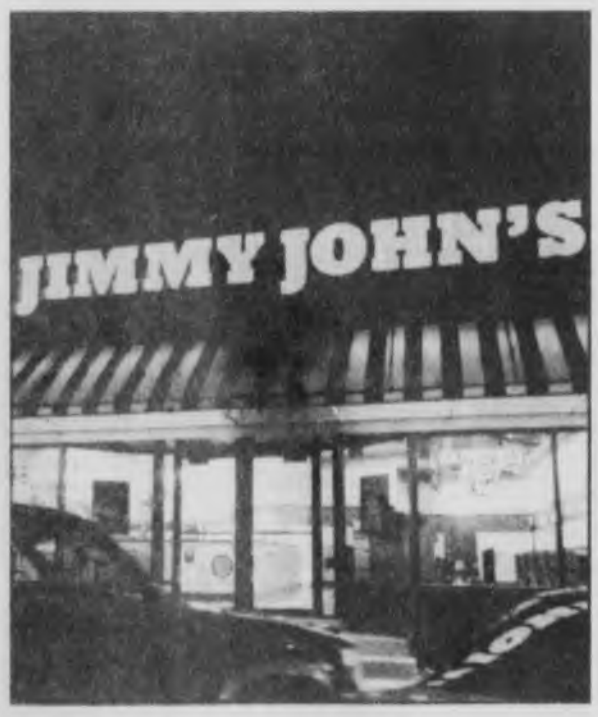
"The rush varies on when it starts," he said. "Sometimes it's from 1 a.m. to 2 a.m. Other times it might be 1:45 a.m. to 2:30 a.m. It depends on who lingers at the bars and who rushes home.

"But generally we have a good crowd. Our evening crowds are comparable to our lunch rush."

Hodapp said they have never had any major fights. He said their main concern is picking up after loud, messy drunk people.

Meadows said Gumby's basically tries to cater to the drunk bar-goers, but it can be frustrating for both the employee and the patron.

"We just get extremely busy," she said. "But generally our customers are good about understanding how hectic it is.



"I had a girl call one night and I told her there was an hour and a half wait. At first she was upset but her friend said 'dude, we just got home from the bars and bought pizza. What do you think everyone else is doing?'"

Meadows said it can get pretty crazy at night in the restaurant with a lot of drunk people.

"We've had some fights from people who drank too much," she said. "We've had streakers. We've had girls in bachelorette parties who've tagged our bathrooms with permanent markers. Pretty much anything can happen because it gets crazy at night."

The '0' factor: faking it causes more trouble than it saves

HOLLY KRAMER

It is not where you think it is. It's usually above, below, to the right or to the left of where you are. If a significant other can't find it, kindly direct them with your hands or stop complaining. Once they get there, the great affair is to O or not to O or to fake the O.

I've done it. The girl in your geology lab's done it. Meg Ryan did it for the world to see. Faking orgasms might be as common and inevitable in a girl's life as flirting and fixing their hair. I'm not advocating it by any means, and I think Gloria Steinem said it best when she said women are responsible for their own orgasms. So, equipped with enough know-how-to teach an anatomy lecture, I want to lay down the basics of the ever-intriguing orgasm.

First and foremost, a woman must know and like the person she's letting into her body. Despite what Hollywood desperately tries to sell us, the best sex occurs between two people who know and respect each other a great deal.

Second, the clitoris is a small, erectile organ of the vulva. It's the bud-like formation at the top of where the inner vaginal lips meet.

According to "The Vagina Monologues," Eve Ensler's award-winning play that gives voice to women's fantasies and fears about their bodies, it's the only organ in the human body that exists purely for pleasure. It has four times the amount of nerve cells than a penis.

Third, when we say "YES, RIGHT THERE!" please, please stay there and don't stop until we ask you to.

Fourth, most women don't orgasm with penile-vaginal intercourse. Ladies, if you can't come with intercourse, you're not alone. Some of the questions women ask are, what if I can't get there, what if it takes too long and my special someone gives up and the most confusing statement of all: "I think I've had one but I'm not sure." If you've had one, you'll know. Your muscles contract involuntarily, your pupils expand (a little known but fascinating fact) and you might call out to a higher power.

The biggest question may be how important an orgasm is to sex and how important is it to a relationship. I've heard a number of responses to this but the most promising one is that most women are willing to work on it with their partner. This only works if your partner cares about you having an orgasm and if he doesn't, what are you doing with him?

If you don't have a partner, you can still enjoy all the fun without having to be the Steven Spielberg of sexual escapades. You can do everything your way and be thankful that at least one person in the world knows how to get you off. In short, orgasms may be to sex what icing is to a cake: It can be wonderful with or without and in the end, hopefully you feel satisfied and fulfilled.

If achieving an orgasm is difficult, try incorporating vibrators or toys in the bedroom. If you feel it would threaten your partner, let them use the equipment on you. Try giving instructions to them and don't feel ashamed of taking a long time or telling them step-by-step directions. From what I hear, it can be an amazing turn-on.

Finally ladies, stop faking it. You won't win an Oscar and you could create more problems than just a failed orgasm. With that, I think I'm going to go find my clit on my own terms. Or at the very least, some cake.

NEW RELEASES

Music

Late Bloomer: Don't get caught napping on Kanye's hugely anticipated "Late Registration" — tucked in as a bonus track is the full-length take of "Diamonds (From Sierra Leone)." Unlike the version that appears as the 13th track and guests Kanye's boss, Jay-Z, the hidden cut is a non-remix. Also look out for a sample of Donal Leace's "Today Won't Come Again" on "Hey Mama," and producer Jon Brion's cornucopia of odd instruments — including vocoder and xylophone — throughout. Other tracks include "Heard 'Em Say" (featuring Maroon 5's Adam Levine), "Crack Music" (featuring Game) and "We Major" (featuring Nas and Really Doe).

Can You Keep Another Secret?: Rihanna, also an employee at Jigga Inc., tacks a secret treat onto the tail end of her debut, "Music of the Sun" — a remix of her club-tastic "Pon De Replay," this time co-starring the rowdy Elephant Man. Other tracks include: "That's La, La, La," "You Don't Love Me (No, No, No)" and "There's a Thug in My Life."

Planning for a Breakthrough: Chances are many of you have already heard Death Cab for Cutie's "Plans," what with mtvU's exclusive stream and all. But fans won't want to overlook some extra bonus goodies iTunes is offering — including bonus cover songs of Teenage Fanclub's "Start Again" and Freedy Johnston's "Bad Reputation" — and indie-fans should take note of guest spots by Beulah's Bill Swan and Harvey Danger's Sean Nelson. Tracks include: "Your Heart Is an Empty Room," "What Sarah Said" and "Someday You Will Be Loved."

Splish Splash: Dip into "Moistboyz IV" as well as the latest from Brooks & Dunn and a new album by Lazy on Water Music, then dry off with Sizzla's new one and Rihanna's Music of the Sun.

Super-Duper Releases: Marty Stuart and His Fabulous Superlatives, who release "Souls' Chapel," would find good company with Conjure One (Extraordinary Ways), Killer Mike (Ghetto Extraordinary) and Robert Walter (Super Heavy Organ).

DVD

"Ong Bak: The Thai Warrior" (2003)

In an age of "wire-fu" and CGI-choreographed "bullet time" fight scenes, the unassisted stunt work of Thai martial-arts phenom Tony Jaa is both refreshing and astonishing. A potential successor to superstars like Jackie Chan and Jet Li, Jaa's masterful grasp of the "Muay Thai" boxing style and his on-screen charisma more than carry this enjoyably big-on-action, low-on-plot vehicle. The storyline is pretty standard fare: Tasked with retrieving the stolen head of his village's sacred Buddha, Jaa's character must travel to the big city and compete in a crime lord's underground fight club in order to discover the idol's whereabouts.

"Sahara" (2005)

Matthew McConaughey plays the bluntly named Dirk Pitt, an adventurer/explorer who travels the world on ... well, on adventures and explorations financed by NUMA, a privately run underwater-salvage group led by retired admiral James Sandecker (William H. Macy). Along with sidekick Steve Zahn and love interest Penelope Cruz, he's on the trail of a gold-laden Civil War-era ship that, Pitt believes, has somehow ended up in the Sahara Desert.

"The Blues Brothers: 25th Anniversary Edition" (1980)

So much second-rate Blues Brothers-related crap has been bouncing around the pop-culture radar over the past few decades ("Blues Brothers 2000," anyone?) that it's easy to forget how simply, hugely entertaining the original incarnation of this dynamic duo and their big-screen debut really was. As Jake and Elwood Blues, two bad-ass brothers setting out to save the Chicago orphanage where they were raised, John Belushi and Dan Aykroyd are loud, fun, out-of-control jokesters who, all these years later, are somehow still funny and charming.

"Street Trash" (1987)

Director Jim Muro's one and only directorial feature — he makes his living as a world class Steadicam operator these days — ranks among the all-time great cult films. When a skid-row liquor store owner unearths a case of something called "Tenafly Viper" in his basement storeroom, he decides to sell it to the local winos instead of throwing it away. Alas, the government has spiked the booze with something that causes the imbiber to melt into a puddle of Technicolor ooze. What follows is a gore-hound's delight, as Freddy (Mike Lackey) discovers the truth about the drink's toxic properties and must outwit a crazed war vet (who runs the junkyard in which Freddy lives) in order to warn his homeless friends of the danger.

Before the football game Saturday morning, Lynn Feldcamp and his wife Rene (left), their son Nathan, 14, and daughter Anne, 11, met with Rene's sister Jan Zitek and her husband Lyle at the K-State Alumni Center. The Feldcamps came from Wichita and met their family from Madera, Calif., then went to the game to see their son and daughter.

Alumni Center open for home games

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Alumni Center provided a brief respite from the semi-controlled chaos of K-State tailgating on Saturday.

From 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. during all home football game days this season, the Alumni Center is a place to meet and relax, said Amy Button Renz, president of the K-State Alumni Association.

"Since we opened two years ago, we made the decision to be open on home game days," she said. "We just think it's important for people to have a place to gather."

Renz said by having set hours this year, instead of varying the hours based on the game time like in years past, she hopes to let people know the Alumni Center is always open.

Renz said attendance depends on the game time. During some Saturdays, about 50 people come and other times there are hundreds, she said.

Other visitors include administrative teams from other universities.

"We have all kind of schools that visit us now," she said.

If you go

Alumni Center

The Center will be open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Sept. 24, Oct. 8, Oct. 22, Oct. 29 and Nov. 19.

Jan and Lyle Zitek, Madera, Calif., residents, meet her sister's family at the Alumni Center before the one or two games per season they attend. The couple comes from California to watch their niece, who is part of the Color Guard.

"It's a great place to meet," Jan Zitek said.

Dolores Bertrand, Golden, Colo. resident, came to the Alumni Center to read the newspaper while her husband attended an alumni meeting at Pi Kappa Alpha before the game.

"We've come here a few times to meet friends before going to the game," she said. "It's fabulous."

Both Bertrand and her husband attended K-State and now come to all of the conference games.

"The Alumni Center is a home for all alumni," Renz said. "It's just another place for people to sit down and relax and relive memories."

FOOTBALL | Wildcat defense holds Golden Panthers to 7 first downs

to last year's season-opening 14-point win over Western Kentucky surfaced.

However, in comparing the two games, K-State (1-0) improved statistically over last year – most notably on defense.

Last year, Western Kentucky averaged 5.6 yard per play for 259 yards of total offense and 13 first downs. The Golden Panthers (0-1) managed just 3.9 yards per play, 236 total yards and seven first downs.

"We feel good," strong safety Marcus Watts said. "Defensively, I felt that we came out and we hopefully showed people that the Lynch Mob is back."

But Snyder was concerned about the lack of quarterback pressure from the Wildcat defensive line, as K-State recorded no sacks.

The Golden Panthers were aided by K-State miscues, as three of the five Wildcat turnovers contributed to all of Florida International's points.

Besides a blocked punt for a touchdown, which trimmed K-State's lead to 28-21 with 3:46 left in the third quarter, the Panthers' other two scoring drives totaled 31 yards, as Yamon Figurs fumbled a punt and quarterback Allen Webb's fumble after being sacked, which each occurred inside the K-State 20-yard line.

"You take those 31 yards away and we played extremely well," Snyder said after the game.

Webb, in his first opening-game start, had a career day, completing 19-of-31 passes for 161 yards and two touchdowns. However, in addition to his fumble, Webb also threw an interception, which marred the junior's assessment of his game.

"Overall performance, it was pretty mediocre," Webb said of his play. "In the first and second quarter, I believe I had a couple of overthrows. It was alright though. I think, the second half, I calmed down and we got things rolling a little bit."

K-State also got a career-best performance from first-time starter, running back Thomas Clayton. Clayton totaled career highs in yards (177), touchdowns (2) and carries (17).

K-State's focus now turns to a road game in Huntington, W.Va., against Marshall on Saturday.

The Wildcats hope to avenge their 27-20 home loss to the Thundering Herd in 2003, but Snyder said the emphasis of K-State's preparation will not be on the loss two seasons ago.

"We did address the Marshall game, but it wasn't necessarily in light of the previous ballgame in regards to this year's game," Snyder said.

CLAYTON | Junior running back rushes for 177 yards in win

to start in the backfield for the Wildcats.

Clayton finished with 177 yards on 17 carries and two touchdowns the Wildcats' 35-21 win. His 80-yard run was the longest since Ell Roberson's 91-yard run in against Nebraska on Nov. 16, 2002, and he finished with the most yards rushing since Sproles' school-record 292 yards rushing last year against Louisiana-Lafayette.

"Losing Darren was a big thing, but Darren was not our entire football team," offensive lineman Jeromey Clary said. "We have a lot of guys out there working really hard, and I think that we showed that this week. Without Darren, we're still capable of running the football."

On the second possession of the second half, Clayton scored his second touchdown of the game, plunging in from two yards out after Jermaine Moreira returned a punt 67-yards to set up the score.

"After I scored that 80-yard touchdown, it really hadn't sunk in yet, and right before you know it, there was another touchdown," Clayton said.

However, Snyder said Clayton kept his game to the basics.

"Thomas is a better back than what you saw today," Snyder said after the game.

VOLLEYBALL | Spiegelberg registers career-high with 67 assists

career-high for Hamlin – and Spiegelberg surpassed her career-high set earlier in the day with 67 assists to go along with 10 digs for a double-double.

Sophomore middle blocker Rita Lilliom and junior outside hitter Jamie Perkins led the Wildcats with 13 digs each.

Fritz said the matches provided a bigger challenge to the Wildcats than last weekend's Clarion Hotel Missouri State Invitational.

"It was much more difficult competition; it was an incredibly competitive environment," she said. "Utah State and Arkansas are better than people think they are and I think we were very fortunate to come out with two wins."

Rezende said the challenge from Utah State and Arkansas will be beneficial for the team as the season progresses.

"It was very important to play in those games," Rezende said. "It was a very good test for us to keep growing and maturing."

K-State returns to action tonight for its first home match of the season. The Wildcats face a Creighton team with a 4-1 record coming off a sweep of the San Diego State Invitational last weekend.

Opening weekend is easy money

CHRIS PATCH

The 2005 college football season has begun, and with it comes one of my favorite pastimes, wagering on the games.

Saturday was full of great bets. Southern California was easy money – favored by 35 points – Minnesota stomped Tulsa and Florida Atlantic was a no-brainer against a Kansas team that I wasn't sure could score enough to cover the spread in a shutout.

I did well, 7-1 actually, but there was one bet I didn't take that has been nagging me – K-State. This was a moral dilemma. The Wildcats were favored by 33 and a half points, and I was pretty sure the Wildcats wouldn't beat the spread. Everyone I talked to said Florida International was a sure thing, but I would have had to wager against my own school.

I didn't take it, and lost out, but the weekend was so easy, I didn't care.

I learned a lot over the first weekend of college football. I had money on enough games that I got a pretty good feel for who's for real this season and who just sucks.

Let me start with who sucks – Syracuse. The Orange's new head coach Greg Robinson is no miracle worker.

I watched a lot of games and these guys were actually the worst team I saw. A well-known sports handicapper had Syracuse over West Virginia, who was favored by two, as a five-star pick. I thought, "What the heck, I'll take them."

Bad Idea.

Syracuse looked completely awful, and I lost the bet as West Virginia won 15-7. Syracuse finished the game with 114 total yards and 11 penalties.

On the opposite end of the spectrum, USC looked great. I took the Trojans, who were favored by 35, and won easily with a final score of 63-17. Hawaii doesn't play any defense, and I'm not sure any team but Texas has a legitimate shot at beating USC.

In light of what happened Saturday, there are some sure things coming up this week.

If Kansas is favored by as much as 24 again, taking Appalachian State is a winner.

KU has a truly dismal offense with no clear-cut quarterback, and the Jayhawk defense didn't look as good as advertised.

I wouldn't touch any K-State bet at this point. The Wildcats are too unpredictable.

Syracuse's offense is spectacularly awful, so don't expect them to light up the scoreboard, and Texas and Georgia are for real.

I'm expecting Georgia to dominate South Carolina after seeing the Gamecocks struggle with Central Florida.

The game of the week is Texas at Ohio State.

The Longhorns are a better team, but Columbus, Ohio is a tough place to play. Expect a tight game with a margin around five. If Texas loses that game, it could be an interesting year in the Big 12 South.

Snyder pleased with team's progress after season-opening win Saturday

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Though it wasn't as dominating as many K-State fans would have liked, the Wildcats' 35-21 win over Florida International Saturday showed coach Bill Snyder enough to be pleased with his team's progress over last season.

After the game, Snyder said he liked several aspects of the Wildcats' win – specifically the team spirit, defense and running game.

On Monday, during the Big 12 teleconference, Snyder stood by his statements.

"We're certainly pleased to get a win in an opening ballgame," he said. "You don't always know what to expect. I thought we played reasonably well in several aspects of the ballgame."

With the 14-point win over Florida International – playing its first year as a full-time Division 1-A member – comparisons

Clayton shines in opener for Wildcats

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

K-State running back Thomas Clayton runs past Florida International's Gerrod Bodie during the first half of the home opener Saturday afternoon. Clayton led the Wildcats with 177 yards rushing, with his longest rush of 80 yards coming on the first play of the second half.

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In one play, Thomas Clayton showed the public what kind of running back he is.

He showed his ability to break tackles, have great balance and break away with speed.

With the Wildcats holding a 13-7 lead over Florida International heading into halftime, Clayton visualized what he would do when he got his opportunity to carry the ball to start the second half.

He did what coach Bill Snyder told all his players to do – visualize it, then do it.

On the first play of the third quarter, Clayton knew the strongside linebacker was going to come off the corner hard, so he dipped his shoulder as he had already prepared for earlier in the locker room.

From there, it was just putting his hand down on the ground to keep his balance, and 80 yards and 42 seconds later, K-State extended its lead to 13 points.

"It was really funny because I visualized that happening, before it happened," Clayton said. "It was just a great feeling to actually get that done out there."

Stuck behind K-State's all-time leading rusher last season, Darren Sproles, Clayton got his first opportunity

Volleyball opens season at home against Creighton

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Off to its best start in coach Suzie Fritz's five seasons, K-State's volleyball team plays its home opener tonight at 7 p.m. against Creighton in Ahearn Field House.

The Wildcats won both of its matches Friday at the C&C Services Arkansas Invitational in Fayetteville, Ark.

K-State (5-0) first fended off Utah State in five games, and then outlasted host Arkansas in another five-game match.

Against Utah State (5-1), the Wildcats won 30-28, 24-30, 31-29, 28-30 and 15-8 despite being out-hit by the Aggies 72-71 in kills and .244-.200 in hitting percentage.

Senior outside hitter Agata Rezende led K-State with a career-high 23 kills on .432 hitting percentage. She and sophomore middle blocker Megan Kroeker each had five blocks, sophomore libero Angie Lastra contributed 26 digs and two service aces and sophomore setter Stacey Spiegelberg tallied a career-high 53 assists.

Fritz was pleased with her team's resolve in the two closely contested matches.

"It was unbelievable having two five-game matches in one day," she said. "I didn't think we played particularly well against Utah State, but when it came down the stretch, they responded and played well. We played our best volleyball in game five, which is a nice sign."

K-State then survived against Arkansas (4-1), winning 22-30, 30-27, 26-30, 30-28 and 15-13.

Rezende and junior middle blocker Joy Hamlin led the team with 20 kills each – a

CFB | Week 1 Big 12 Players of the Week announced

DALLAS — Missouri quarterback Brad Smith, Nebraska linebacker Bo Ruud and Colorado kicker Mason Crosby were the season's first recipients of the Big 12 player of the week awards announced Monday.

Smith was named top offensive player for piling up 412 yards of total offense while putting the Tigers off to a 37-0 lead en route to a 44-17 victory over Arkansas State. He threw for 317 yards and a school-record four touchdowns, plus ran for a team-high 95 yards.

Ruud was the leader of a unit that kept Maine to minus-6 rushing yards and 145 yards of offense in a 25-7 victory.

He had a fumble recovery in the fourth quarter, then sealed the victory with a 27-yard interception return for a touchdown.

NFL | Rice retires from football after 20-year career

DENVER — Unwilling to be a bit player with the Broncos, Jerry Rice retired Monday, closing a 20-year career for the most productive receiver in NFL history.

Rice

Rice, 42, made his decision over the weekend at home in San Francisco, then returned to Broncos headquarters and met with coach Mike Shanahan. He played 20 NFL seasons.

Shanahan confirmed what Rice already knew — that he would be a fourth or fifth receiver, at best, this season — and Rice confirmed what many figured — that he would rather call it quits than be a bit player with the Broncos.

NFL | Steelers' Ward signs new 4-year deal

Three-time Pro Bowl wide receiver Hines Ward, regarded as the heart and soul of the Pittsburgh Steelers offense, on Monday morning signed a four-year contract extension that will keep him with the team through the 2009 season.

Ward

The extension is worth $25.83 million and includes total bonuses of $10 million. Ward can earn an additional $2.5 million in incentives. Ward had one year left on his previous contract, at a base salary of $1.67 million. Without the add-on, he would have been eligible for unrestricted free agency next spring.

The accord ends months of negotiations that included Ward's 15-day holdout at the start of training camp.

TEN | Davenport makes another quarterfinal

NEW YORK — Bad news, ladies. Lindsay Davenport is hitting her stride.

The 1998 champion made it to the quarterfinals for the 11th time in 12 events this year with a 6-0, 6-3 romp over France's Nathalie Dechy at the U.S. Open on Monday. The American, trying to reach her third Grand Slam final of the year, has dropped only 18 games in four matches.

Davenport

"Today was the best match I've played since Wimbledon, I think, even including New Haven," Davenport said.

Davenport next plays either sixth-seeded Elena Dementieva, last year's runner-up, or No. 11 Patty Schnyder.

K-State alumnus covers aftermath

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Houma, La., a city with a population 32,393 according to the 2000 U.S. Census, is about 60 miles west-southwest of New Orleans.

"I think we got pretty lucky," he said. "We're pretty much right at sea level, and had the storm just been a little more west, we'd be just like New Orleans."

He said about 2,300 evacuees are staying in two main shelters and several churches there.

"We're a pretty small newspaper. I think we're 19-20,000 in circulation and so we've localized this as much as possible," said Stamey.

The paper has been listing posts from people looking for loved ones who were displaced by the storm on their Web site, www.houmatoday.com. They have also provided a base of operations for the New Orleans Times-Picayune, which was forced out by the hurricane.

The Times-Picayune is a morning paper while the Courier is an afternoon paper, so things have worked out between the two staffs. Stamey said Times-Picayune workers have actually moved into the Courier's building, and his photo studio has been a bedroom for the past week.

"The newspaper is actually one of the highest points in town at 15 feet above sea level. As a Kansas kid, that's just ridiculously low to me, but it's one of the safest places," he said.

The most heavily-damaged area he's been to is Metairie, La., a city just outside New Orleans. He said he went up there Aug. 30 when a couple of school buses from his town went up there to pick up as many people as possible and take them back to shelters in Houma.

"I left at 9 (p.m.), so it was already dark," he said. "I really couldn't see specifics but I could tell that there was water everywhere ... New Orleans is such an upbeat, bright, party-type town that to see it completely dark like that was almost eerie."

He said he got an opportunity to go to into New Orleans last week when there

Horne rests after doing physical therapy exercises Friday afternoon. Horne spent six-and-a-half weeks in the hospital before she was released.

Sophomore survives stroke during summer

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

June 15 started out as a typical summer day for Amanda Horne at her home in Overland Park, Kan.

Horne slept until about 10 a.m., started a load of laundry, ran upstairs to her room and picked up her cell phone at 10:30 a.m. to call her mom for advice on what to get her stepfather for Father's Day.

Then things started to go wrong.

"I just started feeling weird," Horne, sophomore in communication sciences and disorders, said. "I said, 'Mom, I think I'm going to faint.'"

Horne's mother, Glenda Miller, said after that one sentence, all she heard was a rustling noise.

"It sounded like when someone accidently calls you from their cell phone when it's in their pocket," Miller said. "It didn't make any sense because if she passed out, it would be silence."

After trying unsuccessfully to get her daughter to respond, Miller hung up the phone and called again.

"She answered, but again all I could hear was the swishing noise," Miller said.

So Miller hung up and called back once more.

"She answered again, but didn't say anything so I said, 'Amanda, are you okay?' and she whispered, 'No,' and I said, 'Where are you?' and she whispered, 'Home,'" Miller said.

Horne said she remembers not being able to respond to her mother on the phone and felt as if she couldn't control her own body.

"I felt like someone was holding me down," Horne said.

Miller knew something was wrong so she rushed home from work.

When she got home, Miller found her daughter lying unresponsive on her bed. The left side of Horne's body was in a seizure and the right side was paralyzed.

"I reached to grab her hand and it was a death grip," Miller said. "I will never forget how hard she grabbed me."

"When someone takes away things for you like talking or walking, you realize how valuable they are."

Amanda Horne
SOPHOMORE IN COMMUNICATION SCIENCES AND DISORDERS

Miller dialed 911 and an ambulance rushed Horne to the nearest hospital, St. Luke's Hospital South.

Once she arrived, doctors determined Horne had a stroke. They gave her tissue plasminogen activator (tPA), a drug to destroy the blood clot causing the stroke, and then rushed her to the Mid-America Brain and Stroke Center at St. Luke's on the Plaza in Kansas City, Mo.

But before they transported her, a doctor asked Horne's family and friends if they wanted "to see her one last time."

"I didn't think of it at the time, but they were asking because she could have died," Miller said.

Miller didn't know it then, but Horne had only a 10 percent chance to live.

Despite the small chance of survival, Horne lived through the transport.

When she arrived, doctors administered another dose of tPA.

Doctors soon discovered the blood clot that caused Horne's stroke was in her basal artery, the main artery to the brain.

The stroke damaged Horne's brain and caused it to swell. Soon the cerebrospinal fluid – that cushions and surrounds the brain – started to build up because Horne's brain had swelled so much the fluid couldn't drain

Webmail back up after glitch

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Attempts to access K-State Webmail accounts were thwarted Labor Day due to an error with the Webmail service. The service was down for almost nine hours.

The company K-State uses for its security certificates made a change, and failed to inform K-State of the alterations, director of computer and network services Harvard Townsend said.

"We know what caused the problem, and we've made the fixes," he said. "It won't happen again."

Students and faculty alike were not allowed to access their accounts for most of Monday.

"It kept telling me that my password was incorrect, and I thought that my account was messed up, then I found out that other people were having the same problem," Bailey Basinger, senior in mass communications, said.

Townsend said the reason Webmail was down for most of the day was because it was a holiday and the full staff was unavailable. Though the holiday hindered the repair, students were not as inconvenienced.

"I tried to check it last night, because I was curious about some e-mails. It wasn't super important, but it was working this morning, so it was okay," Justin Cunningham, senior in chemical engineering, said.

Kansas City Star columnist Joe Posnanski will give the sixth annual Huck Boyd Lecture at 10:30 a.m. today in the K-State Student Union Forum Hall.

Posnanski, named the 2003 best sports columnist in the United States, will speak to students about his journalism career as well as what he calls community journalism.

"We need to focus more on community," Posnanski said.

He said journalists need to turn their attention "more inward" instead of only concerning themselves with national news.

Through his career, Posnanski has worked in three cities and has covered everything from the Olympics to Final Fours Gloria Freeland, director of the Huck Boyd Center, said.

Additionally, he has won the Missouri Press Association award for best sports columnist in Missouri eight times.

Sports aren't Posnanski's only focus. He also writes a weekly column for the Star Magazine of the Kansas City Star called "Cup of Joe."

Journalism professor Fred Brock encouraged his students to attend the lecture.

"I believe these lectures benefit students greatly," Brock said. "Not just because of specific advice, but also because of the opportunity to have personal contact with some top people in the business."

CAMPUS CHRONICLES

Headlines from the nation's universities

Condom salesperson wanted

LINCOLN, Neb. – University of Nebraska-Lincoln students, who are desperate for some fast cash, now have an alternative to posing nude for art classes or auctioning off vital organs on eBay – they can sell vibrating condoms.

Advertising in campus newspapers throughout the Midwest, the TouchMe USA condom company is searching for sales representatives who will "spread the good vibe."

"We're promoting safe sex that's fun and providing an opportunity for students to make some money at the same time," marketing director Rachel Davis said.

Davis said the project will provide hired students with valuable work experience, promote sexual health on campus and promote the company's newest product – vibrating condoms.

"We're trying to make condom-use exciting again," Davis said.

The vibrating condoms have all the features of a traditional condom, but they include a tiny motorized ring.

"We've had a really great response with it," Davis said. "Women love it. And men should love it because it keeps the women happy. And that's what's important."

Given the option of whether to sell condoms or donate plasma, freshman biology major Betsy King knows what she would choose.

"I would probably rather sell vibrating condoms," she said.

For more information about the vibration sensation, students can visit www.touchmeusa.com.

PODCAST LECTURES

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. – Kelly Clarkson's latest single now has to split time with economics lectures on some Indiana University-Purdue University at Indianapolis students' iPods.

Students can now access BoilerCast – an online service making its debut this semester that offers regularly updated audio recording of some lectures.

The program meshes audio recording equipment already available in most large lecture halls with the new technique of podcasting.

Students use the service by streaming the lectures through media player programs such as iTunes or by manually downloading individual files from the BoilerCast Web site, said Michael Gay, manager of broadcast networks and services for information technology.

"We wanted to make it available to as many people as possible, so we deployed it as kind of an all-in-one system to make it as ubiquitous as we could," Gay said.

Audio recordings are available online 10 to 15 minutes after a given lecture ends, he said. BoilerCast experienced approximately 1,000 downloads of 35 courses online in the first week of classes, he said.

Deadline to change eID password approaching

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Don't forget
eID passwords must be changed by Sept. 14. To change a password, go to www.ksu.edu/eid.

The second Wednesday of September is approaching.

Once every semester – the second Wednesday of September and the second Wednesday of February – students are required to change their eID passwords, Rebecca Gould, director of the Information Technology Assistance Center, said.

Password changes, along with anti-virus software and software updates, are part of iTAC's recommended security measures, Gould said. Other security tips are available at www.k-state.edu/InfoTech/security.

"One of the biggest things we need students to do is keep their passwords secure," Gould said. "Think about what a person has access to with that eID-password pair. Do you really want somebody else able to access your e-mail or your grades in KATS?"

Students use their eIDs and passwords to access Webmail, KATS, K-State Online and computer labs. Passwords must follow several regulations.

They must be six to eight characters long and include at least five different characters. They cannot be based on computing IDs or names. Passwords cannot be identifiable words, phrases or acronyms. They cannot be one of 4,000,000 words known and used by hacker programs to break into accounts, Gould said.

"A bad password is something that appears in a dictionary or in hacker dictionary lists – there are lists out there on the Internet of common passwords," Tim Ramsey, Information Technology security coordinator, said. "Good passwords are things like a phrase that's unique to you. Take the first letter of each word of the phrase and add some punctuation."

Ramsey also advised including numbers in a password.

An ineffective password will be guessed easily by hackers or hacker programs, he said.

"There are programs out there that will just sit there and try password after password from a list," Ramsey said. "They only need one to work."

Sometimes, though, changing passwords frustrates students.

"I think it's a bit of an inconvenience and they have it so it can't be a real word," Melanie Eisenhower, junior in mass communications, said. "There's only so many combinations."

Marsh advances to video game finals in NYC

By Laura Noll
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The 2005 NCAA Football Challenge staff cleared space in the Courtyard of the K-State Student Union Thursday to make room for 34 televisions and Xbox gaming consoles.

K-State was the third university the traveling video game tournament visited, Faruq Tauheed, Challenge emcee, said.

In the next three months, the tournament, sponsored by Electronic Arts Sports, NCAA, Xbox and Best Buy, will travel to an additional 13 universities.

Mike Brown, Challenge commissioner, said the K-State turnout was great.

One hundred twenty-eight students signed up, but after four-and-a-half hours playing EA Sports' NCAA Football '06, Dustin Marsh, junior in landscape architecture, won the grand prize.

Marsh played using the Texas Longhorns. His prize is a trip to New York to participate in the finals of the 2005 NCAA Football Challenge, Dec. 9-11.

If Marsh wins the finals in New York, he will be invited to attend the 2005 Heisman Trophy Award Dinner on Dec. 12 and will receive $10,000.

"It's unreal," Marsh said. "I'm in shock."

Many competitors accidentally stumbled into the game

"I just wanted the free T-shirt," Nathan Zumbaugh, junior in mechanical engineering, said.

Zumbaugh lost in the first round, saying he didn't know how to play.

"I just pushed buttons," Zumbaugh said.

Marsh, too, found himself pulled into the tournament. A friend called him and Marsh rushed to the Union to play.

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN
Timberlyn Pycior, freshman in animal science and industry, and Jeremy Roberts, junior in speech communication, participate in the EA Sports NCAA Football Challenge in the K-State Student Union Tuesday afternoon.

Having never played the game on an Xbox, Marsh expected to lose in the first round. He was wrong.

Additional information about the NCAA Football Challenge can be found at www.ncaafootballchallenge.com.

TO THE POINT

New condom not a solution to rape problem

More than 50,000 rapes are reported in South Africa each year, and some experts believe that number only represents a quarter of the total cases.

It should come as no surprise that a researcher in the embattled nation has developed the first anti-rape condom.

Sonette Ehlers' "jelly-like" apparatus is worn like a tampon, with sharp, metal barbs that hook onto the would-be rapist upon penetration. It can only be removed surgically, which would allow police to track down the perpetrator easily.

Imagine that police line-up.

As noble as the "rape trap" appears, though, it is a barbaric and misguided approach to a serious problem.

Critics correctly point out that rapists are more likely to abuse women who they find wearing the device, and claims that the "Rapex," as it will be marketed when production begins next year, staves off sexually transmitted diseases are false.

That's an important consideration in a country where one in nine of its 45 million people is infected with HIV or AIDS.

The South African government needs to intervene in this proposed "solution," and instead do something to combat the root of the problem: changing the culture of a nation that struggles with rights.

If not, the Rapex will only serve to catch rapists red-handed – or something like that – after the fact.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

To the extreme

Women should use education to protect themselves

Illustrations by Elvis Achelpohl COLLEGIAN

KELSEY CHILDRESS

Recently, Reuters reported that an inventor from South Africa announced the production of her newest creation – a device inserted like a tampon which will protect women from rape attacks. South Africa has some of the highest instances of rape and HIV/AIDS cases in the world, and Sonette Ehlers plans to decrease these crimes by marketing these condoms on supermarket shelves.

They work by attaching themselves to the rapist with barbs and can later only be removed by a doctor in an operating room. The product can also protect women from pregnancy, contracting HIV and other sexually transmitted diseases.

This interesting concept has become an emotionally driven debate. Activists trying to lower rape occurrences are criticizing this method, claiming women should first take steps to prevent rape before protecting themselves against it. That is, by purchasing these condoms, women are accepting rape as something they are to be worried about in their everyday lives. While Ehlers has a great idea, there are several things that could go wrong. Women who are angry at a boyfriend or former lover could use it for revenge, or, just like a tampon, forget it's inserted and hurt a loved one.

There are steps to be taken to lower the rape and HIV/AIDS rates in South Africa. Currently, investigators claim there may be about a million cases of rape and sexual assault in South Africa each year, yet 75 percent of them go unreported because most rapists are acquaintances or family members of the victim. In addition, in a continent where some men believe having sex with a virgin will cure them of HIV, there obviously needs to be more information about protecting yourself. It's hard to imagine living in a country where there is not enough information about sexually transmitted diseases and sexual protection isn't always readily available. There are many myths and urban legends about sex and steps should be taken to correct it.

Do these steps include a female condom which attaches barbs into a rapist's penis? Possibly, but if information about HIV/AIDS isn't spreading, do you think news of the anti-rape device will? It's hard to envision marketing something like this in the United States because the lawsuits would be innumerable. Even though the device has never been tested on a real male subject (as if she could find any volunteers for this sort of thing), Ehlers promises this will decrease the rates of sexual crimes.

The idea of the anti-rape female condom seems a bit feminist. However, is there any other way for women to protect themselves from their own family members? How did the world come to this, where violence is the norm of these women and young girls' lives? Should South African women use education or violence to protect themselves? This seems to be the underlying debate here. How long should we attempt to educate a large number of people before finally fighting violence with violence?

Wealth doesn't always mean happiness

KODY COOPER

"Vanity of vanities, all is in vanity, there is nothing new under the sun." –King Solomon, "The wisest man who ever lived."

Solomon was an incredibly wealthy king. He raked in more than 25 tons of gold per year. Adjusted to dollars, Solomon's yearly salary would be 350 million dollars. That's 2500 times what a rich Halliburton executive makes (Cheney must be slacking).

Solomon owned 12,000 of the most coveted thoroughbred horses in the ancient world. In Solomon's pre-fossil fuel day, owning a horse was the equivalent to owning a car (back then, rising temperatures were blamed on increased CO2 from excessive horse respiration). Today, Solomon would have to build a garage 40,000 football fields long to house all his SUVs, Vipers and 'Vettes.

If all that weren't enough, Solomon boasted 700 wives and 300 courtesans. And these women weren't swamp-mamas. Only the finest ladies were fit for the king. Even your phattest collar-popping, smooth talking, drunken Aggie-villain frat boy would be lucky to deceive even a dozen damsels into his dorm this year.

Solomon could have a different girl every night for nearly three years straight.

I'm confused. Shouldn't the saying go, "the happiest man who ever lived"? One would think so – there was no pleasure or possession that Solomon could not attain.

In today's society that glorifies sex and materialism, Solomon would be a cultural icon. I'm confident his first rap album would go double platinum. He could take the name 50 Shekel and drop singles like "Concubines, Cash & Hoes."

Yet, at the end of his life, Solomon lamented, "all is in vanity." He came to realize wealth and women don't equal happiness.

So, you go to K-State? Cool. Why? Education equals job. Hoping to start out at $40,000 a year? Solomon made $40,000 an hour. Planning to peruse Aggieville for willing members of the opposite (usually) sex? Solomon had a 1,000 playmates whose jobs were his pleasure.

Do you really think pleasure and possession are going to satisfy you? Wake up, wayward sheep! You will never amass even an iota of what Solomon had, and I guarantee you'll only come to the same conclusion he did. This is the rest of your life we're talking about. Are you going to spend it in vain?

Take a lesson from a dude who had more money than Gates, more honeys than Hefner and more cars than Leno. Solomon sought fulfillment in temporal pleasures, and effectively turned his back on the Fountain of Fulfillment: God.

Who? Did the columnist just invoke the G-word? How dare he preach at me? Besides, the rabid mad-dog secular lunatic leftists say there is no God, and who can argue with the "enlightened ones?"

Can't you see through this liberal lie? If there is no God, then worldly pleasure is the epitome of efficacy. But, like Solomon, our collective countenance cries out for something more.

No matter how much we try to fill our leaky bucket hearts with luxury and licentiousness we still wake up empty. Counterfeit contentment hasn't fulfilled humanity for 3,000 years. Do you really think you'll be any different?

Solomon is long gone now, just fine print entombed in a dusty old book. But, if you're real quiet, his whispered admonition reveals the key to true joy: "Fear God and keep His commandments, for this is the whole duty of man."

There we go. Reading "God" four times wasn't so bad, was it?

Redevelopment plans worry business owners

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Many downtown business owners are hesitant about the current redevelopment project.

One of the possible changes include adding a strip mall theme to the downtown area. The reconstruction, however, will create many challenges, especially parking problems.

The plan put forth by Dial Realty of Omaha, Neb., would allow for three distinct districts: an arts district south of Pierre Street, a district north of Leavenworth and a downtown district.

"Our concern has to do with things that everyone's talking about," said Erma Riley, co-owner of The Pathfinder, 304 Poyntz Ave.

She indicated one of the main concerns was the need to keep Third Street open, and more of a downtown-looking street, rather than a type of strip mall.

Parking is also a concern, as the current plan calls for parking to shift to the Dillards parking lot from Third Street, north of Leavenworth.

Barbara Nelson, co-owner of the Strecker-Nelson Gallery, 406 1/2 Poyntz Ave., attended meetings concerning the downtown renovations and she said that many merchants have concerns.

"Emotions are running high," she said.

"Not all of us are in favor of their proposals," Nelson said.

Some of the merchants are concerned with fourth Street, from Osage to Bluemont Avenue. Some of the concerns include traffic, housing and parking along Fourth Street.

Several businesses will move because of the renovations, a major area of contention and a cause of raised emotions at recent meetings.

The updated plan, created by the Downtown Redevelopment Steering Committee, would include two roundabout intersections: one at Fourth Street and Bluemont Avenue and the other at Third Street and Pierre Street.

Reyne Lehman, owner of Soul Provider, 427 Poyntz Ave., said the strip mall concept would be a better one if it were located on the east side of Tuttle Creek Boulevard, facing west. She said the idea of a strip mall having its back to the business district doesn't fit in with the downtown image.

One of Lehman's big concerns is with the large businesses coming into Manhattan. Many of the larger businesses who relocate here are not locally owned and feel no obligation to the city they are in, she said.

While they benefit the city, the money those businesses bring in often flows out of the city and county they reside in and goes to the corporate headquarters, she said.

The fact these companies don't bank here is also a concern.

"They're just here for the money. When the money isn't here, they leave," Riley said.

Removal policies aim to help, not hurt

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Universities across the country are proposing policies regarding students with suicidal thoughts.

The University of New Mexico is drafting a policy that would involuntarily withdraw students who seek help at its health center for students with extreme suicidal thoughts, homicidal thoughts or who perform self-mutilation.

Carol Wagner-Adams, manager of Counseling and Therapy Services at UNM, is one of the creators of the policy, which is still in its draft stages.

Wagner-Adams told the New Mexico Daily Lobo the withdrawal from the university is not permanent and students can return to the university once they have received help.

Anthony Jurich, professor of marriage and family therapy and author of a book on suicide, said UNM is increasing its liability by dismissing suicidal students.

"Anyone with suicidal thoughts needs professional help. The worst thing to do is to leave them alone," Jurich said.

According to K-State's Student Life Handbook, a student with mental illness behavior that cannot be managed through treatment with university or community resources will meet with the Vice-President for Institutional Advancement or designee for voluntary withdrawal of the student.

The university will refer the student to appropriate treatment and counseling resources.

If a student does not withdraw under these conditions, he or she will be referred for evaluation to a mutually agreed-upon off-campus licensed psychologist or psychiatrist.

Fred Newton, director of K-State counseling services, said the policy is not to punish students but to help them.

"Anyone that has some thought of suicide needs some action taken," he said.

Newton said suicide is a sensitive topic at universities across the country.

In 2000, a Massachusetts Institute of Technology student committed suicide by setting herself on fire in her dorm room. Elizabeth Shin had been treated previously for mental illness and suicide threats.

According to The Boston Globe, the university was liable in Shin's case because several university administrators had a "special relationship" with her and knew of her condition.

The Shins' pending $27 million lawsuit has made universities across the country wary of their involvement with students suffering from mental illness.

Policies such as the one UNM is proposing prevents such involvement.

Newton said campus administrators are liable if they do not provide necessary resources to students with mental illnesses.

"It creates a binding situation," Newton said.

K-State's decision to withdraw a student involuntarily must be supported by evidence that a student is suffering from a mental disorder as defined by the American Psychiatric Association and that the student is a substantial harm to him or her self, others or property.

Heather Reed, assistant director of student life, said K-State has not had a problem with students refusing to follow its treatment policy.

"When we are concerned, we intervene and make sure students get the help they need," she said.

Suicide Facts

- For every two homicides in the U.S., there are three suicides.
- Every hour and forty-five minutes, another young person commits suicide.
- Suicide is the second leading cause of death among college students.
- Teen/youth suicide rates have tripled since 1970.

Football team to prepare no differently

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State football team will travel to Huntington, W.Va. on Saturday to take on the Marshall Thundering Herd in both squads' second game of the year.

Marshall (1-0) is coming off a 36-24 win over William and Mary last Thursday, the first win for first-year head coach Mark Snyder (no relation to K-State coach Bill Snyder).

The Wildcats, after Saturday's 35-21 win over Florida International, have revenge on their minds, as Marshall defeated then-No. 6 K-State 27-20 in 2003.

PREPARATIONS UNCHANGED

Although the game Saturday will be the earliest regular-season start time in school history – the game will begin at 9:30 a.m. Central Standard Time and will be televised nationally on ESPN2 – Snyder said the Wildcats will prepare no differently.

"Obviously, the time schedule is different, but I as I've said all along, if you like to play the game, then let's go play the game," Snyder said on Tuesday. "To me, it's probably a mindset more than anything else. It's different for (the media), it's different for the fans, but I think, for the players, it's not uncommon."

K-State has played in 26 games that have started before noon, and have posted a 15-11 record in those contests.

ADJUSTING TO A NEW COACH

At the end of last season, Marshall coach Bob Pruett retired after nine years at the helm.

Pruett's successor, Mark Snyder, was not named coach until after Marshall's spring practice. Since coaches are not allowed to be at summer practices, the Thundering Herd could not work with the new staff and system until the start of fall practice.

Bill Snyder said the transition to the new staff might not be as tumultuous as expected.

"I think Mark has done it appropriately," Bill Snyder said. "He's retained the people to handle his offense and defense who were involved with it at Marshall.

"Consequently, it's left the players probably a little bit more at ease in regards to not having to learn a new system right after they finish spring practice."

DYLAN MEIER PROGRESSING

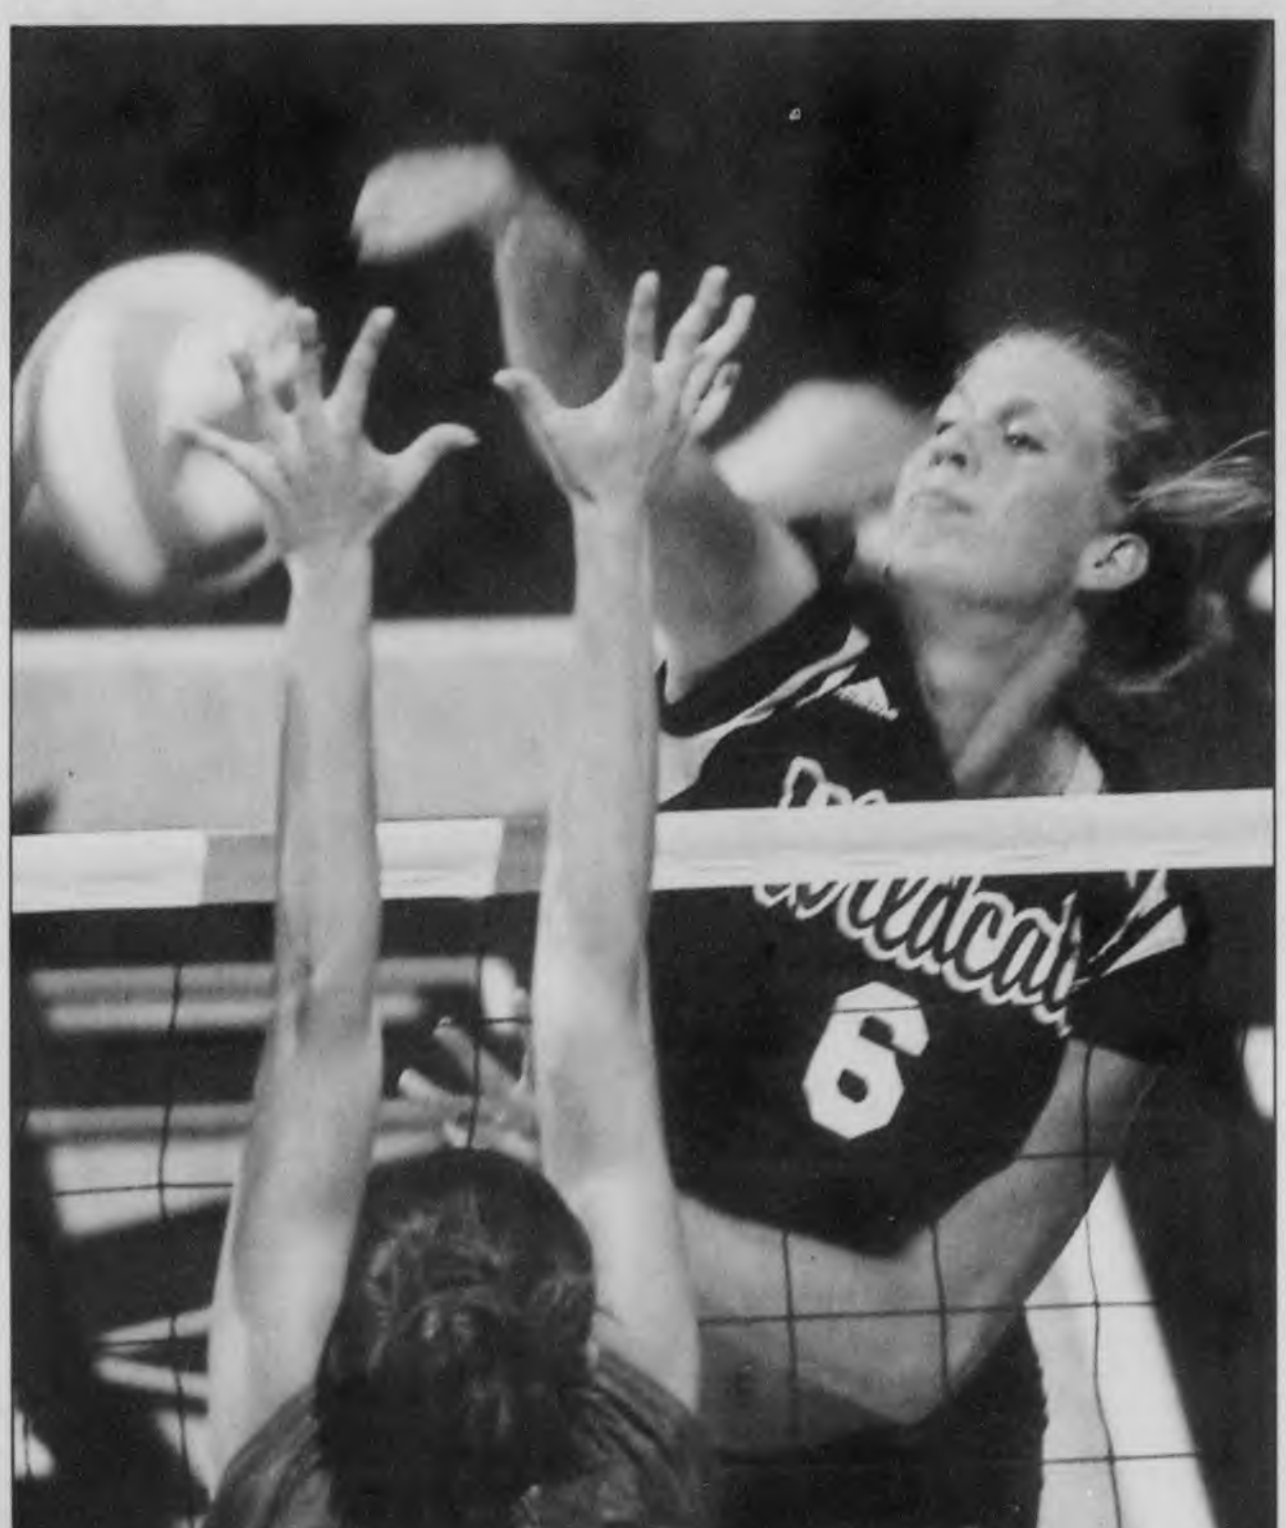
Snyder said Meier – who threw for 1,436 yards and nine touchdowns in 2004 – will travel with the team to Marshall and will play at some point this season.

"He feels like he's making headway; I feel like he's making headway," Snyder said. "It hasn't been as prominent as we had hoped, but here probably within the last two weeks, he feels like he is kind of surging forward.

"I certainly believe he will (play) and he believes he will, and the doctors believe he will."

DEFENSE TOP 10 NATIONALLY



By surrendering just 238 total yards to Florida International on Saturday, the Wildcat defense debuted in the top 10 nationally in total defense.

K-State checked in at No. 10, only giving up 3.93 yards per play to the Golden Panthers.

Defensive back Bryan Baldwin said the rankings don't matter right now, especially after just one game.

"I wasn't even aware of that until you just said it," Baldwin said. "Right now, we're just trying to go out and play. I'll worry about that stuff at the end of the season. It's all about what you do at the end, not the beginning."

Junior outside hitter Sandy Werner spikes the ball by a Creighton blocker during the first match Tuesday night. Werner led the Wildcats with 15 kills to help K-State to a 30-16, 30-27, 30-23 win at their home opener. The Wildcats will be back in action this weekend as they compete in the Varney's Kansas State Invitational.

Wildcats remain undefeated at 6-0

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State played its first home volleyball match of the season Tuesday night, and won in similar fashion as they did to start the season – a three-game sweep.

K-State beat Creighton inside Ahearn Field House in consecutive games and improved to 6-0, the best start since 1985.

Leading the way for the 24th-ranked Cats was junior outside hitter Sandy Werner, who registered 15 kills for a .433 hitting percentage in the three games.

"Sandy was terrific tonight," coach Suzie Fritz said. "She needed to get back in a good hitting rhythm, and she did that."

The Wildcats got off to a fast start in game one, as they led 12-1, which forced Creighton into an early timeout, and K-State coasted to a 30-16 victory.

In contrast, Creighton jumped out to an early lead in game two before K-State clawed its way back.

Down 17-9, the Wildcats went on an 11-4 run to tie the game at 21, and eventually won 30-27.

"We came out in game one all fired up, and then in game two, I think we kind of let down a little bit," Werner said. "Things started falling apart, and we were lazy on defense. Fortunately, we came back."

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

Sophomore libero Angie Lastra dives for a ball Tuesday during the Wildcat's first home volleyball match. Lastra completed 15 digs and had three aces.

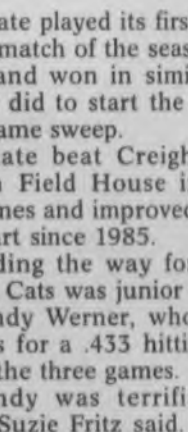
The Wildcats then finished off the Bluejays 30-23 in game three to complete the sweep.

The win aside, Fritz said she was not necessarily pleased with the way her team played, especially in game two.

"Frustrating is what that is," Fritz said. "It's our inability to string success and be good over time. It's immaturity, it's inexperience and it's not being disciplined. We've got a lot of work to do."

Fritz said one positive was the crowd, who helped provide a spark for the Cats.

"That was a terrific crowd, especially for a Tuesday night," Fritz said.



"I don't even have the words for it. There is nothing like being in Ahearn."

Redshirt-freshman Megan Farr, Manhattan, played her first game in front of her hometown fans.

"It's so much different playing here," Farr said.

"A lot of my family and friends were here, and there are a ton more people. Our crowd is amazing."

Lessons to be learned from Professor Sproles last season

ANTHONY MENDOZA

Adrian Peterson, welcome to Darren Sproles' nightmare that was last season.

Gone are your specialty players such as wide receiver Mark Clayton and Heisman Trophy-winning quarterback Jason White. Say hello to stacked defensive lines with only one motive – stopping you.

If anyone saw the highlights of Oklahoma's game against TCU on Saturday, you might have noticed something very familiar during the Sooners' shocking season-opening 17-10 loss to the Horned Frogs.

Peterson, the runner-up in last year's Heisman balloting as a freshman, was the only offensive threat on the field for the Sooners. The offensive line was pushed backward all game, and the lack of a solid quarterback to stretch the field only led to the running back moving backward and side-to-side before he could attempt to get the ball across the line of scrimmage.

Kind of like Sproles in K-State's second game last year, when Dylan Meier and Allen Webb were not effective at the quarterback spot, and the offensive line was getting beat up physically at the point of attack. The result was a 45-21 home loss to Fresno State.

Not that you lose a Heisman Trophy in one game, but Peterson and Oklahoma possibly played themselves out of the national championship picture.

While Peterson struggled, another running back under the radar of all other Big 12 players had arguably one of the best games Saturday.

K-State's Thomas Clayton propelled himself to No. 4 in the nation in rushing yardage, finishing with 177 yards on 17 carries for the Wildcats.

Most of you missed the biggest run of the game, though - as a majority of the student section had not yet returned from the halftime festivities to see Clayton bust an 80-yard touchdown run to start the third quarter.

Or his two-yard scoring run on the next offensive possession after Jermaine Moreira's 67-yard punt return.

Other than Webb, Clayton was the most anticipated player to watch. Replacing Sproles would not be easy, but he is the best player to be put in this tough position.

Clayton may have flashy nicknames like T-Gunn, Hollywood and The Train, but his style is old-school, up-the-gut running.

That's perfect for a team with an inexperienced offensive line that only needs to get a push off the line and let Clayton do the rest.

It is too early to anoint Clayton the next great running back at K-State, but his T-shirt at the first week's media press conference said it best, "K-State running backs 2005 - Tradition never graduates."

Tell that to Peterson and the defending Big 12 champs.

Anthony Mendoza is a senior in print journalism. You can e-mail him at sports@spub.ksu.edu.

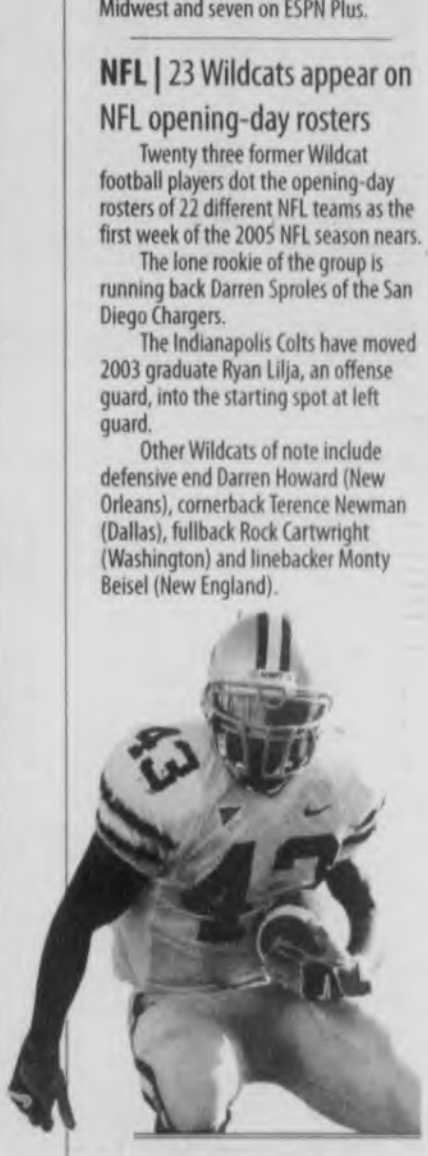
CBB | K-State to play Texas in front of national audience

The K-State men's basketball team's 8 p.m. home game against Texas Feb. 22 has been picked up by ESPN2 and will be nationally televised live from Bramlage Coliseum, the Big 12 Conference announced Tuesday.

The broadcast will mark the fifth straight season K-State has appeared on either ESPN or ESPN2, and the second time in three season the Wildcats' game against Texas has been broadcast by the ESPN family of networks. K-State's 58-48 upset over No. 10 Texas on March 6, 2004 was televised nationally by ESPN.

K-State will have 20 televised games during the 2005-06 season, which includes 12 on Fox Sports Midwest and seven on ESPN Plus.



NFL | 23 Wildcats appear on NFL opening-day rosters

Twenty three former Wildcat football players dot the opening-day rosters of 22 different NFL teams as the first week of the 2005 NFL season nears.

The lone rookie of the group is running back Darren Sproles of the San Diego Chargers.

The Indianapolis Colts have moved 2003 graduate Ryan Lilja, an offense guard, into the starting spot at left guard.

Other Wildcats of note include defensive end Darren Howard (New Orleans), cornerback Terence Newman (Dallas), fullback Rock Cartwright (Washington) and linebacker Monty Beisel (New England).

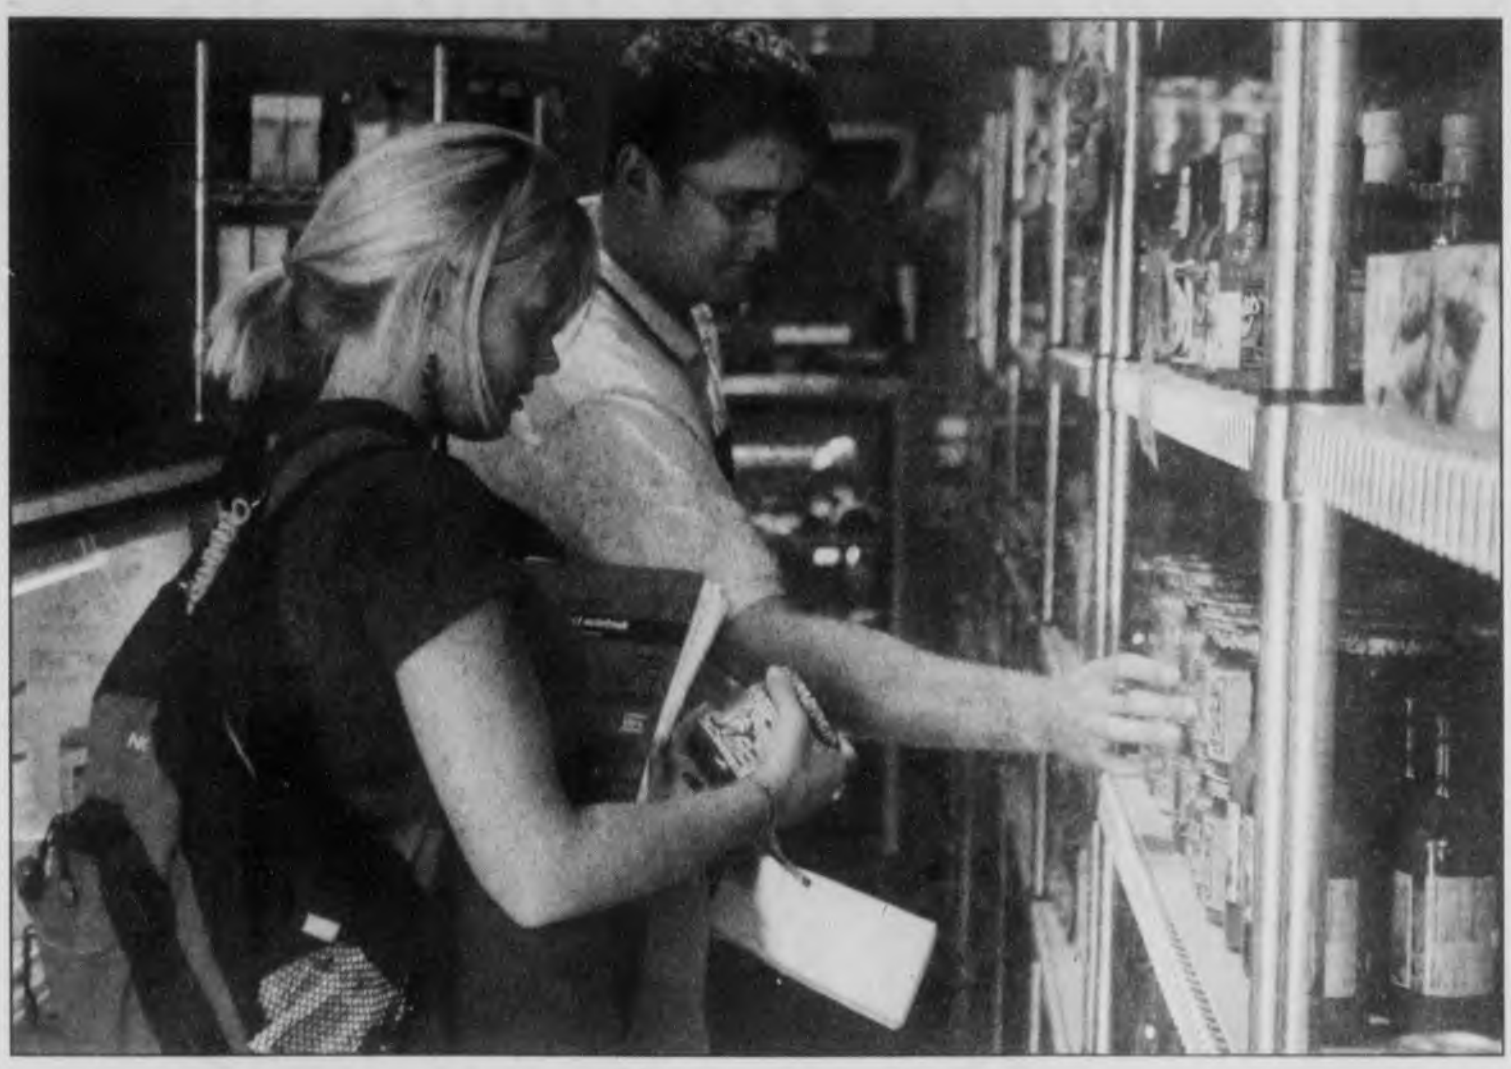
CYC | Armstrong considering comeback to cycling

AUSTIN, Texas — After winning his seventh Tour de France title, Lance Armstrong stepped off the winner's podium in Paris and into retirement, declaring, "I'm finished."

Six weeks later, he's already talking about a comeback.



Armstrong

Recently engaged to rocker girlfriend Sheryl Crow, Armstrong issued a statement Tuesday confirming that he's contemplating a return to competitive cycling in part because he knows how much it would rankle French media who believe his record of seven straight Tour wins is tainted by drug use.

"While I'm absolutely enjoying my time as a retired athlete with Sheryl and the kids, the recent smear campaign out of France has awoken my competitive side," Armstrong said. "I'm not willing to put a percentage on the chances, but I will no longer rule it out."

Independent grocery stores offer specialized alternatives, local flavors for residents

By Alex Peak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students and residents could be missing out on a delicacy by shopping solely at Wal-Mart and Dillons.

Mercado Gourmet Grocery, People's Grocery Cooperative Exchange and the International Emporium & Food Market are some alternative grocery stores in Manhattan offering foods that are often hard to find or are not sold elsewhere.

Evan Coughenour, part-owner of the International Emporium & Food Market, located at 1126 Laramie St., said the store specializes in Indian, Middle Eastern and Afro-Carribean foods.

He said some of the market's foods could be found at larger chain stores, but most of the products are specialized. He mentioned some of the more specialized items include spices and different flours.

Wayne Martin, general manager for People's Grocery Cooperative Exchange, 517 S. 17th St., said the store sells organic and natural foods.

"We carry rather obscure and rare products," Martin said. He also added the store has foods for specialty diets, a lot of items that probably can't be found at large chains store.

"There are 200-300 items on sale every month," Martin said, in reference to sales and promotions the store offers. "And our pricing structure is different from others to keep prices as low as possible."

He said they get a lot of people from the military, students, local residents and people from outlying towns.

Martin said the cooperative has been in business for about 30 years and tries to include as many products from local people as possible.

Martin said that the store is unique in that it is member-owned. Customers can buy equity making the store literally owned by its patrons.

Mercado Gourmet Grocery, 1222 Moro St., is owned and operated by Jeff Pfannenstiel and his wife, Jill.

"I'm the only employee," Jeff said, "so I really get to know the customers."

Mercado's specializes in European and Mediterranean imported foods. It also offers two deli cases; one with a selection of 20-30 different imported cheeses and the other a variety of meats such as salami and ham.

Jeff said he does a lot of special orders and tracking down of specialty foods for his customers.

"Our customers range from students to retired residents," he said. "We also get a lot of international students and those who have studied abroad." Jeff said he gets a lot of requests from students who want to find foods they had while they were out of the country.

Jeff also said the store has sale items every week or so. He said he tries to be responsive to what customers want.

Mercado's also offers a 10-percent discount to students and military personnel with valid ID.

Customers should shop at Mercado's in addition to regular chain stores, Jeff said.

Mercado's doesn't really compete with other stores in Manhattan, he added.

"We all complement each other," he said.

'Late Registration' excellent follow-up album from West

"Late Registration"
Album review by Mark Sibilla

Settle down, class, settle down.

The bell has already rung. Eminem? Yes, Mr. Mathers, I'll take that .45-caliber pistol; you can get it back after class.

This week you are presenting your finals. Remember, you must pass Hip-Hop-ology 101 in order to get your degree. The next album we have is from Kanye West, "Late Registration."

Ah, Mr. West, I see that this is the second album of a proposed four-album series, which started with last year's "The College Dropout." This album has recruited the help of famed producer, Jon Brion, noted for working with Fiona Apple and Rufus Wainwright.

West has chosen to get help on the first track, "Heard 'Em Say," from Adam Levine (Maroon 5). I would say that it was a bad choice to bring this faux-soul white boy to the studio, but he sounds wonderful singing over that well-chosen Natalie Cole piano sample.

The following track, "Touch the Sky," employs Just Blaze to produce an amazing track riding on the horns of Curtis Mayfield's "Move on Up." Great job bringing in protégé Lupe Fiasco to rap on the third verse. He expertly turns in a flow that references Lupin the Third and Thundercats' villain, Mumm-Ra.

Excellent choice, Mr. West, to have Jamie Foxx reprise his role as Ray Charles on the opening of the hilarious "Gold Digger." The subsequent Ray Charles sample is another great decision.

While your flow can be unremarkable at times, your clever quips are at their best on this track, especially when talking about a woman dating a football star:

"She was supposed to buy his shorty TYCO with your money/She went to the doctor, got lipo with your money/She walkin' around looking like Michael with your money/Should've got that insured, Geico with your money."

"Drive Slow" perfectly mixes a wailing saxophone loop and rappers Paul

Courtesy Art

Wall and GLC to make the perfect late night summer-driving anthem.

"Roses," the sentimental letter to your dying grandmother, is beautifully heartfelt. The Etta James sample and clever wordplay on "Addiction" make it one of the album's best. Heck, there are so many great moments in "Late Registration" that it is nearly impossible to present them all here; plus, any album that can have Jay-Z ("Diamonds From Sierra Leone [Remix]") on a track next to Nas ("We Major") is a commendable feat.

I would've liked to see you rap in "My Way Home," Mr. West, but Common's surrogate rap is so good, it makes up for your absence. Also, not utilizing The Game on "Crack Music" to his fullest will cost you some points. Brandy's singing on "Bring Me Down" is another curious choice. And the skits, while short, innocuous and mildly entertaining, are unnecessary.

However, there is much more excellent material that takes the focus away from the few hiccups. This is an album that perfectly captures your idiosyncratic personality, and there are enough production changes that advance your sound creatively and appropriately. This epic album that, despite its warts, is the best hip-hop album, major or independent, released this year. Listen up, Mr. Jackson (50 Cent); you could take a lesson from Mr. West.

ATLANTA IS EVACUATED
September 7, 1864

In preparation for his march to the sea, Union General William T. Sherman ordered residents of Atlanta, Ga., to evacuate the city.

For Sherman, the defeated residents of Atlanta could only hinder him in his preparations since they represented mouths to feed in addition to his own army. Furthermore, he did not want to bear responsibility for women and children in the midst of his army. Eviction of the residents was Sherman's most logical solution. He wrote, "I have deemed it to the interest of the United States that the citizens now residing in Atlanta should remove, those who prefer it to go South, and the rest North."

STUDIOS SHUT THEIR DOORS
September 7, 1926

Hollywood movie studios close for the day in honor of the funeral of Rudolph Valentino, who had died after ulcer surgery in August. Italian-born Valentino came to the United States as a young man and became a major Hollywood heartthrob, causing women around the country to swoon in the aisles at movies like The Sheik (1921), Blood and Sand (1922), and Monsieur Beaucaire (1924). Valentino's early death at age 32 created shock waves across the country. Crowds of devastated fans mobbed the funeral parlor where Valentino's body had been displayed in August.

PANAMA TO CONTROL CANAL:
September 7, 1977

In Washington, President Jimmy Carter and Panamanian dictator Omar Torrijos sign a treaty agreeing to transfer control of the Panama Canal from the United States to Panama at the end of the 20th century. The Panama Canal Treaty also authorized the immediate abolishment of the Canal Zone, a 10-mile-wide, 40-mile-long U.S.-controlled area that bisected the Republic of Panama. Many in Congress opposed giving up control of the Panama Canal —an enduring symbol of U.S. power and technological prowess — but America's colonial-type administration of the strategic waterway had long irritated Panamanians and other Latin Americans.

SALUTATIONS FROM A NEW COMPACT
September 7, 1993

The Chrysler Corporation introduced its new Neon at the Frankfurt Auto Show. The sporty compact indicated a new direction for Chrysler and quickly gained fame through its multi-million dollar "Hi" campaign. The slick ads emphasized friendliness — friendly handling, comfortable seats, reliable safety features — punctuated with a simple "Hi. I'm Neon."

TUPAC SHAKUR IS SHOT
September 7, 1996

Actor and hip-hop recording artist Tupac Shakur is shot several times in Las Vegas, Nev., after attending a boxing match. Shakur was riding in a black BMW with Death Row Records founder Marion "Suge" Knight when a white Cadillac sedan pulled alongside and fired into Shakur's car. Knight was only grazed in the head. Shakur died in a hospital several days later.

Library offenders face tough policies on late materials

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It used to be an overdue book would bring offenders a fine of a few dollars.

Now it can affect their ability to get loans, buy cars and maybe even get a job.

Libraries across the country have taken steps to help get missing materials back on the shelves by turning their overdue accounts over to collection agencies. If a library can't get a patron to return a book or pay a fine, they report it to a company specializing in material recovery. From there, the company can report the debts to a credit bureau.

Manhattan Public Library has been using one such agency, Unique Management Services, since 1999.

"We feel an obligation, because this is public property, to do the best we can to recover that property," Fred Atchison, Director of Manhattan Public Library, said.

Unique Management Services is a corporation that helps more than 600 libraries try to recover missing materials and overdue fines. They mainly try to communicate with the offenders using letters and phone calls, yet putting debts on to credit reports is another step taken.

"We are like a collection agency in that we communicate with people who have outstanding obligations," Kenes Bowling, customer development manager for Unique, said.

A person's credit report would only say they owe the library money, but it can still be a hassle, Bowling said.

"Typically, an open account on a credit report, regardless of what it is, the lender will not offer a loan till they pay their debts," he said.

Only after the person has paid the debt will it be removed, and a record of it is still on the credit report for the next seven years, although most lenders would overlook it, Bowling said.

Even though Unique will report the amount of money owed to a credit bureau, it is only after substantial warnings, Atchison said.

"By the time it would get to a credit report situation, the party involved would have ignored three notices from the library and a minimum of three contacts from Unique, and often more," he said.

Atchison said the library has received calls from people who had found out their credit report had a library debt, and they paid what they owed.

"We have not had a single instance where people have said 'my life has been ruined because I didn't return my library books,'" he said.

The library reports both fines and missing materials to the agency, but they ask that reports to credit bureaus only be made in the case of missing materials worth more then $25.

"It leaves a hole in our collection, and there are times when the books that are not returned are not in print anymore, and it is a particular loss because you can't replace them," Atchison said.

K-State's library system uses a different approach to recovering debts. The actual library attempts to recover the funds, then reports the amount owed to the cashier's office. Then it is added to the student's main account with the university.

"After an account is past due, for example, something has not had any payments in six months, then we will refer that to a collection agency, who in turn reports that to the credit bureaus," Jim Badders, an accountant with the Controller's Office, said.

Altering a person's credit score may seem harsh, but the priority of both libraries is simply to recover lost materials with as little hassle as possible.

"We want to know that people are prepared to take responsibility for the materials," Atchison said.

HORNE
Student works to overcome stroke disabilities through her brain stem.

"They did a CAT scan on her brain and it didn't have the usual wrinkles and folds of a brain," Miller said. "It looked like a big water balloon."

Doctors drilled a hole in Horne's skull to drain the fluid.

After the surgery, Horne was put into the Neurosurgical Intensive Care Unit for recovery, and her parents weren't allowed to visit her.

"We couldn't go into the room and touch her because it would stimulate her brain," Miller said. "That was the hardest part for me, because I couldn't console her. I couldn't tell her she was okay."

Since she was admitted to the hospital, Horne was on a respirator and was in a drug-induced coma. After her brain fluids were drained, doctors decided to take her out of the coma.

But Horne had a difficult time breathing with the respirator when she was conscious.

"She would get this terrified look on her face, like she thought she was choking," Miller said. "She was really okay, but she didn't know it because she had just come out of the coma."

Horne still needed help breathing but couldn't use the respirator while she was conscious without gagging. So doctors gave her a tracheotomy, which let her breathe through a hole in her throat.

After Horne was taken off the respirator, doctors found she couldn't cough or swallow and saliva was draining into her lungs. Doctors had to drain the fluid from her lungs because she developed pneumonia.

While in the hospital, Horne couldn't speak because of her respirator and trache. She communicated with her family using sign language, which she learned from growing up with her best friend who was deaf.

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

Amanda Horne, sophomore in communication sciences and disorders, uses an exercise ball during her physical therapy session Friday afternoon at HealthSouth Rehabilitation Center, while Luke Henry, her physical therapist, observes.

Horne was in the hospital for six and a half weeks before she was released on July 29.

Before she left, doctors discovered Horne had a hole in her heart.

The hole allowed the blood clot that caused her stroke to travel to her basal artery instead of her lungs.

Horne said the only risk factor for stroke she had was her birth control medication.

"I always thought people at risk were women over 35 or women who smoked," she said. "I didn't fit into those categories. I was healthy. It's only like a one percent chance, but it can happen to other people, too."

The stroke damaged part of Horne's brain so she had to relearn how to talk, walk and write.

"I could remember what words were and think about how to do things. It was just a matter of being able to do it physically," Horne said.

Now, every time Horne walks, she has to think about swinging her arms and pointing her feet forward. Now she walks pigeon-toed, pointing her feet inward.

Twice a week, Horne goes to physical therapy to work on strength, coordination and balance.

Horne said she is supposed to be better physically in three to six months. Her brain recovery time is about one year.

She doesn't need help to walk but does lose energy quickly and can't walk from class to class yet, but she is working on it.

"My boyfriend and I walked from Haymaker to Aggieville and back," Horne said. "I made it, but we had to take a rest in the middle."

Horne said her stroke gave her a greater appreciation for everyday things.

"When someone takes away things from you like talking or walking, you realize how valuable they are," Horne said.

In fact, she was inspired to go into speech therapy so she could help people who have been through similar situations.

But Horne said she doesn't want sympathy.

"I don't want people to feel bad for me," she said. "I want them to say 'Gosh, you have really come far.'" was a lot of shooting, but his editor stopped him.

His father, Bob Stamey of Manhattan, is in the area as a volunteer government liaison with the Red Cross and is based out of Baton Rouge, La. He was able to stop in Thursday, Aug. 1 for a short visit.

"I was sitting in my office, at my desk here, looking through some photos and I got a phone call from the front office of the newspaper and they're like 'Matt, your dad's here' and I'm like, 'wait a minute, who?'" he said. "So I go up to the front office and there he is in his Red Cross uniform and everything."

They only had about 10-15 minutes together, Stamey said, before his father had to leave. His first stop was the civic center across the street from the Courier, one of the shelters where many of the refugees are staying.

Stamey said the center is similar in size to Ahearn Fieldhouse but with more floor space.

Stamey said he will be covering this story for some time and has been learning a lot on interviewing traumatized people.

"I'd much rather go through a tornado than a hurricane," he said. "I tell people I'm from Kansas and they're like, 'Ah man, Kansas? That's tornadoes, I'm scared of tornadoes' and I'm like, 'I'm scared of hurricanes.'"

Former history professor, author dies

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While Homer E. Socolofsky was an instructor at K-State, he wrote six books on history, co-wrote two books, and made an impression on Department of History chair Sue Zschoche.

"After he retired he stayed in touch with us," Zschoche said. "He came up once a month, and he was always at the history department gatherings. I think it's hard to explain how nice it is to have a retired faculty member who cared so much."

Socolofsky died Tuesday evening at Mercy Regional Health Center in Manhattan. He was 83.

He joined the K-State faculty in 1947 and was named a professor in 1963 after receiving his doctorate in history at the University of Missouri in 1953. He retired in 1992.

RETIRED K-STATE HISTORY PROFESSOR

He is also a K-State alumnus, as he received his bachelor's degree in 1944. He also received his master's from K-State in 1947.

In a Wednesday press release, president Jon Wefald said Socolofsky was "one of the most beloved professors in the entire department for years and years.

"Everyone at Kansas State University will remember fondly Dr. Homer Socolofsky. He was a terrific scholar and an excellent teacher during his years at Kansas State University," Wefald said in the release.

Along with being an asset to the history department, Socolofsky was also actively involved in the history of his church.

Jim Reed, senior pastor of the First United Methodist Church, said Socolofsky was influential in the church, writing

USD 383 prepares for fort increases

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Fort Riley expansion was among the topics discussed at last night's USD 383 Board of Education meeting. John Armbrust of Fort Riley delivered an update of how the fort's expansion will influence Manhattan and the surrounding area.

Within the next three to five years, local citizens can expect a population increase of between 30,000 and 35,000 people.

"To put it in perspective, that's like one and a half Junction Cities being dropped in this region," Armbrust said.

The region can also expect an addition of about 9,700 soldiers, most of who will arrive within the next two years. The largest bulk of these soldiers are expected in the area by the end of 2006, and 80 to 90 percent will have arrived by the end of 2007, Armbrust said.

This also means an additional 16,000 to 18,000 cars on the roads, and the need for some 9,000 new

FORMER JARDINE APARTMENT BUILDING C RESIDENT

A bulldozer plows through a corner of Building C at Jardine Apartments Wednesday afternoon. The destruction of the buildings started Wednesday and this portion of the demolition is expected to be finished by Friday.

A fond farewell

Jardine demolition brings back memories for former residents

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Curious locals, inquisitive students and reminiscent faculty members paused at the corner of Denison Avenue and Jardine Drive Wednesday afternoon to watch Jardine Apartment building C slowly fall to the ground.

In a matter of hours, all that remained of the building was piles of rubble, clouds of dust and almost 50 years of memories.

Heaps of old bricks, decaying insulation and crumbling cement are all that physically remained of the structure. As the bulldozer made short work of the apartments, worn air-conditioning units, 50s-style cabinets and still-leaking toilets were exposed, only to crumble away.

Mixed emotions could be seen on the faces of bystanders, some excited, others not. Altaf Karim, graduate student in physics, was saddened when he saw the building coming down.

"It brings back a lot of memories," Karim said as he watched his old apartment, C-27, be demolished. "My mom used to sit over here, in front of my apartment in the sunshine. She liked the March and April season, during the spring. She liked it because the street got a lot of traffic, and she could watch the people."

After housing K-State residents for 50 years, every apartment has a bit of history.

"One professor who used to live here would come visit me at times," Karim said. "I was really proud that these people had lived here, because now they are at Harvard and are faculty here."

Seeing a home he once felt so dearly about being destroyed made Karim more aware of what families go through during natural disasters, he said. But along with the sadness at seeing it go, Karim still has his memories.

"Life carries on," he said. "This is all just a part of life."

The demolition started at 12:30 p.m. Wednesday, when Marc Lattin, the operator of the lone bulldozer, began the final phase of the 50-year-old building's life.

DUI deaths on decline in Kansas

By Megan Green
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Alcohol-related deaths in Kansas have dropped 29 percent in the last year and Kansas posted the largest decline in the United States, according to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

The NHTSA said alcohol-related fatalities dropped in 32 states this year declining an overall 2 percent from the year before.

"I think that people are realizing that drunk driving is bad for themselves as well as someone else," said Adam Hatesohl, freshman in engineering.

There were 118 deaths reported last year, making it the lowest number of recorded drunk driving deaths in 20 years for Kansas.

John Eichkorn, spokesman for the Kansas Highway Patrol, said the department focuses on education and programs to lower drunk driving.

"We're trying to get the word out as to what the dangers are and what the consequences can be," Eichkorn said.

There are 11,500 law enforcement officials – a record number – participating in campaigns such as "You Drink & Drive. You Lose."

"I used to hear of people being pulled over drunk and getting a warning," Camille Nutsch, senior in apparel marketing said. "Now I never hear of that."

K-State students are also fighting drunk driving.

"If I go out, usually one of my friends stays sober," Cassie Hudson, sophomore in dietetics, said. "Or I find out which one of my friends is going to be home for the night."

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Taff pleads not guilty

Former Republican candidate for Kansas' 3rd District seat in Congress, Adam Taff, 40, pleaded not guilty Wednesday to aiding and abetting wire fraud and converting campaign money for personal use. He is accused of withdrawing $300,000 to cover a down payment on a $1.2 million home owned by his boss, John D. Myers.

Teacher pleads guilty

Wayne Kruse, the former head of the Lawrence teachers' union, pleaded guilty Tuesday to stealing nearly $100,000 from the Lawrence Education Association. He is charged with theft and forgery, which are both felonies. Sentencing was set for Oct. 3.

Rehnquist buried

Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist was buried Wednesday at Arlington National Cemetery as President Bush led the nation in bidding farewell to the man who orchestrated a dramatic states' rights power shift during his one-third of a century on the Supreme Court and settled the acrimonious 2000 election in Bush's favor.

Czech Republic Week declaration recognizes delegates

By Matt Peterworth
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Mayor Ed Klimek proclaimed Sept. 2-7 as Czech Republic Week at Tuesday night's City Commission meeting in recognition of a visiting delegation from the Czech Republic. The group, from Dobrichovice, Czech Republic, included 11 citizens and their mayor, Michael Pánek.

The purpose of the visit is to develop a cultural and civic exchange between the two cities.

Throughout the past five days, these visitors saw Fort Riley, the Konza Prairie Research Natural Area, a Kansas farm, downtown Manhattan, Aggieville, the K-State campus and a football game. They even flew a Czech flag above their tailgate party in the east parking lot.

Mayor Pánek was first contacted about a cultural exchange by Joe Barton-Dobenin, who was, at the time, a professor in the College of Business Administration, Pánek said. Barton-Dobenin helped set up a scholarship exchange program for 25 to 30 K-State and Czech Republic students.

Manhattan mayor Ed Klimek and his family visited Dobrichovice last year and stayed with Mayor Pánek.

A "sister city" committee was established in Manhattan to continue developing an exchange program between the two cities.

The 12 people that came this week stayed with three Manhattan families.

Jeff Chapman, chairman of the committee, said this current visit gave the Czech families an opportunity "to be a part of American life with a family, not in a hotel."

Chapman also said the "sister city" program was in its early stages.

As the program develops, elementary school children will get involved in writing to pen pals and there would be a teacher exchange program as well, Chapman said.

Funding to bring the visitors to Manhattan came from area businesses and committee members, with a little underwritten by the city.

Mayor Pánek said he was excited about having a group of Manhattan residents come visit the Czech Republic next year.

K-State to dedicate new center

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's College of Human Ecology will dedicate the new Speech and Hearing Facility on Friday.

Robert Garcia, program director for Communication Sciences and Disorders, said the center's previous location in Leasure Hall could not accommodate the growing field of speech pathology.

"In order to meet the needs for our students, we needed a facility that was up-to-date," he said.

Garcia said the center's technology and therapy areas will provide training for graduate students studying speech pathology.

"The facility enhances our ability to provide clinical service to those individuals in the community who suffer from a communication or swallowing disorder," he said.

Carol Kellett, dean of the College of Human Ecology, said the center also features an independent cable television network and televisions in the seven clinical treatment rooms.

"If a professor was giving a lecture and wanted to show an example, the cable network shows clinical treatments being done live," she said.

Kellett said the facility and equipment cost between $1.9 and $2 million.

Bill Meredith, director of the School of Family Studies and Human Services, said the new facility is vital to students in speech communication and disorders.

"The building allows the program the type of facility they deserve in order to educate students using the most advanced technology," he said.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Parking garage necessary for university

With parking encroaching into surrounding areas and more students arriving at K-State yearly, it is high time Student Senate addresses the parking situation.

It is unfair to residents living near the university that they must contend with students for parking in front of their homes; it is also unfair to students who pay a fee for parking privileges that they must spend time circling parking lots and waiting in lines to find a spot.

We say the university is about due for a parking garage.

However, the parking garage must be geared to serve the needs of members of the university, meaning faculty and students. It should not become a multi-tiered group of parking meters and specialty spaces which are unavailable to the people who need them the most, and the current plans seem to be geared toward just that.

In addition, rather than committing the university to several expensive, bothersome and labor-intensive projects at the same time, we should approach the task in a piece-meal manner.

The time to take action about the parking situation is now, but committing ourselves in a slipshod manner just may create more problems than we currently face.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Flawed evolution

Design on a dime theory more likely than Intelligent Design

GRANT REICHERT

Teach the controversy. Show kids how to have protected sex with Darwin. I mean, we teach algebra, which is basically glorified voodoo, so why not teach whatever I was alluding to in the previous sentence?

Throw in a world that produced two Deuce Bigalows – a cosmic occurrence so horrific, it prompted a distraught and self-mutilated Roger Ebert to demand of the pope, "Where is your God, now?," and the evidence for a mindless evolutionary process seems overwhelming.

Not that evolution doesn't have its flaws, it doesn't, but that's never stopped demagoguery before. Personally, I can think of 40 or so flaws right off the top of my head. Delete the ones that are simply death threats mixed in a string of obscenities, or jingles stolen from deodorant commercials, and here's what I got: If Darwin created the theory of evolution, then who created Darwin? That's right; check and mate – where's your fossil record now?

And, really, am I supposed to believe that after five bajillion years of evolution we're stuck with these soft, fleshy feces-factories for bodies? We should be twenty-feet-tall by now, with nice golfer's tans and lase for arms. I mean, is one spiked appendage too much to ask for?

Illustrations by Kent Holle | COLLEGIAN

It just doesn't make sense. Out of the elimination mechanism that is survival of the fittest, we got French poodles, your three-legged cat and Carrot Top, while three-hundred-ton lizards no longer walk the earth (rest in peace, Marlon Brando).

Evolutionists don't even try to answer these questions. They just hide behind their peer-reviewed journals, their starch-white lab coats and their look-at-me-I-can-corroborate-my-theories-with-empirical-observations attitudes. Yeah, well I can fit three baby carrots in my nose, but you don't see me bragging. Which, yeah, I'm no hero, I just like to force objects up my nose.

So, what of the alternative, called "Intelligent Design"? Considering the not-so-perfect world we live in, I prefer Intelligent Design's more likely sister theory, "Design on a Dime" (henceforth known as DoaD). Plague, pestilence, Kanye West. And I got them all for less than $30.

Of course, believing in a Design on a Dime theory means believing in a God. While some might say I lack faith, I just find it hard to believe in the existence of atheists. Everyone has some conception of a God. And my conception could beat your conception up. He wieldeth dual Needlers and campeth righteously.

But still some say this violates the separation of church and state. As we all know, the Constitution put a restraining order on State, because of the time he found Church's address on Facebook and showed up outside his apartment.

DoaD opponents say that since that theory ignores current scientific research – and is obviously just an opportunistic attempt to instill a certain ideology into education – it shouldn't be taught. The Women's Studies program could not be reached for comment. But why should we adhere to a constitution written by dead white men, anyway? Why should we segregate DoaD and evolution, make them drink from separate water fountains and use different restrooms?

That's not my America. In my America, all theories are treated equally. That, and a bum will give you a back massage for a nickel. A dime will set him on vibrate.

Bush responsible for poor response

ZACHARY T. ECKELS

I consider myself to be pretty wealthy. I'm able to attend K-State and still have enough money to take a road trip and stop at a Super 8 Motel when I get to my destination.

With nearly 30 percent of the population of New Orleans living below the poverty level, there were many not nearly as fortunate as I would have been.

These are the people who didn't have a vehicle to drive them away from danger when a state of emergency was declared by New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin. These are the people who couldn't afford a place to stay in another city when they were warned to evacuate two days before Katrina hit.

Obviously, no matter how many warnings they had, these people had no other choice and had to rely on a government that they were already skeptical of trusting. And our government let them down.

We can't forget that the government also had two days notice that a huge hurricane was threatening New Orleans. A city where 21 percent of the people are not only under the poverty level, but earn less than $10,000 a year.

With this kind of warning, shouldn't it have been simple for the good old United States to be ready to come to their rescue? Evacuating a city should be no problem for the National Guard.

Wait, that's right, the top National Guard brigades from both Louisiana and Mississippi are in Iraq right now. I guess President Bush wasn't thinking of this possibility when he started a second war and stretched our troops so thinly.

Luckily for our commander in chief, this possibility had already been thought of. He was lucky enough to have the Federal Emergency Management Agency to take care of these things.

Well, as predicted, since this agency was absorbed by the Department of Homeland Security back in 2002 - it's no longer able to respond as quickly as needed.

The reason for this is very simple, and like most things, can be traced back to money. Now, in a time when people are more scared of Osama bin Laden then being robbed on the street corner, FEMA has to compete against all the anti-terrorism efforts for their funding.

But why did this move which destroyed FEMA have to be made? A huge national debt accompanied by tax cuts explains it quite nicely.

Doesn't it just make you all warm and fuzzy inside to realize what actually happens when we have tax cuts? Yes, tax cuts disabled FEMA enough to make them useless even with two days prior warning. I'm troubled to say that is not all those glorious cuts did.

Earlier this year, the New Orleans district of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers was notified that they would be having a $71.2 million reduction in their federal funding for fiscal year 2006.

Although they still had full funding before the hurricane, the cuts were already made.

The most notable budget cut was to put off a study investigating ways to protect their city from a Category 5 hurricane. I'm sure all the victims in New Orleans will be happy to know this study is now scheduled to restart in 2006.

Even without this study though, anyone could have guessed that when a city below sea-level has levees only strong enough for a Category 3 storm, there are going to be problems.

And if the strongest nation in the world responds worse after tax cuts then Sri Lanka did, I will happily give back my $200 refund check.

I just saw a baby bird choke on a worm and they both died. Isn't that great?

Yeah, liberals are incredibly dumb. It makes me ponder why we have people from Lawerence coming here. Please, go back to left-winged KU.

Uh yeah, thanks mom and dad for getting off of your butt and making something of yourself but still made me earn my own money. I can now laugh at those who still use their daddy's money.

Leaving the library the other day, I saw a guy writing about a non-violence rally on the sidewalk, and I just wanted to kick him. Is that wrong?

Does anybody believe the liberal crap that President Bush is not doing anything in New Orleans just because he doesn't like blacks? Honestly the liberal media has become one big circle jerk with nothing but attempts to bash our president.

Foreign aid for Katrina would be pouring in, except Bush already pissed off every foreign government.

Uh, I only need condoms when we are having actual sex.

That's great that your parents made something of themselves. Now why don't you, and stop wasting all of their hard-earned money — like those of you who are too damn lazy to walk to class, so instead let's drive so we waste money and pollute the environment as much as possible. I know that's what daddy had in mind when he was making something of himself.

Hey, not all of us use our daddy's money to pay for college and gas, so if I want to complain about gas prices, leave me the hell alone.

Sublime assets

Matthew Croft, sophomore in secondary education, owns four gnomes and uses them to decorate his home. He bought three of the gnomes online to go with the one he already had.

Gnome-body does it better

By Zachary T. Eckels
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Think you have a Sublime Asset?
Whether it's a vehicle, house, pet or anything else, tell us about it at collegian@spub.ksu.edu with the subject: Sublime Assets.

When it comes to conversation pieces, Matthew Croft, sophomore in secondary education, has some strange art sitting around his house.

Instead of the usual book or painting drawing the attention of guests, Croft has gnomes.

"My sister had gotten me a gnome as a gag gift around four years ago," he said. "My roommate and I thought it was cool."

Although he said some of his friends think it's strange, his collection has now grown to four, one-foot-tall gnomes priced at around $25 to $30 apiece.

"I've spent about $70, which is sad," Croft said.

He said he has found some gnomes at www.onlinediscountmart.com – the site he searches most often – that are as tall as three feet with a price tag of $350 to $400.

Although he thought it would look good in his yard, Croft said he was afraid it could have too much potential to be vandalized.

He said he now looks for cheap gnomes all the time so he can get three more gnomes. That way every room in their house will have one waiting for guests.

"I plan on putting one in the bathroom next, so it's always there watching," Croft said.

Although this gnome may be considered a pervert, he said despite usual stereotypes, none of his gnomes are on psychedelic drugs.

"I don't necessarily think gnomes smoke weed," he said. "Ours look pretty normal anyway. They don't look like they're high."

Croft's roommate, Matt Turley, junior in architectural engineering said he enjoys having the gnomes around.

"I think the gnomes are fun to have around," he said. "They're a good conversation piece when people come in."

One reason Croft's sister might have given him the original gnome is because he actually looks like one himself, Turley said.

"It was just so he as have one of his own kind around," he said.

To get more people talking about the gnomes, notes have been written inside of little bubbles to show what they are thinking.

"I used to put obscene quotes under them to offend people because there would be certain people I wouldn't want to come back to the house. Unfortunately they still come back," Turley said.

Although Croft has only named two so far, David and Erdoo, and has no crazy stories about weird occurrences with his gnomes, Croft said he hopes to learn more about them in the future.

"Every time I look at them they make me smile," he said.

Smoky barbecued beef comes from day in the crock pot

By Kelly Schmitt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sometimes it's nice to cook something that tastes like it took all day to make. Barbecued beef sandwiches made in a crock pot have this great taste.

While the meat takes a while to cook, the preparation time is almost nothing.

This recipe has a smoky flavor without being overpowering. Since the meat is cooked in a crock pot, a person can theoretically begin cooking and forget about it until it's done.

If a large roast is used, leftovers can be stored in freezer bags for individual servings. Heat the leftovers on the stove top, stirring frequently. Microwave heating is not recommended.

Slow cooker recipe

Barbecued Beef Sandwiches:

Barbecued Beef Sandwiches
1 Brisket or large roast
1/4 cup liquid smoke
1 packet (dry) instant onion soup mix
To taste: garlic powder, pepper, onion salt

To a crock pot, add one cup of water. More or less can be used, depending on the size of the crock pot and roast used. The purpose of the water is to keep the bottom of the roast from sticking to the crock pot and to keep the roast moist.

Rinse roast or brisket and place in crock pot. On top of the roast, pour liquid smoke and dry instant onion soup mix. Sprinkle to taste with garlic powder, onion salt, and pepper. Cover with lid.

Set crock pot on low. Cook 8-10 hours, checking every 2-3 hours. The meat will be very tender when done and should pull apart easily with a fork.

Remove the roast from the pot. Save half of the juice in the pot. Shred the meat.

Place meat back in the pot with the remaining juice. Add 1/2 a bottle of hickory-flavored barbecue sauce. Stir well. Serve warm on hamburger buns. Leftovers can be refrigerated or frozen.

HOROSCOPES

Aquarius: Jan. 21 - Feb. 18
A woman you work with or who is well-known in the community could become the driving force behind your next major accomplishment. While magnetic Venus settles into your Scorpio career house for the next few weeks, she'll pull strings, foment interest and, if necessary, make goo-goo eyes so that opportunities can fall in your lap.

Pisces: Feb. 19 - Mar. 19
Your influence grows as the waxing moon gathers strength to face the Virgo sun head-on during the Pisces full moon. However, not until the 17th will your seemingly limitless emotional reserves be tested. In the meantime, as eagle-eyed Mercury in your Virgo house of partners picks at every flaw in a close relationship, don't be surprised if it's you who has a sudden change of heart that weekend.

Aries: Mar. 20 - Apr. 19
It's taken long enough, but this week you may actually receive the reward you so richly deserve: an honest day's pay for an honest day's work. The best of intentions and a consistent effort to deliver the goods are qualities the service-oriented Virgo sun acknowledges when it finally favors your Mars ruler.

Taurus: Apr. 20 - May 20
You could be entering one of the more productive periods you've had in the last two years. While energetic Mars in your sign is whipping up interest in you personally and providing more activities for you to get into, your alluring Venus ruler in your Scorpio house of partners is attracting pretty (as well as pretty powerful) people.

Gemini: May 21 - Jun. 20
No sooner said than done. An opportunity to be your efficient self, smart as a whip or, just as likely, a real smart-ass, occurs when your Mercury ruler merges with the Virgo sun. That this meeting takes place while mental Mercury is moving forward instead of being in retrograde suggests that, no matter how much insight, information or discussion is called for, speed is of the essence.

Cancer: Jun. 21 - Jul. 22
Wet and wild. Security-conscious Crabs may be eager to shed their shells while joyful Venus frolics in your Scorpio house of romance, risk and other sexy recreational activities until Oct. 7. And when the love goddess favors eccentric Uranus in Pisces next week and the Pisces moon is big and bright, all three water signs could dive in head first.

Leo: Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
To boldly go where you've never gone before and to clear out the closet before you leave - that is the Virgo mission. This year you have the benefit of your well-informed Mercury ruler helping chart your course as it merges with the creative power of the sun. If ever there was an appropriate time to reinvent yourself, now is it.

Virgo: Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Why shouldn't you be feted this weekend? Be glad that the elegant, enthusiastic coupling of Venus and Jupiter takes place in your Libra house of income and expenditures. Since both planets, each in their own way, offer boons and benefits, you could wind up amassing a sizable stash.

Libra: Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
We know that you don't always present the famous all-embracing, fair-and-balanced Libran facade. A strong current of the critic runs through you, and no time is it more powerful than when discerning Mercury and the Virgo sun convene in the realm of your subconscious. Maybe your opinions won't be expressed out loud, but they're bound to affect your reaction to events and the people surrounding them.

Scorpio: Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
This week the prissiness of the Virgin's vibe can make even the most carefree, footloose Archer quite tense. So when Mercury (purveyor of the small print) and the practical Virgo sun join forces in your career house, you're liable to look for comic relief any place you can find it.

Sagittarius: Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
The changes taking place over the holiday weekend can be both subtle and substantial. Pluto coming out of a deep sleep in Sagittarius might not have an immediate effect, but if you suddenly see room for improvement, particularly in the way you look, that's a sign of Pluto rising.

Capricorn: Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Earth to earth is not "dust to dust." Right now both the sun and Mercury in Virgo (an earth sign) favor sexy Mars in your Taurus (another earth sign) house of romance and joy. The message doesn't get more direct or obvious than this: Capricorns (the ultimate earth sign) should enjoy themselves.

SPORTS

Sports gives suffering an outlet

KENT HILDEBRAND

Perspective is one of those overused words in sports. After a big win, you'll hear a coach or athlete say, "We just need to keep things in perspective." After a big loss, you'll hear them say again, "We've got to keep everything in perspective."

Whether they won the Super Bowl, missed the game-winning free throw, signed a multi-million-dollar contract or suffered a season-ending injury – athletes, and the media that writes about them – seem to be great at keeping things in perspective.

Most of the time, their use of the word comes off sounding about as deep and profound as Paris Hilton. Who really wants to hear Barry Bonds say he's trying to keep things in perspective as he comes back from an injury when there are starving people in Ethiopia?

Or in Louisiana.

It's funny how things like catastrophic natural disasters can really put things in, well, perspective. Now there's a lot of athletes who could say they need to keep things in perspective and not sound ridiculously trite.

In the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, we've all watched the tragic scenes of destruction, suffering and death from New Orleans and the surrounding area. It's something that touches us all, but here in the midst of classes and our mundane routines, it's easy to feel removed from the situation.

That wouldn't be the case if we were students at New Orleans' Tulane University. With no campus to call their own, student athletes for the Green Wave have moved to five other schools in Texas and Louisiana to try to continue their seasons and attend class with a different student body.

For them, there will be no home games.

Things aren't as bad for Louisiana State. The Tigers will still have to play their "home" game against Arizona State in Tempe, Ariz., because their stadium is being used by evacuees.

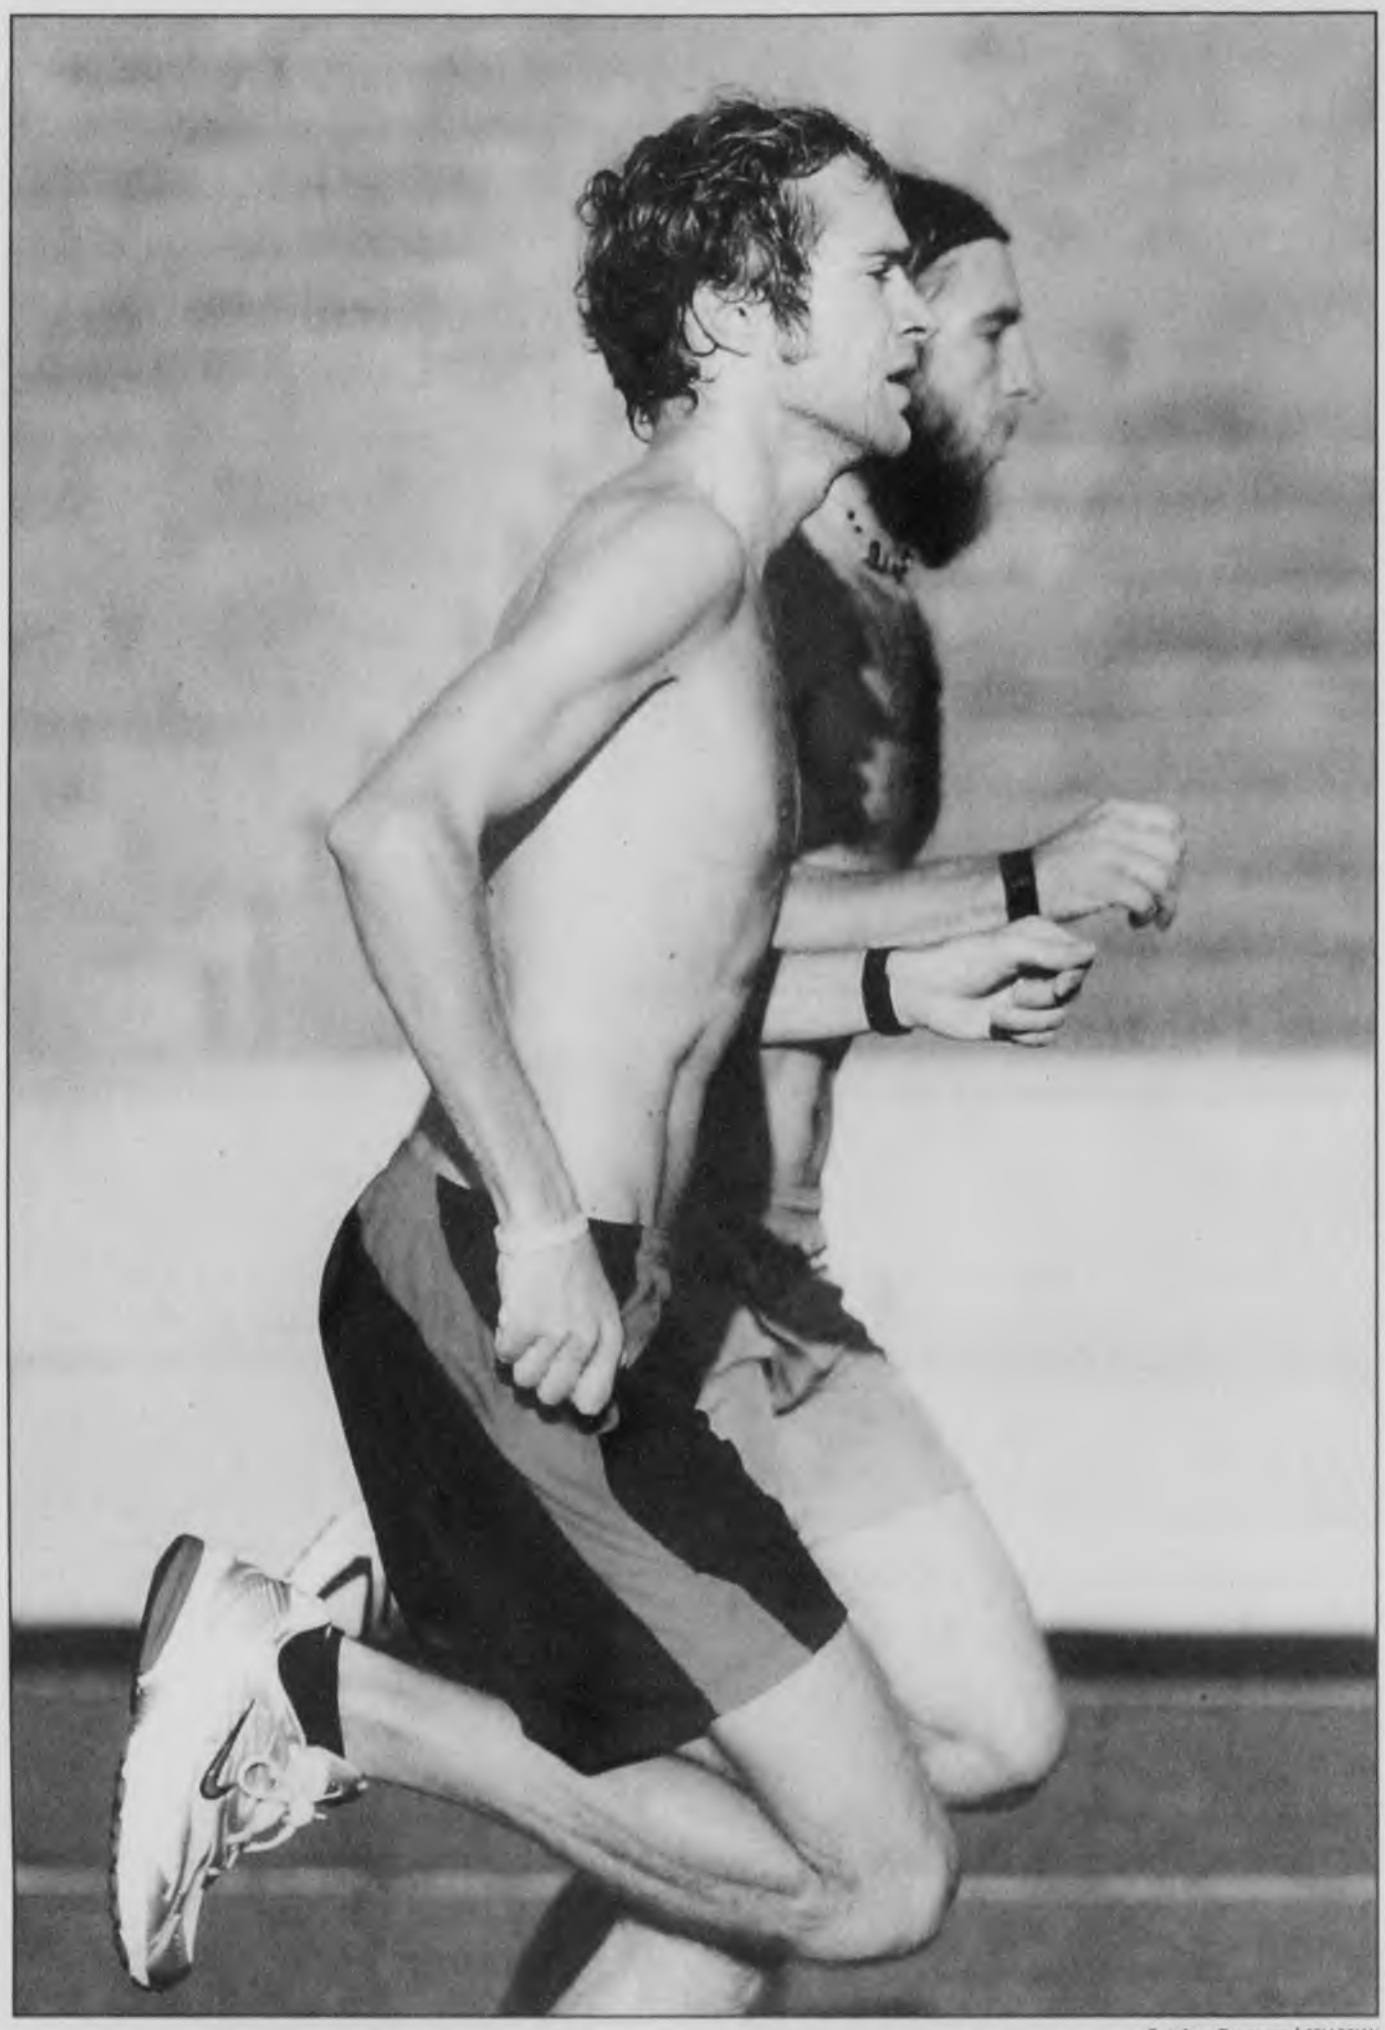
Add to the list of homeless the New Orleans Saints, who are trying to decide between Baton Rouge, La., and San Antonio to play their games.

"You just hate to be moving all over the place every week, like nomads, you know?" said Saints wideout Joe Horn.

There's no arguing with Horn, but at least he and most of the previously mentioned athletes have access to food, water and the rest of the amenities of home. How many thousands still do not?

It is a challenging time for everyone in the area, athletes included, but it's been harder for some than others. Auburn freshman defensive tackle and New Orleans native Alonzo Horton lost his aunt and two of his younger brothers, who all died in the post-Katrina flooding.

The suffering extends to everyone, but one advantage athletes have is the ability to bring hope to the situation.



If nothing else, they are recognizable figures we identify with, and, like Horton, give a face to the masses who have been directly affected.

One athlete making an effort to bring hope is PGA golfer Kelly Gibson. Another New Orleans native, Gibson is back home helping in any way he can. He helped form the "Feed the Relief" organization, which provides food for the many workers in the area.

"You feel grief, anger, betrayed, bitter, sad," Gibson said. "There's enough finger-pointing going on. I've done enough of it, too. Then you look at the positives and say 'maybe we can help figure this out, maybe we can come back stronger'."

Now that's keeping things in perspective.

Senior cross country runner Joe Moore, runs during practice Aug. 19 at Memorial Stadium. Moore is currently the No. 1 runner on the men's cross country team.

Emerging leader

Moore to fill shoes of departed All-American, Mathew Chesang

By Chris Patch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State senior cross country runner Joseph Moore found himself in a position this year he hasn't seen before – he's the No. 1 runner on the men's cross country team.

Moore is faced with the task of at least trying to fill the shoes of departed All-American Mathew Chesang, who placed 12th in the NCAA Championships last year.

While the expectations aren't that Moore will duplicate the year Chesang had, they are that he will be a vocal leader, and perform at the high level, coach Michael Smith said.

"I think he's poised to have his best year," Smith said. "I say that because every year he has gotten better, and I would hope that he would have a year that, for him, would be a break-through.

Aside from leading by example on the course, Moore is responsible for mentoring the young men's team.

Moore is the only runner on the team with three previous years of cross country running experience at the collegiate level.

Moore said he is well-aware of his leadership role on the team.

"All the other guys are quite a bit younger. I expect them to perform to the best of their abilities now," he said.

Smith said he is confident in Moore's leadership skills, and expects them to translate to quality practices for the freshmen.

"He's going to be more of a team leader," Smith said. "Joe will get the job done, and will also get guys around him in practice and show them what they need to do, and set the base for the training runs."

Leadership responsibilities aside, personal expectations are high this season. Although he has yet to race this year because of his training, Moore never finished worse than 48th last season, something he is looking to improve on this season.

Moore said a prominent post-season showing would be a fitting end to his senior season.

"I'm looking for a high place in the conference," he said. "Maybe in the high 20s, and maybe even a run at nationals."

Golfers to open season in Wisconsin

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's golf team will open its 2005-06 season this weekend in Madison, Wis., at the Badger Invitational.

Coach Kristi Knight said although she has never seen the University Ridge course, she has heard it is a similar layout to Colbert Hills, K-State's home course.

"It's a rolling golf course, with large greens," she said. "It's a hard course, but fair in that it's not overly penalizing."

Knight was initially skeptical about accepting an invitation to the event, which will feature teams like Missouri, Texas A&M and Texas Christian; all teams ranked in the top 35 last year.

Badger Invitational
When: Sept. 11-12
Where: Madison, Wis.
Starting time: Round 1 begins at 8 a.m.

But after a good outing at Colorado State last spring, where K-State tied with San Francisco for fourth place, Knight reconsidered.

"It's a good place to start the season," she said.

Junior Katy Heffel said she is looking forward to the tournament.

"I'm excited to get back into the season and competing," she said.

This summer, Heffel, whose best finish last year was a tie for 15th at the Mountain View Invitational, made some changes to her swing and spent extra time working on her short game.

"I'm looking forward to seeing how the changes pan out," she said. "I'm really confident in the changes I made over the summer."

Sophomore Hailey Mireles said she has spent most of her time preparing for the season-opener mentally.

"I'm getting mentally confident and ready to go; I'm excited for the season," she said. "I want to really work on making solid contact with the ball. I want to stay in the moment, concentrating on every shot."

The first tournament, Mireles said, is an important step toward having a good season.

"It's a good way to tell how the season is going to go," she said. "I don't have high hopes. I just want the learning experience at this point."

To excel in the tournament, Knight said each player must develop her own game plan and play to their individual strengths.

"I know they have the talent to be successful this year," Knight said. "The more experience they get being in or close to the lead, the better they will be and the more confidence and desire they will have."

Staff Reports

BBL | Murphy, Goedert earn high honors over summer

Current K-State junior infielder Jared Goedert and former Wildcat outfielder and two-time All-Big 12 selection Steve Murphy recently earned honors for their respective play during the summer.

Goedert, who played with the Hays Larks in the Jayhawk League, was named to Baseball America's First Team Summer All-America Team. Murphy, a 2005 14th-round selection of the Texas Rangers, was named the Most Valuable Player of the Northwest League as a member of the Spokane Indians.

Goedert hit .367 with eight home runs, 52 RBI and 19 doubles to lead the Larks, to helped lead the Larks to the NBC World Series in Wichita.

Murphy, the league leader in slugging percentage (.533), doubles (23) and extra-base hits (36), hit .306 with 37 RBI in his first professional season for the Indians, the Northwest League affiliate of the Texas Rangers.

CBB | New NCAA rule teams an early jump on 2005-06

A new NCAA rule will give K-State and other schools the chance to get an early start on its preparations for the upcoming season by allowing squads to return to practice as a team earlier.

New NCAA regulations now allow basketball teams around the country to begin team practices, with coaches present, as soon as school begins in the fall for two hours a week.

Teams may continue this until the first official day of practice on Oct. 14.

Current NCAA regulations permit that student-athletes can have eight hours of activity per week during the off-season. In the past, men's teams were allowed to use two of these hours to work out with a maximum of four players at a time from the start of school until the team's first full practice in mid-October. With the rule change, the Wildcats can now have the entire team present for workouts, enabling them to play full 5-on-5 scrimmages instead of 2-on-2 in the past.

CFB | Missouri linebacker suspended for DWI arrest

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Missouri linebacker Marcus Bacon has been suspended indefinitely following his weekend arrest for driving while intoxicated.

Bacon

Missouri officials cited only disciplinary reasons for the suspension. Bacon, a 6-2, 220-pound junior, was the Tigers' leading tackler with eight tackles and 1.5 sacks in Saturday's season-opening 44-17 win over Arkansas State in Kansas City.

Spokesman Chad Moller said there was no timetable for Bacon's return.

NFL | Broncos QB apologizes for college game antics

Broncos quarterback Bradlee Van Pelt attended last week's Colorado State-Colorado game to support his alma mater. He wound up making a scene.

Van Pelt

He was engaged in heckling with the Buffs fans. He wore a T-shirt with an obscenity on it. Some fans said Van Pelt flashed obscene gestures toward them.

The quarterback said he might have to stay away from future CU-CSU games because "I get too passionate about it." He apologized to everyone involved.

"I am truly sorry about it," Van Pelt said. "I wish I could take it back. I'm representing the Broncos, and I shouldn't have done it. I am sorry."

Broncos coach Mike Shanahan said he met with Van Pelt, and would be very surprised if something like that happened again.

JARDINE | Redevelopment project to take 10 years in a massive redevelopment project that will continue for the next 10 years. The Project will cost $102 million and will nearly double the capacity of Jardine.

Lattin, an employee of Midland Wrecking and Demolition out of Kansas City, Kan., said he was impressed with how many spectators his work was attracting.

"Almost every time I look there is a group of people watching," he said.

Lattin said he hoped to tear down one building a day, knocking down C first, then A and B buildings, making Friday his last day, followed by another week and a half of clearing rubble. The job has been going well, Lattin said.

"There's not much to it. You just start up high and work your way down," he said.

Jenette Turpin, graduate student in family studies and human development, said seeing part of the building down surprised her when she saw it Monday afternoon. She had been anticipating it since the end of last semester, but it snuck up on her.

"They just bulldozed over it," she said. "No explosions, no wrecking balls. It's just gone."

Turpin said it was strange seeing the building come down after being a part of her life for so long.

Turpin and her brother, Shannon Dick, grew up in the Jardine Apartments while their parents attended K-State. Now, they both live at Jardine, and Turpin has been there for the last three years.

"It's weird seeing it go. It's so old, and its been there for so long," she said.

Watch demolition online

Watch the Jardine demolition on the webcam by typing 129.130.127.229 into the address bar.

Connie Bingham, the Administrative Officer for the Jardine Apartments Office, said that there haven't been any complaints about the closing of the sidewalks or the noise yet.

"Right now, people are really just fascinated with it," she said.

Bingham said it was weird seeing the building come down.

"I'm happy to be moving forward, but it's sad that the buildings I've been driving by for the past 17 years are gone," she said. "I've seen a lot of changes since I've been working here, but this is definitely the biggest."

PROFESSOR | Socolofsky remembered by friends

the addendum for the 150-year anniversary of the church's congregation.

"Many people believe the best church history was written by Homer. The addendum is a beautiful piece of work," Reed said.

Socolofsky joined the church in 1941.

Reed said he talked to Socolofsky before he died and was there shortly after.

"I will always remember, his mind was sharp and he corrected us on a page that something was on," he said. "He remained sharp until he died."

He said he won't forget Socolofsky because of his historical documentation of the church and his participation in the choir.

"He was just a quiet, unassuming man," Reed said. "I have phenomenal fondness about him. I'm very sad about his death."

He is survived by his wife Penny and six grown children.

"Our hearts and prayers go out to his wife, Penny, and the whole Socolofsky family," Wefald said.

SCHOOL BOARD | Fort Riley expansion discussed housing units.

Approximately 43 to 45 percent of Fort Riley soldiers live in Junction City, 30 to 35 percent in Manhattan, 6 percent in Ogden and 21 percent scattered throughout the region. Ambrust said the numbers should remain consistent after expansion.

The bill for the Fort Riley expansion should reach President Bush today, and then he will have two weeks to review and approve the bill.

Other topics discussed at the meeting include a district technology plan for state E-Rate, a district technology committee and a sales tax monitoring group.

Items on the agenda for the Sept. 21 meeting include the diversity initiative, district enrollment and the expanded utilization of channel 20.

Student Senate approves parking garage proposal

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate approved an $18.8 million campus parking garage Thursday night that will be located south of the K-State Student Union with a 49-8 vote.

Construction of the parking garage will begin in May 2007 and will be complete in about 18 months. The garage will provide 1,406 parking stalls for a net gain of 966 stalls.

During construction, a bus system will shuttle students to the Union from the KSU Stadium parking lot.

The parking garage plans include 134 reserved stalls, 300 student stalls, 300 faculty stalls and 672 unaffiliated stalls.

A bond will fund the construction of the garage, and it will be repaid with parking fee increases that will be implemented in fall 2006.

Starting next fall, student parking permits will increase $25 each year for three years, doubling the current $75 fee to $150 for non-garage permits. Garage permits will cost $200 and will guarantee students a spot in the garage. However, the garage permit price may change.

Faculty and staff permits will increase $34 each year for three years, doubling the fee to $200.

Student Body President Michael Burns said the garage permit price and stall affiliation is flexible and might change, depending on what the parking committee decides after careful analysis.

"We made a major step tonight and hopefully the proposal will keep taking steps needed to move forward," Burns said.

Before the vote, some senators were concerned the stall affiliations and costs were uncertain.

"I support a parking garage on campus, but I was against the proposal because I felt that no guarantees were made to students about what they would actually be getting for the price increase they made," Sally Maddock, senator for the College of Architecture, Planning and Design, said.

To receive the bond, K-State must submit the plans for the garage to the Kansas Board of Regents by Sept. 28 so that it is added to the October agenda.

If approved by the board, the plans must be in the governor's proposal before her State of the State address in January in order to start construction by the resolution's goal.

Before going to the board, Burns said Faculty Senate and Classified Senate will also review the plans for the parking garage and decide if they support it or not.

"Students have stepped up, and we've said we think a parking garage in front of the Union is right," Burns said. "Hopefully, Faculty Senate and Classified Senate join our side and move forward in an adequate manner."

Support your troops

Campaign comes to Manhattan

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It can go in your hair, on your clothes or even around a Christmas tree.

But for Susan Norman and Heather Harsh, it's a symbol of respect.

Operation Yellow Ribbon, a campaign supporting military troops, has made its mark in 16 states across the country.

This year, it came to Manhattan.

Norman and Harsh, mother and daughter, and founders of Operation Yellow Ribbon, started their campaign one-and-a-half years ago.

"We started it out, just putting up yellow ribbons in small downtown areas," Harsh said. "By us putting up ribbons in the downtown areas, it really gets places revved up and inspired to support their military.

"Our mission of the campaign is to show our love, respect and support for the men and women of the military of the United States of America and her allies in the cause of freedom and defeat of terrorism," she said.

Downtown Manhattan, Inc. recently became a part of the non-profit operation, and by Sept. 11, will bring in 150 yellow, satin ribbons to tie around downtown.

Harsh said this is the first campaign the city considered within the past couple years. But for the Fort Riley expansion, the campaign will serve justice, she said. In the next three-to-five years, Manhattan citizens can expect an increase of 30,000-35,000 people within the area.

Sarah Behan, Rolla, Kan., said, "I know a lot of campaigns like Yellow Ribbon start within the military, drawing in support from the public."

"I certainly didn't know anything about the military before I joined," she said. "But after my seven-month mission in Kuwait, it has made me thankful.

"Two people from my platoon have died in the last couple months," Behan said. "After things like that, I realized that I'm not really in it for the money. I'm here to serve my country."

Sometimes, though, Behan said the media and other organizations make it difficult.

"A lot of the media makes it

Old Chicago power outage, evacuation caused by transformer

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Meals were cut short at Old Chicago after a transformer behind Applebee's Grill & Bar overheated and caused a power outage to the restaurant and many other downtown businesses Thursday evening.

The transformer overheated, causing a small fire within the unit. After employees of Westar Energy arrived and opened the transformer, the firefighters were able to extinguish the fire.

"Apparently there was some cardboard up above that got overheated and started on fire," Arlen Loecker, battalion fire chief, said.

Loecker said they responded to a call at 7:34 p.m. when Old Chicago's smoke alarm went off.

"What probably happened was their alarm system had trouble when the power went off and shut the ventilation hood," he said.

Soon after firefighters received the call about Old Chicago's fire alarms, they were notified of the transformer behind Applebee's smoking and the power outage downtown.

After the electricity went out and the smoke alarms sounded, Old Chicago closed its doors for the evening.

"We had to evacuate customers," Steve Hohl, general manager of the nearly-two-week-old restaurant, said.

Customers who were at the restaurant did not have to pay for their food and were given $5 coupons.

Jamie Kay, trainer from Idaho for Old Chicago, said the customers understood why they were evacuating the restaurant.

"Everyone was okay with it," she said. "We didn't have any problems."

While a safe evacuation was a concern, Hohl said they were worried about keeping the food fresh.

"Our biggest worry was getting power to preserve food," he said.

Employees in the kitchen put food on ice, hoping it would stay fresh while the power remained out.

"It's crazy now," Kay said. "We're putting everything on ice and getting everything cleaned up."

She has been an employee of the restaurant for three years now and she said she has never seen a complete store evacuation before.

Through all of the craziness, Kay said employees and customers were in good spirits.

"Things happen and they happen to the best of us," she said. "You've just gotta laugh. I mean, it's just pizza and beer."

Sorority collects for Gulf Coast

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Zeta Phi Beta sorority has collected more than $800 in donations to aid the victims of Hurricane Katrina, LaFreshia Brown, president of Zeta Phi Beta and senior in lifespan human development, said.

"K-State is responding very well," Brown said.

Since last Thursday Zeta Phi Beta has been collecting donations in the K-State Student Union.

The sorority has also received support from multicultural organizations, the greek system, advisers and people in the community.

All money collected will be donated to the American Red Cross. Clothing, toiletries and food will be taken to a Catholic church in Topeka and distributed to victims.

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Showing her support for the victims, Bilgah Moka-Moliki, freshman in biology, makes a donation that will go to the Red Cross.

Kala Raglin, Zeta Phi Beta secretary and junior in architecture, said the United States is united as a nation in helping the hurricane victims.

"If this tragedy happened in Kansas, we would want others helping us," she said.

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Capitol loses power

A squirrel caused a power outage at about 8:30 a.m. that left the Statehouse and other downtown Topeka buildings briefly without power Thursday. The squirrel got into a power substation and was touching different parts of a circuit, causing electricity to flow through its body and overload the circuit.

University receives gift

Pittsburg State University plans to use a $1.7 million gift from the estate of two Pittsburg State University alumni the late Theodore and Faery Loverage to help the library buy databases and other electronic information. The couple stated the money should generate about $80,000 to $85,000 each year.

More leaving city

More people were willing to flee the bacteria-infested waters of New Orleans, after rescuers made what may be their last peaceful pass through the city without using force. About 10,000 people are believed to be stubbornly staying put and police made it clear that they would return — next time with more force.

DON'T FORGET

The last day for a full refund for a course with 70 or more calendar days is Sunday.

The funeral for former history professor Homer E. Socolofsky will be at 1 p.m. Saturday at the First United Methodist Church, 612 Poyntz Ave.

Mr. & Mrs. Smith will be playing at 8 tonight in the Union for $1.

Comedian Steve Burr will be at K-State After Hours beginning at 10:15 tonight in Union Courtyard.

Local man arrested

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Manhattan man will be arraigned on charges of rape and aggravated criminal sodomy at the Riley County Courthouse today.

Terrance W. Haase, 18, was arrested Wednesday night at his residence at 2011 Tecumseh Road, a police report said. He was not released on bail. The warrant for his arrest was issued Sept. 5.

Assistant Riley County Attorney Bethany Fields said Haase was arrested for alleged crimes committed between December 2003 and April 2004. She said the victim's age was less than 14 years and Haase was a juvenile at the time.

Haase faces a sentence that ranges from probation to placement in a juvenile correctional facility. His arraignment will be at 1:30 p.m. today.

General psychology students contribute to research studies

Participation required to receive class credit

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Twelve K-State students waited patiently for a psychology experiment to begin.

The students waited to fill out a questionnaire as part of their General Psychology requirement. Each student in the class is required to earn four hours of experiment credit or write four two-page papers.

Tiffany Denton, senior in psychology, entered the room with a stack of questionnaires. After she gave instructions to the students, she distributed a privacy disclaimer for them to sign and they began.

Denton administered the survey as part of Psychology 599. She assisted Don Saucier, assistant professor in psychology. The class requires a lot of time, Denton said.

"This is my third semester doing these experiments, and I've got another hour today," she said.

General Psychology has almost always required students to participate in experiments, Saucier, who is teaching a section of the class this semester, said. He has done similar experiments for the past nine years, and usually students enjoy them, he said.

"I wouldn't do it if I didn't enjoy it. And it's really great for graduate school."
Tiffany Denton
SENIOR IN PSYCHOLOGY

"I've had very little indication that they have a negative reaction," Saucier said. "Sometimes they are interested in getting the results."

The students participate in the experiments for several reasons, Saucier said.

"We want them to appreciate what goes into the findings we teach them in class," he said. "We also want to show them how to conduct research."

As students left the classroom, Denton collected their questionnaires and thanked them for coming in. It can be tedious, but she appreciates the experiments.

"I wouldn't do it if I didn't enjoy it," she said. "And it's really great for graduate school."

As she finished the experiment, Kerry Lawless, freshman in open option, said the experiment wasn't an inconvenience for her.

"I don't mind doing them," she said. "I actually kind of like it."

TRANSFORM YOUR ANSWER TO LIFE'S MOST IMPORTANT QUESTION WHAT ON EARTH AM I HERE FOR?
YOU ARE NOT AN ACCIDENT!
You were created by God for five purposes, and until you understand them, life will not make sense.
At Westview Community Church and Real Life Church, we are going to embark on a spiritual journey called 40 Days of Purpose. We'll explore God's amazing plan for you - both here and now, and for eternity. Knowing God's purpose for creating you will reduce your stress, focus your energy, simplify your decisions, and give new meaning to your life.
BEGINNING SOON IN A HOME NEAR YOU!
You're invited to enjoy this important series in a comfortable home setting in your neighborhood. Each of the six weekly video lessons is led by Pastor Rick Warren, author of The Purpose Driven Life. Additional discussion time will focus on the corresponding reading from this New York Times bestseller that has already changed the lives of millions of people.
Groups are now forming in your area:

TO THE POINT

Students should have option to volunteer

Students in General Psychology classes are required to earn four hours of experiment credits to pass the class.

They must fill out surveys and answer questionnaires to help further and complete the research of department professors and graduate students.

If students do not participate in the experiments, they must write four two-page papers.

This practice is not fair to students. Some may disagree with the research or methods used to gather information. However, the requirement – and its alternative – force them to participate.

Forced participation not only inconveniences students, but also leads to less accurate findings for the researchers.

General Psychology students do not compose a representative sample of the K-State or general population, especially because students often sign up for a particular experiment with friends – people usually similar to themselves.

In the interest of lending credibility and accuracy to their conclusions, psychology professors and other researchers should solicit both campus and community volunteers for their experiments.

Voluntary participants come into the experiment with better attitudes and a greater willingness to further the research for which they are being tested.

Students reluctant to participate should not be coerced into doing so with grades dangled over their heads.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Urgent state

Genocide in Sudan can't be ignored; Americans need to take action

For Darfur, Sudan, today marks a year since President Bush declared the atrocities there as genocide. Since 2003, the Arab Janjaweed militia has caused terror and bloodshed in Darfur. The Janjaweed have scoured the Darfur region, attacking communities of black Africans. There are hundreds of thousands immigrating into Chad for shelter from the Janjaweed, action needs to be taken.

Maybe Bush has had a few other international affairs on his mind, but declaring genocide in another country and not doing anything about it is almost criminal, especially when help. The world's apathy for those who have no where to go is appalling, especially when we have recognized the problem. There is so much that can be done, yet we continue to do nothing.

Every day, thousands of people are being killed, tortured and forced to flee from the only homes they Sudanese government has done nothing to stop the Janjaweed, even going so far as watching overhead from helicopters as riders on horseback go in and capture innocent citizens.

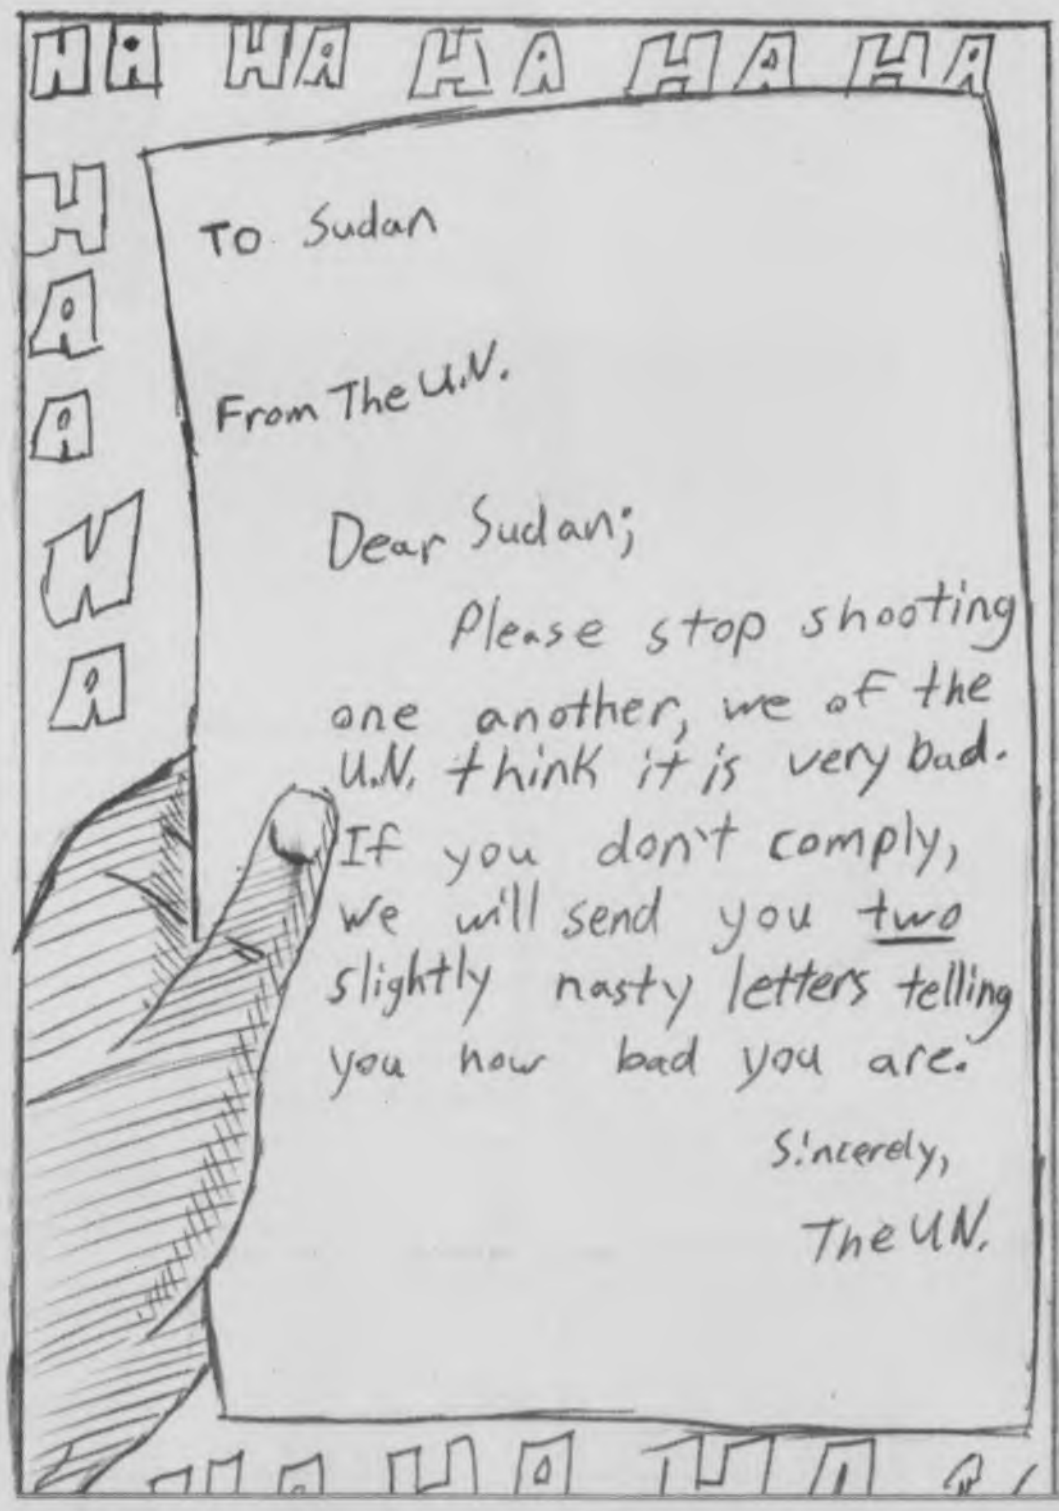
On Sept. 8th, speakers from organizations around the world came together in front of the White House port Africa Action's (www.africaaction.org) mission to promote outside aid for the people of Darfur. For people who don't live in the Washington, D.C. area, Africa Action is asking people to call President Bush at (202) 456-1414 and ask him to help the people of Darfur.

College students are also organizing around the country to take a stand and help these refugees. STAND (Students Taking Action Now: Darfur) has been created to band students together and raise awareness of this tragedy. At www.standnow.org, students are able to sign petitions, buy wristbands and T-shirts, and find resources to get the word out to government representatives and media networks.

Fortunately, some actions have already been taken.

According to Student Public Interest News, the African Union, a young coalition of 54 African countries, has sent 4,000 troops to Sudan to help the refugees, but since this organization is only three years old, they need outside help from more experienced countries.

Essentially, Sudan doesn't need military help, just assistance for refugees who have migrated to Chad. The fuel shortage and Hurricane Katrina have shifted attention from this crisis in Africa. These national issues are ones that affect us directly, from family members who lost everything to having to rearrange our budget to compensate for rising gas prices. But it's important not to forget about those in other countries that truly need our help.



KELSEY CHILDRESS

Many people only care about things that affect them directly, but I believe being a good American includes wanting to help those who are less fortunate, both in our own country and around the world.

Even if you don't have any money to donate (but if you do, check out www.savedarfur.org), you can still e-mail or call President Bush and tell him how much Sudan needs our help.

So, find time, get online and sign the petition, write an e-mail, tell a friend. If each of us does one of these things, the total power of our voice will make a difference. Even if the genocide in Darfur doesn't affect you directly, we still have the responsibility as human beings to care about others who aren't as lucky as we are.

It is time to help victims of Katrina

It's easy to say we're sorry about what is going on in Louisiana. It's easy to read stories in the newspaper and watch thousands of people crying and dying on television and to shake our heads and comment to our friends on what a horrible disaster it is. What must not be easy is to be living through it.

ADDIE LAUE

I am sure that the tens of thousands of people suffering in the Gulf Coast would love to turn off the horror with a click of the TV remote.

Today, I sat down after class and turned on Oprah. She was on location talking to the victims and has already donated $1 million toward relief efforts. I, on the other hand, am ashamed to admit I have done nothing.

As I watched, I started to ask myself why I have done nothing to help. I don't consider myself a selfish person and I have always thought that I was especially empathetic. So what is stopping me?

It is a fact that no answer is a good answer. There is absolutely no excuse not to help.

When I take the time to think about why I haven't yet taken this disaster more seriously, I guess part of it is that I didn't believe something that horrific could really happen in America. Yes, I am fully aware of how ethnocentric and naive that makes me sound, and I am ashamed of that, but it is the truth. I couldn't have imagined people could watch their babies dehydrate or be left to die alone in the streets. But what I realized today is that this is America, and it is happening here.

Besides the fact that it took me way too long to believe it, I felt like I didn't really know how to help. As I sat watching the horrific stories, it made me sick enough to stop munching on the grapes and crackers I had in front of me. I am so lucky to have plenty of food in my house, "but what can I do," I thought, I can't mail my crackers to Louisiana. Believe me, if I could, I would.

There have been thousands of people, thank God, who have already donated time and money, but there are too many who haven't. I don't believe Americans are generally unsympathetic. I do believe we haven't gone out of our way to find out what we can do. But instead of feeling guilty, it is time to do something.

When I mentioned my dilemma to a friend, she told me that at Dillons, I can ask the checker to round my bill up to the next dollar amount and the extra will go the Red Cross. I am a college student, and I don't have a lot to donate, but that I can do.

I found out Wal-Mart is also taking donations for the Red Cross. They will also be setting up drop boxes for personal hygiene items for victims who are coming to our area. That, too, I can help with.

Obviously it really wasn't very hard for me to learn about little ways I can help, and that is another reason I could feel guilty. Instead, I thought I'd tell a few thousand K-Staters how they could help, and then I'm headed to Dillons – and that is what I can do.

CAMPUS FOURUM | 395-4444 -or- fourum@spub.ksu.edu

The Campus Fourum is the Collegian's anonymous call-in system. The Fourum is edited to eliminate vulgar, racist, obscene and libelous comments. The comments are not the opinion of the Collegian nor are they endorsed by the editorial staff.

Education is a lie propagated by the liberal media.

Would someone please write a new controversial article so I don't have to hear about "daddy's money" and him paying for stuff anymore? By the way, my dad got off his butt and made something of himself and I still pay for my car, insurance and gas.

Shut it donkey!

You people don't even know what liberal means anymore.

If you don't have a clit you can always rent one by the hour.

Chain mail is the work of Satan.

I'm so good in bed I scream out my own name!

How sad it must be to be liberal, never taking responsibility for one's actions and blaming others, and Mr. Reichert were you dropped on your head as a baby? Scientists and religious zealots are much more unlikely then atheists.

College radio can pretty much be summed up in five words: dead air, um, dead air.

Apparently girls don't realize how ridiculous they look in white sunglasses.

To all the kids who say "It's not our fault that we have money and our parents got off their butts and made something of themselves." I bet our parents made something of themselves. They just make us earn it and don't spoil us like your parents do.

To all the hicks who back their truck in the parking stall: If you're going to back them in, keep them in between the lines. You take up more than one space, and it really pisses me off.

Christians are those who never gained the reasoning skills of adulthood.

You can't use passages from the Bible to support arguments for the legitimacy of the Bible.

Life goes on? This is a part of life? That was like the ghettos of Manhattan.

Thanks to writers like Zachary T. Eckels, the Collegian is becoming what we have all feared: just another liberal propaganda machine.

What's the deal? It's 90 degrees out and people are still wearing sweatshirts.

Cheap Cuts

Cheap haircuts available for students

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With college students constantly counting their quarters to buy food, the money needed for a haircut might be the last thing on their minds.

Many locations around Manhattan provide specials for cheap haircuts for students.

April Jacobs, assistant manager, said its prices are a bit cheaper than the main salon in Aggieville.

"The reason our prices are low is because we try to target students," she said. "We don't want to be the most expensive place in Manhattan."

She said it helps that they are located in the Union because it gets more people to hear about Crimpers.

"We have a lot of students and employees from the Union," she said. "Our salon has more walk-ins than the one in Aggieville."

A woman's haircut and style is $27 and a man's is $17. The salon currently has back-to-school specials, including a $50 foil highlight. The specials will run through September.

They also offer hair removal, such as an eyebrow wax for $12. Nail care is also a feature, with acrylic enhancement available for $27.50. Rebalance (fills) or french fills (backfill) range about $20-$25.

"We are also the only place that sells Red Bull," Jacobs said.

Elaine Tucker, receptionist for Great Clips and a Crum's Beauty College student, said haircuts are available for $11.

Pricing for perms depend on the length of the hair. They are $39 for short hair, $52 for shoulder length and $82 for anything past the shoulders.

Great Clips has promotions, including coupons for $6.99 and $8.99 haircuts.

Great Clips also participates in the Locks of Love program, which provides hairpieces to children 18 years or younger with long-term medical hair loss.

Great Clips is located across from Wal-Mart.

If there is absolutely no possible way to afford a haircut, then the "do-it-yourself" method is always a possibility.

According to www.stretcher.com, the worst part of haircuts is when people try to cut their own hair. There is the possibility of making a mistake and ruining their hair style.

If a student wishes to try a new style, it is probably best if they leave it up to a stylist.

Students will need a comfortable place, with a big mirror, good lighting, spray bottle of water, hair clips, a comb and a sharp pair of scissors. Also, remember to be patient, take plenty of time and have the hair slightly damp.

Don't get too carried away since this is just a trim. Once finished, style hair as usual and students will still have money left in their pockets.

How to Cut your own hair

Single hair length: This is a straight forward trim all the way around, make sure you're snipping off the same amount of the end in small sections. Check back with a hand mirror.

Bangs: Comb them straight, take between your index finger and middle finger leaving about 1 and one-quarter inches of hair. Trim one eighth inch of that all the way across, check length and if necessary, repeat.

Sides and layers: If there are layers all over, follow them top to bottom and front to back, positioning the scissors vertically, trimming only a bit, to give more texture. Use your comb as a guide and cut with the same measurements as your bangs. The smaller the amount of hair, the easier it is to work with. Choose a top layer or side piece the same size and thickness as you did for bangs. If your hair is angled, make sure you angle your fingers to follow. Once finished with each layer, use a hair clip to keep it out of the way.

The back: Work patiently and in sections, be careful and use all of your tools that are available.

Columnist speculates as to why readers dislike him

Ask the 5th year

MATT PETERWORTH

I've liked your columns so far, but apparently some people don't like you. Why is that?

You bring up a very good question. The very reason that I wanted to be the "Ask The 5th Year" and not an opinion columnist was because this campus is very divisive on party lines. No matter which side of the political spectrum I would have represented as an opinion columnist, half of the campus would automatically disagree with me and at the very least dislike me, if not hate me. I opted for a less political, more entertaining columnist position. But apparently, some people still dislike me.

This reminds me of a theory my roommate from sophomore year and I developed while we lived together in Goodnow Hall. To set the record straight, I no longer live nor do I still hang out in Goodnow. The theory states that of all the people that regularly attend class at K-State, half of them have seen me and could at least recognize me. Half of those people then have an opinion of me. And half of the people who have an opinion of me at the very least dislike me, if not hate me. Running the numbers, half of 20,000 is 10,000 people who have at least seen me or know who I am, 5,000 who know me enough to form an opinion about me, and 2,500 who just don't like me. Wow! That's a lot of people.

How have so many people come to dislike me? Well, it stems from my first two years here. That is when most people developed their (negative) opinions about me. I can only speculate as to why, though.

As any freshman, I was eager to engage in any political or religious discussion I could. I let my opinions known, which were often too radical for those who heard them.

During my classes in big lecture halls, I would usually sit in the front row and laugh at all of the professor's jokes. (If you were my professor at any time, please skip the next sentence.) I would laugh not at the actually joke but at the poor attempt of a joke. Regardless, people must have thought I was trying to suck up, and everyone hates a teacher's pet.

But the main reason people don't like me, and again, this is all speculation, is that they find me annoying. Yes, I'm often times loud. Yes, I will give my opinion when you ask for it, even if I know you won't approve of what I think. And okay, I am willing to admit I've said my share of stupid things to people. But that was years ago. I've definitely toned down my loudness and offensiveness.

Once you get to know me, though, I turn out to be a likeable guy. Ask any of my friends, especially Adam Veatch, and they will attest that once you get past the initial obnoxiousness, I'm a fun guy to be with. If Adam Veatch and I can be friends, anyone can.

Matt Peterworth is a fifth year in architectural engineering. You can e-mail him at edge@spub.ksu.edu.

Junior middle blocker Joy Hamlin celebrates the Wildcat's win over Creighton Tuesday evening. Hamlin registered seven kills and five blocks during the match. K-State will be back in action tonight against Florida State at Ahearn Field House.

Wildcats want revenge against No. 5-ranked Gophers

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State will face the biggest obstacle of the young season as it plays host to Florida State, Houston and No. 5 Minnesota at the Varney's Kansas State Invitational today and Saturday inside Ahearn Field House.

Three days removed from a sweep over Creighton in their home-court debut, the 24th-ranked Wildcats (6-0) are off to their best start since 1988, when the team started 8-0.

Junior middle blocker Joy Hamlin, Douglass, Kan., said she does not think K-State is overachieving and is not surprised by her team's record.

"I am not surprised, but I think most people are," Hamlin said. "I knew that we had a lot of potential."

Even with K-State's quick start, coach Suzie Fritz said her team must play better than it did in Tuesday's home opener.

"We need to be more simple in our passing technique, we need to do a better job of defending the seams, we need our left backs to make better defensive reads, we need to be more consistent offensively, our middles need to keep more space off the net – I've got a long list of things we need to work on," Fritz said.

Regardless of K-State's record, the fifth-year coach may never be fully satisfied.

"We strive for perfection," she said. "It is not good enough just to win volleyball games. I want them to stand in the right places and make the right reads. I want them to be great."

In the late game at 7:30 p.m. on Saturday, the Wildcats will square off against the Minnesota Golden Gophers (3-1).

Minnesota, who Stanford defeated in the finals of last season's NCAA Final Four, is coming off a 3-2 loss to No. 1 Nebraska (5-0) on Labor Day. Minnesota pushed Nebraska to the five-game limit, but fell short.

The last time the Wildcats played the Gophers – exactly one year ago Saturday – K-State lost in five games at the Diet Coke Invitational in Minneapolis, Minn.

But, K-State should have plenty of time to loosen up for the Gophers this year, as the Cats will first take on Florida State (1-2) at 7:30 tonight and Houston (4-3) at 12:30 p.m. Saturday.

Varney's Kansas State Invitational
When: 7:30 tonight vs Florida State, 12:30 p.m. Saturday vs Houston, 7:30 p.m. Saturday vs No. 5 Minnesota
Where: Ahearn Field House
How much: Free with student ID

Senior outside hitter Sandy Werner said she is looking forward to the upcoming matches.

"There are some great teams here this weekend, so we are looking forward to playing," Werner said. "It will be great competition and a great test for us. We are just excited to see what happens."

Werner, who averages 3.82 kills per game, said she enjoys playing at Ahearn, and the home crowd will be an advantage for K-State.

"I was talking with one of the (other players), and I was like, 'It is so awesome to play here because the fans get so into it, and it is so much fun,'" she said.

Fritz said she is confident the fans will support K-State this weekend.

"It's going to be awesome," Fritz said. "We needed some home matches, and we need to build some confidence and be able to get Ahearn rocking. The fact that we've got some very competitive teams coming in will be very challenging."

Senior outside hitter Agata Rezende spikes the ball over Creighton's Katy Grady in K-State's first game Tuesday. The Wildcats swept the match 30-16, 30-27 and 30-23.

Stay away Armstrong

MATTHEW GIRARD

On Tuesday, seven-time Tour de France winner Lance Armstrong announced he was going to make a run at an eighth championship next summer.

At first glance, it looked as if Armstrong was just trying to get a rise out of the French media, but on Thursday his Discovery Channel team director confirmed the retired cyclist will train with the team in December, leaving the door open for a comeback.

Don't do it, Lance.

Don't follow in the footsteps of other big name athletes who came out of retirement or stayed in the game too long.

Take Michael Jordan and Jerry Rice for example.

Jordan started the un-retirement craze and it worked out nicely for him the first time, winning three more championships, but not so much the second time.

No one even really cared when he retired again.

On the other hand, Rice, who retired on Monday, hung around too long.

He is the greatest receiver of all-time and I thought he should've retired as a San Francisco 49er, but the three years he spent with the Oakland Raiders were excusable. He was at least in the same area.

Going to Seattle last season was a mistake and then he retired as a Denver Bronco.

Armstrong should go out on top by following the lead of John Elway, who won back-to-back Super Bowls and then retired.

Come on, Lance, you have nothing left to prove.

You survived cancer, you won seven consecutive tour titles with one testicle and now you are marrying a hot rocker chick.

I say antagonize the French as much as you want, but don't let the doping accusations pull you out of retirement.

Those cheese-eating, wine-drinking snobs just want you back because they know you were the only thing keeping people interested in the "Snore" de France.

K-State cross country team to host first meet in 5 years

By Chris Patch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State will host its first home meet in five years today when it takes on the University of Kansas in the KSU/KU Dual at Warner Park.

It is the second meet of the season for the Wildcats, who are coming off a second-place finish for the men's and women's squads the Gold Classic in Wichita.

Led by senior Joseph Moore on the men's side and sophomore Morgan Bonds on the women's, the Wildcats should be close to running a full squad against a Kansas team that has controlled the rivalry as of late.

Coach Michael Smith said he expects to see a better result from his squad with almost everybody running.

"We don't make any changes," Smith said of preparation for different meets. "But we'll go into that race with a better lineup, and I would hope the outcome would be a better team on the line. I think it will be. We'll be more competitive with just about everyone."

Aside from running a fuller, more competitive squad, another difference is going to be the course.

The course at Warner Park has more hills than the golf course the Wildcats ran on in Wichita.

"Warner Park is much more challenging than the course at Wichita," Smith said. "In Wichita, we were on a golf course, and now we're somewhere a little more challenging."

The race today was intended to be cooler than the usual mid-morning heat of most races K-State will run this season.

KSU/KU Dual
When: 6:30 p.m.
Where: Warner Park
How much: Free

The women's race is scheduled to start at 6:30 p.m., followed by the men an hour later.

Smith said the idea of the late race was to compete in cooler temperatures.

"I chose to do it, to run at night, so I feel pretty good about it," he said. "I was hoping it would be in the high 70s, but now they're saying high 80s, so it will still be warm."

Kansas comes into the meet fresh off the Bob Timmons Invitational, where it swept the competition composed of various junior colleges and smaller universities.

WBB | Wecker named NCAA Woman of the Year finalist

Former K-State All-American Kendra Wecker was selected as the NCAA Woman of the Year for the state of Kansas, the NCAA announced Thursday.

Wecker

Wecker is the Big 12 Conference's and school's all-time leading scorer with 2,333 career points. She also holds numerous school records including career rebounds (1,087), career double-doubles (52), career minutes played (4,141) and career field goals made (935).

Wecker is the only Wildcat to record 2,000 points and 1,000 rebounds in a career.

Off the court, Wecker was a repeat Academic All-Big 12 First Team selection and a Big 12 Commissioner's Honor Roll student, and is active with Big Brothers/Big Sisters, Kansas Special Olympics and has served food to the homeless.

SPT | $40,000 raised for Red Cross hurricane relief

K-State Athletics and Wildcat fans combined to raise $40,000 on behalf of the American Red Cross Disaster Relief Fund at last week's football game against Florida International, Athletics officials announced Thursday.

K-State student-athletes collected donations for nearly three hours prior to the game.

A proceeds check from the fund-raising effort was presented to the American Red Cross on Wednesday afternoon by representatives of the Kansas State Student-Athlete Advisory Council.

In an effort to raise additional funds, donations will also be collected on Friday and Saturday during the Varney's Kansas State Volleyball Invitational at Ahearn Field House.

NBA | Legendary Celtics coach Auerbach in hospital

BOSTON — Red Auerbach, the president and former coach of the Boston Celtics, has been hospitalized in Washington with an undisclosed health problem.

Auerbach

The 87-year-old coaching great has been in and out of the hospital the past month for tests and a successful surgical procedure, Celtics spokesman Jeff Twiss said Thursday. Twiss would not identify the procedure or the hospital and said Auerbach was readmitted for an unspecified problem within the last 10 days.

NFL | Westbrook cuts off contract extension talks

PHILADELPHIA — Pro Bowl running back Brian Westbrook cut off contract talks with the Philadelphia Eagles on Thursday because the two sides are far apart on a long-term extension.

Westbrook

Westbrook, talking for the first time since reporting to training camp after a one-week holdout, had been seeking a long-term deal after signing a one-year restricted free agent offer for $1.43 million.

In his three-year career, Westbrook has rushed for 1,618 yards and 10 touchdowns and caught 119 passes for 1,121 yards and 10 TDs.

NFL | Panthers to give 350 tickets to hurricane evacuees

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — The Carolina Panthers are giving 350 tickets to Sunday's game against the New Orleans Saints to Hurricane Katrina evacuees.

The tickets will be distributed to evacuees who are registered with the Red Cross at the Charlotte Coliseum. The Panthers are also giving out $10 food vouchers for each person to use at the game.

The tickets came out of the players' allotments and the unused portion that the Saints returned.

Victor Mann
K-STATE FULLBACK

K-State at Marshall

9:30 a.m., Saturday

History: Marshall leads series 1-0

Records: K-State 1-0; Marshall 1-0

TV: ESPN2; Radio: 1350AM, 101.5FM

Marshall will look to test the young K-State secondary through the air, making sophomore cornerback Bryan Baldwin a key player for the Wildcats if they hope to avoid a repeat of K-State's 27-20 loss to Marshall in 2003.

OFFENSE

Against Florida International, running backs Thomas Clayton and Parrish Fisher proved they could handle the rushing duties for K-State. Quaterback Allen Webb was productive through the air, producing 161 passing yards and two touchdowns. However, Webb was responsible for two turnovers and minus-1 yard rushing. Look for Webb to run more, as K-State will try to run over Marshall.

Quarterback Bernie Morris will start against K-State after throwing for 215 yards and three touchdowns off the bench in Marshall's 36-24 come-from-behind win over William and Mary. Preseason Doak Walker Award candidate Ahmad Bradshaw is a strong, versatile running back capable of making big plays, like his 52-yard touchdown reception against William and Mary.

DEFENSE

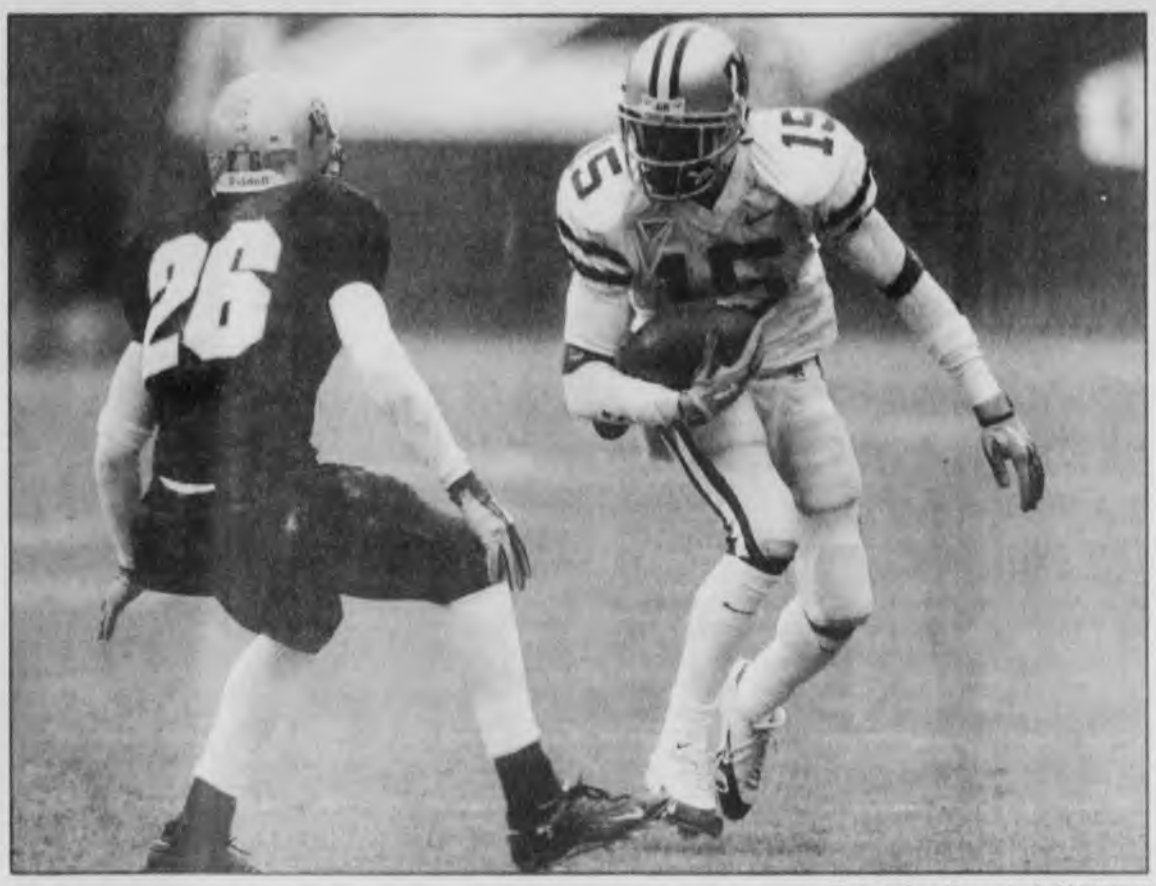
The K-State defense surrendered 236 yards to Florida International, including just 82 yards rushing. Though the Golden Panthers scored 21 points, their two offensive scores came on drives of 16 and 15 yards. Maurice Mack, in his first game at weakside linebacker after switching from safety, tied for the team high in tackles with Brandon Archer, with five stops and a forced fumble. The Wildcat defense also forced three turnovers, and showed more attitude.

William and Mary quarterback Mike Potts torched the Thundering Herd defense to the tune of 204 yards passing, and let's not forget that if it weren't for a 70-yard fumble return for a touchdown late in the third quarter, William and Mary could have pulled off the upset. Strong safety Curtis Keyes led Marshall with 13 tackles and a forced fumble in the season opener, while his partner, free safety Chris Royal, recorded six tackles, a sack, two forced fumbles and a fumble recovery.

SPECIAL TEAMS

Return man Jermaine Moreira showed why he could be the playmaker on special teams the Wildcats sorely missed last year, as he had 83 yards on punt returns against Florida International. His 67-yard punt return in the third quarter set up a two-yard touchdown run by Thomas Clayton on the Wildcats' second drive of the half. Placekicker Jeff Snodgrass showed a strong leg, consistently kicking the ball out of the end-zone on his kickoffs, and was a perfect 2-for-2 on field goals.

It is doubtful Marshall has as much speed on special teams as K-State does. Marshall's statistics on special teams are average, nothing outstanding. The Thundering Herd average 20.2 yards per kickoff return and allow 25.2 yards to their opponents. Marshall only averages 33.2 yards per punt, yet William and Mary failed to return a punt last week. Placekicker Ian O'Connor has already missed a field goal and an extra point this season, which could be trouble in a close game.



PREDICTION

Both teams appeared to struggle in their respective season openers, but a closer look will show Marshall had a much harder time dispatching of Division 1-AA William and Mary than K-State did of Florida International. Marshall actually trailed 24-23 late in the third quarter, at home, and only a fourth quarter touchdown made the score look worse than it actually was. Meanwhile, the Wildcats never trailed against the Golden Panthers, and the outcome was never in doubt. K-State pounded out 21 first downs to Florida International's 10. Also, the Golden Panthers were aided by five K-State turnovers, including a blocked punt for a touchdown. K-State could have easily won by 30 instead of 14. K-State is simply the better team on paper. There is also the revenge factor. The 2003 home loss to Marshall still boils the blood of the Wildcats, and they would love nothing more than to return the favor at Marshall. While K-State is a young team playing its first road game, look for the Wildcats' speed, size and attitude to prevail.

Michael Ashford | COLLEGIAN

Cats have shot at revenge

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The play still haunts Davin Dennis like a bad nightmare.

It was Sept. 20, 2003, and sixth-ranked K-State was losing 27-20 at home to Marshall. The Wildcats had driven the length of the field, and were six yards from scoring the potential game-tying touchdown.

But quarterback Jeff Schwinn's pass to Dennis at the goal line with no time left slipped through Dennis' hands and fell to the turf, setting off a Marshall celebration in KSU Stadium.

"It was a real tough pill to swallow," Dennis said. "It just so happened that the game kind of laid in my hands at the end, but I didn't make the play, and it was painful, but we had to move on."

Dennis and the rest of the Wildcats insist they have moved on from the loss.

But on Saturday, K-State will get the chance to redeem itself, as the Wildcats travel to Huntington, W.Va., for a rematch with the Thundering Herd.

Fullback and team captain Victor Mann said the game in 2003 is in the past, and the Wildcats can't dwell on what they can't control.

"A lot of people talk about the game a couple years ago, but it doesn't matter," Mann said. "This is a new year, a new team, both teams are new, so we are just going to be prepared and ready to play."

K-State and Marshall are coming off season-opening home wins in which neither team dominated opponents perceived to be much weaker.

The Wildcats defeated Florida International 35-21, but the Golden Panthers closed the margin to seven points in the third quarter on a blocked punt for a touchdown.

Marshall struggled against Division 1-AA William and Mary last Thursday, and trailed the Tribe 24-23 late in the third quarter, before Marshall pulled away for the 36-24 win.

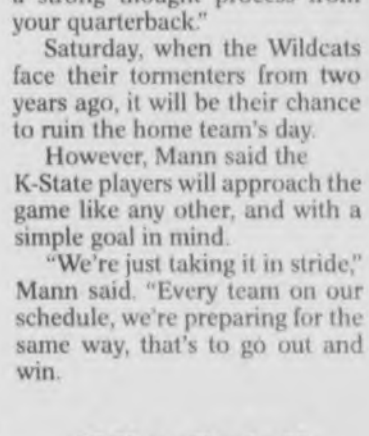
The Herd are in their first year under coach Mark Snyder after Bob Pruett retired after last season.

However, K-State coach Bill Snyder said while he has seen similarities to what Marshall ran in 2003, the Herd will do some things on Saturday not seen on film, because of the new staff.

"The offense has the same remnants," Snyder said. "But there's no doubt that there will be things that will be different from when we played them two years ago. We can run ourselves silly looking at Ohio State tape and looking at this year's Marshall, and looking at previous years' Marshall, last year, and looking at our game before."

Quarterback Allen Webb is coming off a 161-yard, two-touchdown passing performance against Florida International he called "mediocre."

Snyder said he expects Webb to improve this weekend, despite the difficulty in preparation.



"It's just in the natural progression of moving from one game to the next," Snyder said. "I think the difficult thing is the fact that still, it's an early season game, there's a change in the coaching staff, there's a number of different things. That takes a strong thought process from your quarterback."

Saturday, when the Wildcats face their tormenters from two years ago, it will be their chance to ruin the home team's day.

However, Mann said the K-State players will approach the game like any other, and with a simple goal in mind.

"We're just taking it in stride," Mann said. "Every team on our schedule, we're preparing for the same way, that's to go out and win.

Cats take aim at Marshall QB

Defense looks to produce more quarterback pressure, sacks

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A solid defensive performance – only allowing 236 yards of total offense – left K-State fans with questions as they left KSU Stadium after the Wildcats' 35-21 victory over Florida International last Saturday.

Without returning sack leader Scott Edmonds, whose status with the team remains in doubt after he failed to suit up for in the season-opener, the line was unable to record a sack or put consistent pressure on Golden Panther quarterback Josh Padrick.

Defensive end Tearrius George said the Golden Panthers' offensive line was better than a some Big 12 lines he has faced.

"I think they had a very underrated line," George said. "A lot of people thought it wasn't as good as it was when they only gave up eight sacks all of last year, but it's going to be real important every game to get to the quarterback. That sets up our secondary for plays and helps out our linebackers also."

The Wildcats finished with a total of 21 sacks last season, ninth in the Big 12 Conference. In return, K-State had one of its worst seasons in the history of the program, allowing a school-record 201.4 passing yards per game to go with 30.6 points per game.

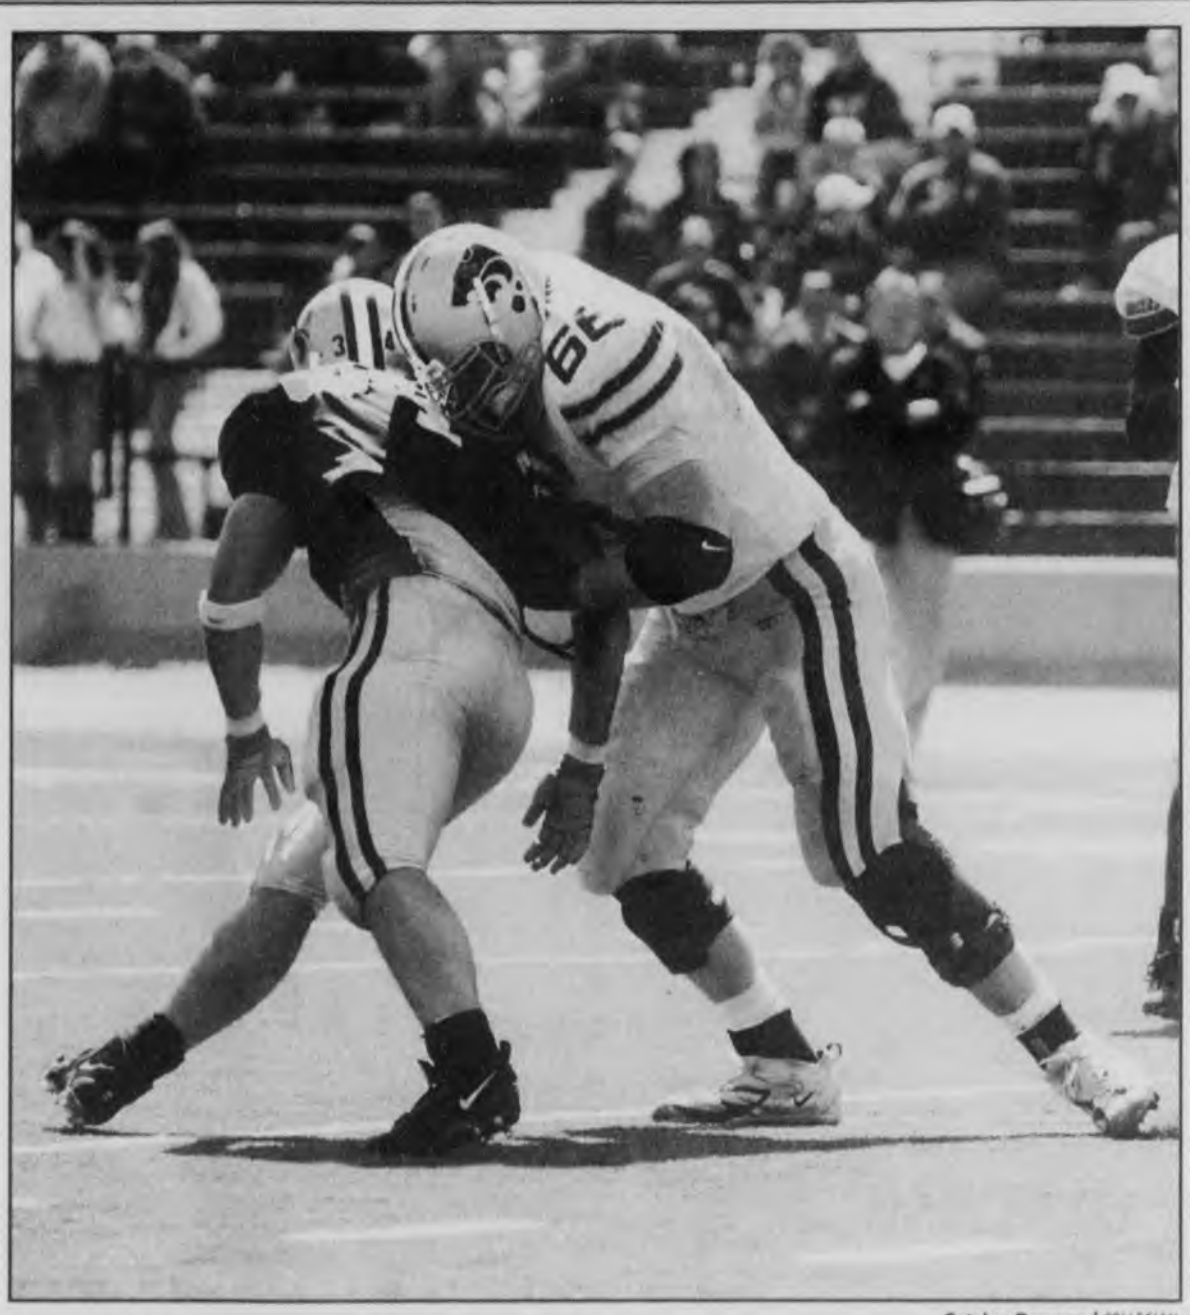
Linebacker Maurice Mack said the defense was trying to get to Padrick, but any time the Wildcats got any pressure, Padrick would quickly get rid of the ball.

"The FIU quarterback didn't like that much pressure in his face," Mack said. "If there was, he threw it real quick and we didn't get an opportunity to get a sack or two. Hopefully, we'll keep continuing to work on our pass rushes, and I feel we'll get two or three in our game on Saturday."

Saturday, the Wildcat defense will face a Marshall team that used a dual-quarterback system against season-opening foe William and Mary.

Quarterbacks Bernie Morris and Jimmy Skinner combined to finish with more than 300 yards passing and 65 percent passing efficiency in the Thundering Herd's 36-24 home win over the Tribe.

"Hopefully, we'll keep continuing to work on our pass rushes, and I feel we'll get two or three in our game on Saturday."



Maurice Mack
LINEBACKER

K-State's starters on defense this weekend against the Thundering Herd combined to finish with a total of seven sacks last season. Senior Derek Marso, who is the backup to redshirt-freshman Alphonso Moran at right defensive tackle, is the Wildcats leading returner in sacks with four.

Snyder said he was satisfied with the play of Moran and fellow starting tackle Quintin Echols against Florida International, and also with the physical play of the line.

However, Snyder said as the season goes on, the opponents are going to be tougher.

"I thought the interior two played physically well, but as we progress through the course of the season, the opponent will become more and more physical as well," Snyder said.

Offensive line gains experience

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The young K-State offensive line finally got what it needed last Saturday – actual game experience.

In the Wildcats' (1-0) 35-21 victory against Florida International, four of the five offensive linemen made their first career start in a purple uniform, and went on to impress coach Bill Snyder with their effort after a shaky first half.

"I thought we got better as the game progressed," Snyder said. "It sends a message that they were trying to get adjusted and they seemed to have done exactly that."

The combination of senior tackle Jeromey Clary, sophomore guard John Hafferty, sophomore center Jacob Voegeli, redshirt-freshman guard Matt Boss and junior tackle Greg Wafford got off to a slow start in the first half, as the Wildcats gained only 149 yards of total offense, including just 81 yards rushing.

"I think as the game went on, they got a better feel for each other and responded pretty well to a very nondescript first half and not very effective first half," Snyder said. "But a lot of that, I wouldn't thrust it off on our offensive line. I don't think they were bad in the first half at all."

In the second half, the offensive line came together and helped the offense gain 258 yards of total offense and allowed only one sack on junior quarterback Allen Webb.

The next test for the offensive line will be the Marshall Thundering Herd (1-0) in Huntington, W.Va., on Saturday.

Although the Wildcats face a Marshall defense that allowed 359 yards of total offense in the Herd's season-opening win against William and Mary, Clary, who will be making his 27th consecutive start on Saturday, said there are still areas the linemen need to work on.

"I think at times we passed," Clary said when asked to give the unit a grade. "But after watching the film, I think there's a lot of room for improvement. I don't think any of us are afraid of that. We have a good foundation to work off of."

Wafford, who moved from right guard to right tackle, said the linemen can only go up from the Florida International game.

"From where we were on Saturday, we just have to keep working and do the best we can," he said.

sound like a majority of people aren't comfortable with the military and our role," Behan said. "But a large percentage of the public do support you, regardless of your mission."

Norman's husband served in the military for many years, and Harsh said it makes her very thankful for her surroundings. Other family members of Harsh died in military operations, and that deeply influences her today, she said.

"My parents are very patriotic, and with Operation Yellow Ribbon, we wanted to counteract the negative military things on the news," she said. "That's what really lit the fire from under us, to continue what we do."

For Behan, the support is something she needs to keep going.

"It definitely increases your morale, certainly knowing that people are there for you," Behan said.

Behan also said even some smaller things, like "support your troops" magnets and bumper stickers keep her motivated.

"It's just nice to know that you're appreciated," she said. "People need to support their troops."

Sept. 11 influences evolving language

By Tessa French
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Language is an evolution. Some meanings change with time, but others are reshaped or created by extraordinary events.

"Languages always change," Carol Russell, linguistics instructor, said. "New words are added and some words are changed or even forgotten. Sometimes the new words become so commonplace we forget the original reason they were added to our lexicon in the first place."

Since Sept. 11, the English language has received small alterations. Words like "al-Qaeda," "Osama bin Laden" and "Patriot Act" are now included in dictionaries.

The definition of the noun "9/11" at www.dictionary.com is "the day in 2001 when Arab suicide bombers hijacked United States airliners and used them as bombs."

"Never has a simple mention of a date, other than the Fourth of July, brought the same response and memories to Americans as 9/11," Russell said.

Words added to dictionaries reflect society and its attitudes. Certain events make people use language in different ways, and once the language looks permanent, it is entered into dictionaries.

"I'm interested in not only the words that are entered, but the attitudes that are associated with them," Naomi Wood, associate professor of English, said. "Like 'ground zero' – we use the word now, and the way we use it shows our thoughts toward political issues. People's reactions are different."

In the New Encarta Webster Dictionary, the word "September 10th" has been added. This adjective is defined as "so petty, shallow or outmoded as to be irrelevant."

"The words being entered into the dictionary since 9/11 is an example of how we can't have a fixed language," Wood said. "It is always evolving, and it's a challenge to keep up with word meanings.

"9/11 used to mean an emergency indicator, and now, depending on who is providing the definition or using the word, it can

State celebration

Seven-year-old Kyle Riffel, Tampa, Kan., checks out his new Kansas state quarter he received during the launch ceremony. The new quarter features a grazing buffalo on a mound of grass and a cluster of sunflowers.

Kansas Governor Kathleen Sebelius speaks to the crowd at the Kansas State Fairgrounds grandstand about the new Kansas state quarter, part of the 50 State Quarter Program, at the official coin launch Friday morning in Hutchinson, Kan. The new quarter was officially launched on the first day of the Kansas State Fair.

Thousands attend ceremony releasing Kansas quarter

By Steven Doll
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

HUTCHINSON, Kan. – Hannah Smith, Hutchinson, Kan., looked at her quarter with joy as one of the first to receive a newly unveiled Kansas quarter.

The seven-year-old said she loves to collect state quarters.

"I have my own collection," Smith said. "I have millions."

Because she was under 18, she got her quarter for free.

Smith was one of the thousands who attended the release of the Kansas quarter Friday morning.

The Kansas quarter was the 34th in the nation, as Kansas was the 34th state to join the Union. Within the next 10 weeks, about 600 billion Kansas quarters will be produced.

Governor Kathleen Sebelius said she was proud of the quarter.

"The quarter celebrates our state's past and represents the heritage and traditions of our state," she said.

The design of the quarter – a buffalo standing on a mound of grass in front of a cluster of sunflowers – was voted on by high school students from across the state.

"The uttermost important part was to involve the children," Anita Wolgast, Kansas Coin Ceremony Planning Committee chair, said. "They're the future of this state."

The other choices were designs featuring a statue of an Indian pointing his bow skyward resembling the statue atop of the state Capital, a single large sunflower and a sunflower bordered by wheat.

Deena Horst, Kansas Coin Commission chair, said the voting for the coin gave them voting experience.

"It got them involved in the voting process and it showed them that their vote really did make a difference," she said.

Horst said she believes Kansas is the only state where students selected the design in the quarter.

After the design of the coin was announced on May 6, 2004, and molded by the United States Mint, it was unveiled as a part of the celebrations at the Kansas State Fair.

With a packed grandstand for the quarter release, David Lebryk, acting director for the United States Mint said this was one of the largest crowds for a coin launch yet.

"We had 7,000 in Minnesota," he said as he looked over the crowd in the grandstand. "I'm guessing there are at least that many, if not more here today."

For some who went to the quarter release, it was their first time to see the quarter.

"I think they're beautiful," Rhonda Hawkins, Erie, Kan., said. " I think it's a good symbol that represents Kansas very well."

Ceremony sponsor Central Bank and Trust brought $100,000 worth of quarters in rolls and $25,000 in commemorative sets.

For some, it was a day to show their pride of being a Kansan.

"I think it's a really neat thing because it's a symbol we can hold to and everybody is going to know when they see it, it's Kansas," Jeanie Watson, McPherson, Kan., said.

Anime films show horror, comedy

By Adrianne DeWeese

K-State students showed animation is not just for children, as the Anime and Manga Society graced the K-State Student Union's Little Theater for a film Festival Saturday and Sunday.

About 75 members watched 11 anime movies over the course of the festival, then voted on four to watch during the semester at weekly meetings.

"I prefer to be surprised when we watch them at the meetings," she said.

Collectibles show brings back memories, showcases rare, valuable playing cards, coins

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Bryce Skaggs collected baseball cards as a kid.

But he recalled many memories when went to the Manhattan Town Center this weekend.

The mall had a card and collectible show this weekend, featuring several vendors in the business of selling highly prized collectable items.

From trading cards valuable enough to be kept in glass cases to coins and comic books, attendees could find a variety of collectable objects to either gaze at or purchase.

Randy Cook, owner and host of www.TalkinSports2000.com Network, located in Kansas City, Mo., had a display with playing cards dating back to 1887.

"I held the most valuable card in the world," he said. This card would be the Honus Wagner T-206 Tobacco Card from 1909. It is worth $1.275 million, he said.

He also wore one of three known Babe Ruth pinstripe shirts when he emceed a ceremony with Ruth's family in New York.

Andy Shorten, sophomore in construction science, said he collected cards when he was little and looked at the cards offered at the booths.

"I still have them," he said, referring to the cards he collected years ago.

Mike Parhomek, Topeka resident, also had a booth offering more regional playing cards.

"I have Royals, Chiefs, KU and K-State," he said.

He didn't deal with the more valuable cards some of the other vendors did, he said.

Skaggs, freshman in business, was attending the card show with his wife and two children.

Although he didn't know the card show was going on, he was pleased to find it at the mall this weekend, he said.

He said he saw some Gulf War cards at one booth that weren't selling for very much, so he doesn't believe the ones he still has are very valuable.

Nonetheless, he enjoyed himself at the show.

"It's nostalgia, memory lane kind of stuff," he said.

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Students to restore tusk

Students at Wichita State University will soon restore a mammoth tusk that was unearthed by crews working on a freeway construction project. Student volunteers are expected to begin working on the tusk Sept. 20 in a secure, glass-paneled room at Exploration Place.

Victim's daughter sues

The daughter of serial killer Dennis Rader's victim Marine Hedge won a $250,000 default judgment against him Friday in the first of nine lawsuits filed by families. Judge Timothy Lahey granted the maximum allowable under Kansas law in the lawsuit filed by Carolyn Hook in the 1985 death of her mother.

Volunteers remember

Volunteers on Sunday slowly read the names of each of the 40 passengers and crew aboard hijacked United Airlines Flight 93 as peals from two bells marked the fourth anniversary of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

Families mourn 9/11 victims

Family members place flowers in a pool of water in the footprint of the north tower of the former World Trade Center during ceremonies marking the fourth anniversary of the Sept. 11 attacks.

Gary Hershorn
REUTERS

The siblings of the victims of Sept. 11 read their loved ones' names to a crowd at Ground Zero Sunday. The ceremony took four hours, the time it took to read 2,749 names. As names were read, mourners went down to a reflecting memorial pool at the floor of the site. The water became filled with red, orange and yellow roses that families placed as they said dedications to lost relatives. The ceremony paused for moments of silence at 8:46, 9:03, 9:59 and 10:29 a.m. The times at which the jetliners crashed and the towers collapsed.

SUSPECT RELEASED FROM ARUBA IN MISSING TEEN CASE

Joran van der Sloot, suspect in the appearance of Natalee Holloway, was released Monday. Van der Sloot left Aruba to attend college in Holland. He has admitted to spending the evening with Holloway the night before her disappearance, but denied any involvement. Prime Minister Nelson Oduber said the investigation "will not cease."

FORMER TEACHER PLEADS GUILTY IN EMBEZZLEMENT CASE

Wayne Kruse, former head of the Lawrence teachers union pleaded guilty to stealing nearly $100,000. He entered the plea Tuesday to one count each of theft and forgery. Forgery count was later dropped as part of plea agreement. The money was embezzled from the Lawrence Education Association. Sentencing was set for Oct. 3. Although Kansas sentencing calls for probation in these cases, prosecutors said they will ask that Kruse be sent to prison.

EPA TESTS CONFIRM BACTERIA IN LA. FLOODWATER

The first round of water testing in New Orleans by the Environmental Protection Agency confirmed Wednesday that the floodwater is risky even for skin contact. Tests concluded that levels E. coli and markers for sewage contamination and lead are present in the water. However, EPA administrator Stephen L. Johnson said they don't know what else is in the water.

SADDAM'S LAWYER DENIES CONFESSION

Saddam Hussein's lawyer, Khalil Dulaimi, denied that Hussein confessed to authorizing the deaths of more than 180,000 Kurds. Dulami responded Thursday to Iraqi President Jalal Talabani's remarks that Hussein admitted to the deaths in the late 1980s. Talabani also said Hussein tried to assassinate him at least 20 times. Hussein and the other seven members of his regime are to stand trial on Oct. 19.

COUPLE FACES PRISON TIME FOR PLANTED FINGER

A Nevada couple pleaded guilty Friday to charges that they planted a human finger in a bowl of Wendy's chili. Anna Ayala, 39, and Jaime Placencia, 43, face up to 10-13 years in prison for conspiring to file a false claim and attempted grand theft. Wendy's International Inc. said the scheme cost the company $2.5 million in lost sales. Evidence later revealed the finger had not been cooked and the finger was later identified as Placencia's coworkers who lost it in an industrial accident.

BOMB EXPLODES IN TRINIDAD

A bomb exploded behind a Kentucky Fried Chicken in Port-of-Spain, Trinidad on Saturday. No one was hurt in the explosion, which came from a metal trash bin. It was located in a trash can inside the restaurant, but a worker took the trash out before it exploded, assistant police commissioner Glen Roach said. The KFC reopened several hours later. This is the third bombing in the last two months.

Alpaca owners bring animals to county fairgrounds

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Alpacas ruled the day at the Riley County Fairgrounds in CiCo Park Saturday.

Many came to view the unusual animals, that produce superior fibers, Bonnie Samuel of the Kansas Alpaca Company of Ottawa, said.

"There is a limited supply in the U.S.," Samuel said.

Kristin Patton, assistant professor in pathology, said alpacas were imported from Peru in the 1930s.

She said most of them were imported to California and Oregon. However, the alpaca popularity ended after there was a ban on importation of foreign animals, until the ban was lifted in 1984.

Alpaca are valuable for their wool, which is used in fiber production.

The alpaca was imported about the same time as the ostrich and the original cost for an alpaca was around $90,000.

In Peru, alpacas were used for meat and fiber. They are related to the llama, which were used as pack animals, and the vicuna, which is the smallest of the cousins, and the guanacos. They are all members of the camelid family.

Both the vicuna and the guanacos are wild animals, and originate from South America.

Patton brought her five-year-old daughter to the alpaca show to let her see live animals.

"I just think they're really cool," Patton said.

She said with her position in pathology, she couldn't show her daughter live animals much, so she brought her to the alpaca show.

Sally and Jay Brandon, owners of The Shepherd's Mill, Inc. of Phillipsburg, Kan., were also at the show, displaying the products made of alpaca wool.

"We're Kansas' only fiber processing company," Sally Brandon said.

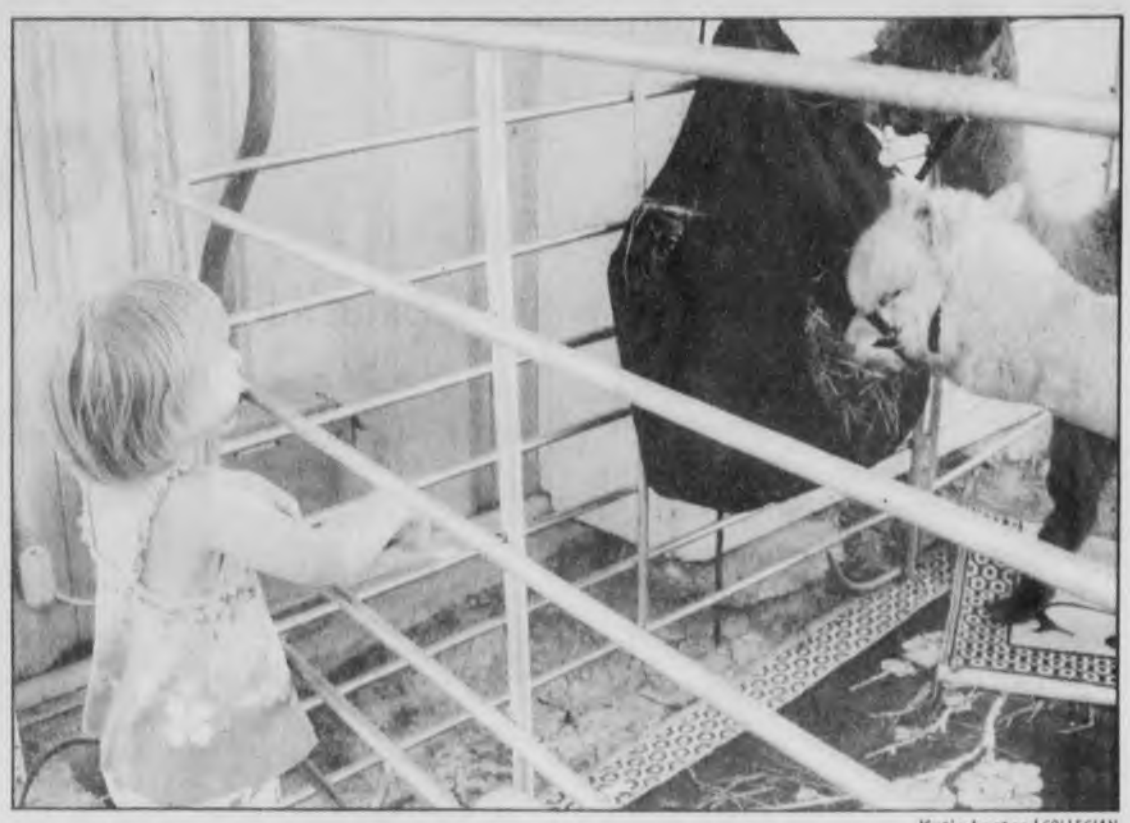
They take raw alpaca fiber and create yarn and other finished goods, she said.

Nancy Sines, co-owner of Cedar Hollow Alpacas of Hiawatha, serves Missouri and surrounding states. She travels to display her and her husband's alpacas, but she doesn't like to travel too much for the alpacas sake, she said.

The alpaca owners in attendance try to limit traveling with the alpacas.

Many claimed the alpacas tend to get stressed with too much travel, and it is hard on the animals.

"A stressful alpaca can have health issues," Sally Brandon said.



Although health of the animals is always a concern, Sally Brandon said she believes the risks outweigh the benefits.

"Alpacas are very therapeutic, very relaxing to be around," she said.

Owning alpacas has been very educational for Brandon and her grandchildren. Her teenage granddaughter, Katie Gruber, is her assistant barn manager.

Gruber weighs the animals, helps with records and presents them.

Helping with the alpacas has made her granddaughter decide to be a veterinarian and attend the College of Veterinary Medicine.

Katie Lester | COLLEGIAN

Vanessa Klimek, 3, tries to make the alpacas come closer to her so she can pet them Saturday at the Riley County Fairgrounds as part of the regional alpaca days. K-State College of Veterinary Medicine students attended the event to learn about the animals and their care.

Human rights movie shown

By Dayne Logan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students gathered in Coffman Commons Sunday night to watch "Hotel Rwanda," the first film in a human rights series shown by Amnesty International.

"Hotel Rwanda" is a film about a hotel manager who risks his life by sheltering thousands of refugees in his hotel while genocide breaks out in his country.

Students seemed to respond very positively to the movie.

"It was a very good movie," John Rader, junior in accounting, said.

"I wish it wasn't the same time as Monday night football, but I'm glad I saw it. I will definitely be at the other ones."

Kate Romanova, president of Amnesty International group 254, said the series' aim is to raise students' awareness of human rights and draw attention to national and worldwide current events.

The series, Movies on the Grass, is cosponsored by several local organizations and will run through Oct. 16. The next film, "Oil on Ice" will be at 7:30 p.m. on Oct. 18 in Coffman Commons, located just south of Hale Library. The films will continue every Sunday for another four weeks.

Romanova said the films are all considered controversial, but she said she hopes students "will be touched by the movies and will get interested in human rights all over the world."

TO THE POINT

Human rights should be a concern for all

Upon seeing the racially charged film "The Birth of a Nation," President Woodrow Wilson said of movies, "This is history written in lightning."

His sentiments are applicable even today, on the rare occasion when the movie industry summons enough courage to depart from the summer blockbuster script and create a film such as "Hotel Rwanda."

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Shown near Hale Library on Sunday night as part of the "Movies on the Grass" series, "Hotel Rwanda" is based around the 1994 genocide in the east African nation that led to the killing of more than 800,000 Tutsi in 100 days.

Several human rights-related films will be shown in successive weeks, educating people about real-world issues directly related to current events.

In Sudan, thousands have been killed and nearly one million people have been displaced to neighboring Chad. Genocide continues in places like the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Liberia, Zimbabwe and Algeria.

This is the world in which we all live, and for that reason students should care.

Wilson was right about the movie industry's ability to impact people. Movies such as "Hotel Rwanda" infiltrate popular culture, creating an awareness for serious issues that might otherwise not be possible.

Poverty defined

Webster's leaves something out; poor must work to raise economic status

LUCAS MADDY

Washington, D.C., America's shining tribute to capitalism and independence. A city built for the sole purpose of maintaining and advancing the United States. Where sons of the Revolution, Mother Freedom's offspring, gather year round to engender upon their kin and constituents the new, improved and better.

Unbeknownst to the majority of her children, Mother Freedom gave birth to another: a child named poverty that accounts for one of every five Washingtonians. The states themselves are close behind. Poverty's visage has changed through the years, and a new face is present. A face barely seen through the fingers of a hand reaching for generosity.

The latest census reports find 12.7 percent of Americans, about 35 million people, below the poverty line. For perspective, of Kansas's total population of 2.7 million, 10 percent are impoverished. Poverty's connotation is wretched. It brings to mind mal-nourished children in South Africa and rhymes with "dirty". It bred sympathy in my heart until, as a senior in high school, I found myself included.

At the bottom of a scholarship application, I noticed the amount my mother filled in for net income fell about a pen of cattle short of the poverty line. Odd, because I never lacked a bed or went hungry. Ashamed, I inquired if we were on welfare, at which she laughed and responded "no". Depending on someone else was not an option. My siblings and I witnessed this as our mother worked more than 100 hours per week at four different jobs to keep things together while Dad recovered from surgery. Belief in family, and hope that conditions would improve, enabled this absurd work ethic. To see such dedication and effort classified as poverty is an insult.

Poverty wears FUBU and Nike, but not a nametag because poverty doesn't work. Poverty has a cell phone, but refuses to call and ask for work. Poverty collects empty beer cans to sell in order to purchase alcohol. Poverty needs re-defining. "To lack the means of providing material needs or comforts" says wise owl Webster. Lets put these words under a microscope in order to reveal numerous ambiguities.

"The means of providing" are nothing more than a heartbeat and strong back. Other than the physically disabled and mentally handicapped, most in our proud union are capable of ditch digging or handing out french fries. The low rung on the ladder perhaps, but a rung nonetheless – one with a view of the top.

Some people, largely those victims of substantial net worth and haunting memories of moral insufficiency, our fortunate sons and daughters feel obligated to "improve" conditions for the lower class of American inhabitants. Giving what can be earned creates dependence.

Homeless shelters and food pantries are built with warm hearts and good intentions but seldom succeed in terms of rehabilitating downtrodden vagrants. Broken spirits seize an opportunity to lay their troubles on another. Pride disappears, along with motivation. The lack of a goal, dream or god to believe in leads to abandoning hope. Replacing "means" with "desire".

Our ancestors motivated themselves to cross a murderous ocean, hoping to believe what they chose. We, the prime stock of the world's most intrepid believers, now spoon-feed more than one-tenth of our once-motivated citizens. Humans begin life frail and weak, with fewer instincts than most mammals. Initiative and desire brought us to the top of the food chain. Some refuse to help maintain this position, iceberging the human race back down the ladder.

Redefinition – life in poverty: To lack the desire of providing material needs or comforts.

5th year seniors can fully savor college experience

CHRISTINA FORSBERG

On campus, among classmates and mentors, I've heard a lot of discussion recently about students staying in school longer than four years.

Students, in particular, have expressed some mixed reactions. Yet, many seem unwilling to admit they might need to stay, at least, an extra year to complete their educations.

Where did this shameful feeling that students associate with becoming a fifth-year senior come from? Some of it may stem from high school, where kids feared being the slow learners in their classes. My high school math teacher used to joke, "If you don't pass my class, I guess you're planning on becoming a super senior."

Well, this isn't high school. A student doesn't get "held back a grade" for not completing a degree. Students shouldn't be embarrassed to become a "super senior" at the post-secondary level.

After all, why not attend school for five years? While many are in a hurry to get into the "real world," there are plenty of students who'd rather take college life at a sure and steady pace.

If anything, it allows more time for students who don't know what to major in to explore academic options and leaves less room to regret missed opportunities.

Some programs even require students to stay five years to graduate. Most architecture and engineering students, for example, have to stick around at least five years to complete their degrees.

Other students have to stay due to circumstances such as limited class space and wait lists.

Of course, there are other circumstances where students prefer to graduate as quickly as possible. Students intending to enter the medical field or earn a master's or doctorate degree typically prefer to complete a bachelor's degree within four years or less because they know they have much more school ahead.

In an extra year of undergraduate education, students could diversify their educations, fully focus on more difficult classes, take more time for jobs and internships, get more involved on campus and in the community, have a better opportunity to take time to study abroad and even complete multiple degrees.

College is an experience meant to be savored. In this environment, learning and preparation for the "real world" occurs on and off campus.

If five years leaves you better prepared to make a difference in the world, then that's how long you should be here.

The world is going to judge us by what we have done with the education we acquired here, not by whether it took another year to earn the degree

How many times have students dreaded hearing the cliché, "College, eh? Those are some of the best years of your life."

If that proves to be true, then I'd opt for one more "best year of my life."

CAMPUS FOURUM | 395-4444 -or- fourum@spub.ksu.edu

The Campus Fourum is the Collegian's anonymous call-in system. The Fourum is edited to eliminate vulgar, racist, obscene and libelous comments. The comments are not the opinion of the Collegian nor are they endorsed by the editorial staff.

To the guy on the fourth floor of the library looking at porn: Go watch girls pee at home, not where people are trying to study.

To whoever asked what the deal was and it's 90 degrees outside and people are still wearing sweatshirts, you should try working in our building, where it's more like seven degrees. There is obviously no budget on the air conditioning systems.

When you say the word hick, you had better say that with some respect in your voice. Because without us "hicks" you wouldn't be eating!

For a good time call 395-4444.

Ford Hall residents — who the hell set off the fire alarm at 12:30 a.m.? Nobody does that.

You know, for once I would like to open the Collegian and not have to read about how bad President Bush is and women's vaginas. It's called variety people.

To the person who had a squirrel leave its baby gravy on your leg, why don't try kicking it away when it starts to hump. Pretty smart idea, huh?

So I just woke up and there is someone in my house I don't know, who are you?

Zach Eckels — you're a douche.

Berrison — stop eating your boogers.

So I lost my phone today in King Hall when I was changing my pants in the staircase. Whoever picked up my phone — will you please dial the last dialed call.

When Bush doesn't have an enemy to threaten he sure doesn't have much to say, does he?

You know what? Your Jeep may be really big, but my Toyota is more covered in mud.

I don't even know what a quail looks like.

I want my damn Sports Illustrated on Campus.

I think that it was al-Qaeda that sent Hurricane Katrina.

For the house on 817 Thurston, I'm sorry for pissing all over your refrigerator — I did have a full bladder of beer.

be patriotic."

Russell noted an irony in the date and its new meaning.

"I think it is interesting that we use 911 to call for assistance from our emergency medics and on that date we saw so many of them respond to the tragic events," she said.

Devon Hillyer, senior in business administration, said she hasn't thought about what changed in the English language since Sept. 11.

"But it's true, we use words now that meant something different or didn't exist before 9/11," she said.

Russell said the linguistic changes brought about by Sept. 11 are just an example that changes have occurred and will continue to occur.

"Talk of terrorism today is much like talk of communism of the 1950s and '60s," she said.

"I know from a linguistic standpoint, some words, which may be commonplace today, may not be 15 years from now."

ANIME | Film genre based on comic books versatile

Manga are Japanese comic books read from right to left. Anime starts as manga and – if it does well enough or becomes popular – it is often animated.

The festival also featured anime trivia, Dance Dance Revolution and a free raffle. Posters, videos and manga were available for purchase.

Bird said the artwork in Japanese anime contains animation suitable for all ages and concepts.

"I find it amazing that people can animate different plots," she said. "Also, the artwork in motion is intriguing."

Lu Bai, webmaster and sophomore in graphic design, said anime is fun, entertaining and educational.

"It exposes you to other cultures and customs," she said.

Jason Harper, secretary of KSU Anime and Manga Society and sophomore in art, said the animation first interested him, but now he is also interested in the story lines.

"Anime can do a lot more since it doesn't require props," he said. "The artists can make up whatever they want to happen."

Eric Domingo, senior in architectural engineering, joined the club on Friday but attended last year's festival. He said it is the range of genres that interests him.

"In America, cartoons are usually just comedy," Domingo said. "Anime is more diverse in its range of genres with horror, comedy and so many more."

'Adult Swim' shows, characters popular with students

By Matt Peterworth
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Television time

Family Guy
Sunday - Thursday 10:00 p.m.
Futurama
Monday - Thursday 10:30 p.m., Saturday 10:00 p.m.
Aqua Teen Hunger Force
Monday - Wednesday, 11:00 & 11:15 p.m.
Robot Chicken
Thursday 11:00 p.m., Sunday 10:30
Harvey Birdman, Attorney at Law
Thursday 11:15, Sunday 10:45

Adult Swim, the late-night programming offered on the Cartoon Network, has been making a splash with K-State students.

Every night, with the exception of Fridays, the programming, geared toward more mature audiences, airs from 10 p.m. to 4 a.m. The first hour consists of re-runs of "Family Guy" and "Futurama".

Jessie Boydston, former K-State student and current Manhattan resident, said she finds "Futurama" appealing because the main character, Fry, is "such a normal guy, but he's thrust into a surreal situation. He was a pizza delivery guy and now he's a thousand years in the future."

"Family Guy" has a variety of characters that are supposed to be an average family from Rhode Island.

Jennifer Peterson, senior in psychology, said she watches "Family Guy" for the baby of the family, Stewie, and his sense of humor.

Starting at 11 p.m., original "Adult Swim" programming begins.

"Aqua Teen Hunger Force," the 15-minute show featuring a belligerent shake, a floating box of french fries and a wad of meat all aptly named Master Shake, Frylock and Meatwad, airs twice on Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays.

Other popular shows on "Adult Swim" include "Harvey Birdman: Attorney at Law," "Sealab 2021," "Space Ghost Coast to Coast," and "Robot Chicken."

John Linder, senior in graphic design, said "Sealab 2021" "makes absolutely no sense and makes you ask, 'What the hell is going on?'"

It is a spoof of the 1972 cartoon series "Sealab 2020." The premise is that it is next year and there is a whole new crew for underwater colonization, and they all hate each other.

Harvey Birdman was once a lackluster superhero, but now he is a meager attorney at a big law firm. He is usually representing a side in a dispute between cartoon characters from other shows, such as Race Bannon and Doctor Quest after they are fighting for custody of Johnny Quest.

"Space Ghost Coast to Coast" stars another former superhero who is now a late-night talk show host on a space station, who interviews and argues with celebrities on earth. Recent guests include William Shatner, Dennis Miller and Willie Nelson.

"Robot Chicken" is a stop-motion animation show starring action figures as part of a sketch comedy group. Linder also likes this show because "it is totally random crap."

Jenny Yankey, junior in art, said she watches "Adult Swim" because she likes the quotes that come out of the shows.

"It provides me with quotes such as 'I have the strength of a bear who has the strength of two bears,' to use as an icebreaker," she said.

For those who can't get enough "Adult Swim," "Friday Night Fix" will begin, Sept. 16, on www.AdultSwim.com.

It will allow viewers to watch streaming episodes from seven or more shows every Friday night from 10 p.m. to 5 a.m.

Some shows will premiere on "Friday Night Fix" two nights before they air on the Cartoon Network for the first time.

TELEVISION PREMIERS

"Bones": Tuesdays at 7 p.m., premieres Sept. 13 on Fox

Forensic Anthropologist Dr. Temperance Brennan is often called on by the Los Angeles Police Department to help solve crimes when the only evidence remaining is her area of expertise — the victim's bones. This show is based on the real life of anthropologist and writer Kathy Reichs. (www.fox.com)

"Supernatural": Tuesdays at 8 p.m., premieres Sept. 13 on the WB network

Many years after their mother mysteriously died, Sam and Dean's father disappears while tracking the evil force he is convinced killed his wife. The brothers set off on a cross-country chase after finding their father's journal and they discover many dark and scary urban myths and legendary characters along the way. (www.thewb.com)

"The Reality Show": Tuesdays at 9:30 p.m. Premieres Sept. 13 on MTV

Andy Dick and a panel of reality-show stars judge 10 contestants competing for their own MTV reality show. Viewers also get to vote on who gets to go home each week. (www.mtv.com)

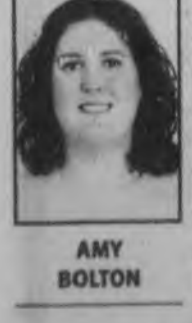
"Head Cases": Wednesdays at 8 p.m. on FOX, premieres Sept. 14

After suffering a nervous breakdown and spending three months in an in-patient treatment facility, former hotshot lawyer Jason is assigned an "out-patient buddy" by his therapist: underachiever lawyer Shultz, who suffers from explosive disorder. As the pair become friends, they help each other with work, life and mental sanity. (www.fox.com)

"Threshold": Fridays at 8 p.m. on CBS, premieres Sept. 16

A navy ship discovers a spacecraft from another planet in the middle of the ocean. Molly Ann Caffrey a team put together to make contact with the extraterrestrial beings and find out why they're on earth — and discover if the navy ship crew and the people of earth are safe. (www.cbs.com)

"Twins": Fridays at 7:30 p.m. on the WB network, premieres Sept. 16



It's brains versus beauty in this show about fraternal twins Mitchee, a genius engineer and Farrah, a model, who are the mirror images of their parents. Father Alan Arnold was an Army engineer who developed a special fabric that made a fantastic bra, and — he launched "Arnold Undergarments." Mother Lee was a lingerie model who met Alan at a lingerie show. Now they're handing the family business over to the twins, who have a hard time working together with their differences. Cruise's knowledge, expertise should be put to good use

AMY BOLTON

Tom Cruise for Surgeon General!

Well, maybe that's a bit extreme. After all, Tom is busy filming major action-adventure blockbusters co-starring robots and machines, and running around in a manic-depressive high declaring his undying love to a woman he barely knows.

But clearly he knows what he's talking about when it comes to the health of the American people, and that kind of knowledge and passion for helping others should be shared.

Cruise made headlines this summer for criticizing actress Brooke Shields, who took the antidepressant drug Paxil to treat postpartum depression after giving birth to her daughter, Rowan. Shields said she was so depressed and unhappy that she couldn't bond with her new daughter that she considered suicide as an escape.

Cruise blasted Shields not only for taking the medicine but also for sharing that information with the world and encouraging others to reach out for help.

He explained to the American people, via Matt Lauer and the "Today" show, that psychiatry is a "pseudo science" and that the "chemical imbalance," considered by most medical doctors to be the cause of depression, doesn't exist.

The doctors who prescribe Paxil, Xanax, Prozac and other antidepressants are trained professionals who have spent the better part of a decade in school studying these medicines, their benefits, side effects and how to treat the patients who need them.

But don't let the fact that Cruise dropped out of high school fool you. He told Lauer, "You don't know the history of psychiatry. I do," and promised voters (uh, I mean viewers) that he has studied the history of psychiatry. In an "Access Hollywood" interview, Cruise claimed he has helped many people come off their antidepressants.

Cruise has learned a lot about the "mis"-use of antidepressants through the Church of Scientology, where he is a membership recruiter (I mean member). Scientology, founded by science fiction writer L. Ron Hubbard, does not believe in psychology or psychiatry.

Cruise has been explaining to women that if they are suffering from postpartum depression after giving birth, they don't need to treat it with medicine, even though the American Medical Association, the Centers for Disease Control and the current Surgeon General all say mental health disorders are one of the biggest health problems of our times.

No, what these women need is vitamins and exercise.

When she felt no will to go on with life, instead of reaching out for help by going to therapy and taking antidepressants, Shields should have popped a couple Vitamin C's and gone for a jog around the block (even though many people suffering from depression can barely drag their butts out of bed.)

You don't need medicine to treat depression.

Tell that to Andrea Yates, the Texas woman who was suffering from untreated postpartum depression when she drowned her five children in a bathtub in 2001.

What about the millions of people who have been helped by psychiatry and antidepressants at some point in their life?

According to Cruise, they didn't solve any problems by seeing a doctor and getting medicine.

The medicine just masked the problem, and if they really want to fix their depression, they need to get off the antidepressants and start taking vitamins.

Clearly we need to get Cruise in a position where he can use his expertise to help the American people.

If nothing else, maybe we can lend him to China and he can solve that whole SARS problem.

Volleyball wins 2 out of 3 in weekend tourney

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State volleyball team won two out of three matches this weekend in the Varney's Kansas State Invitational, but couldn't pull off a victory in Saturday night's match against No. 5 Minnesota.

Senior outside hitter Agata Rezende paced the No. 24 Wildcats (8-1) with 20 kills, five digs and three block assists in K-State's 3-1 (30-25, 30-22, 26-30, 30-25) loss to the Golden Gophers. Juniors Joy Hamlin and Sandy Werner notched 12 and 10 kills, respectively. Sophomore setter Stacey Spiegelberg led the Wildcats with 51 assists, and added seven kills, six digs, two block assists and one service ace.

However, the collaborative effort was not enough to stop Minnesota's (6-1) 18 kills and .378 hitting percentage in the first game. In game two, the Golden Gophers kept K-State to a .078 hitting percentage.

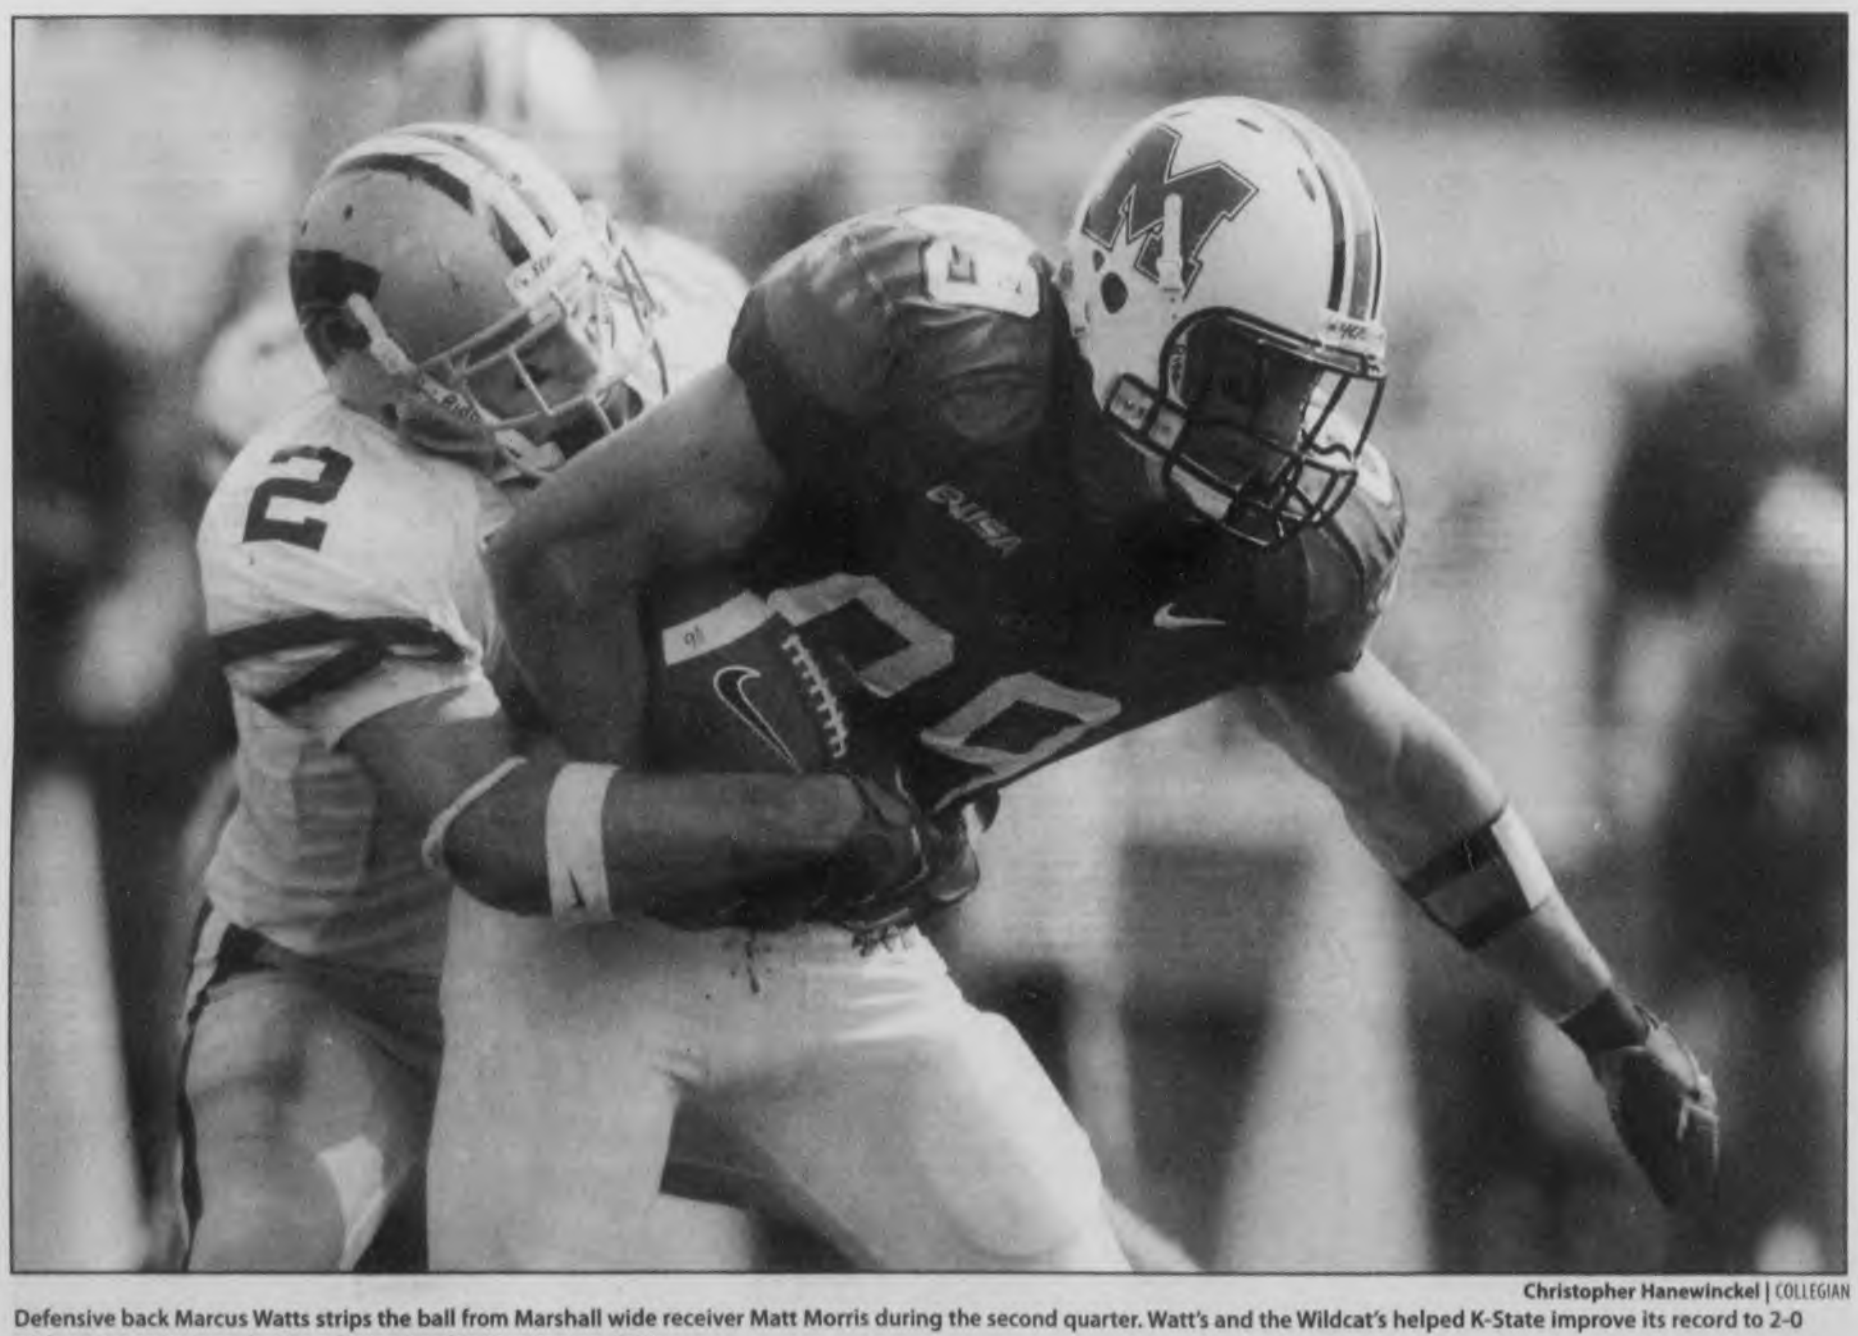
Game three proved to be a success for the Wildcats, as they hit .279 and produced 19 kills. Still, Minnesota redeemed themselves in game four with a .250 hitting percentage and 16 kills.

K-State had a better showing Saturday afternoon against Houston, defeating the Cougars 3-1 (28-30, 30-26, 30-22, 30-22) in K-State's second match of the invitational.

The win pushed K-State's record to 8-0, which matched the best start in school history with the 1988 team.

Redshirt-freshmen Jenny Jantsch and Megan Kroeker led the Wildcats in kills in game two with three and six, respectively. The tandem also established new career highs in kills and total attempts for the match. Jantsch notched 14 on 31 attempts, and Kroeker had a team-high 16 kills on 31 attempts.

"We started out kind of slow in the first game, but then really gained momentum in the next games," coach Suzie Fritz said of the match against Houston. "Jenny Jantsch was a big help."



On Friday night, K-State swept Florida State 3-0 (30-24, 30-17, 30-22). Redshirt-freshman Megan Farr ignited the Wildcats with career-highs of 11 kills, 14 total attacks and a hitting percentage of .714.

"There's a lot of things here and there, from an individual standpoint, where we've got to become a little better."

Bill Snyder | COACH

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Defensive back Marcus Watts strips the ball from Marshall wide receiver Matt Morris during the second quarter. Watt's and the Wildcat's helped K-State improve its record to 2-0 with a 21-19 win over the Thundering Herd in Huntington, W.Va.

McKinney comes through with late interception to beat Marshall

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

HUNTINGTON, W.Va. – K-State cornerback Justin McKinney became the Wildcats' savior Saturday, as his interception of Marshall quarterback Jimmy Skinner's pass with three seconds left gave the Wildcats the 21-19 victory over the Thundering Herd.

In a game where K-State's defense consistently made crucial stops when the Wildcats needed it most, none were bigger than McKinney's, which came with the Herd at the K-State 21-yard line, needing only a field goal to win.

With 8.5 seconds left, Marshall (1-1) decided to run one more play before attempting a field goal. Defensive tackle Quintin Echols tipped Skinner's pass at the line, which forced the ball to fly over the head of intended receiver Hiram Moore and into McKinney's arms.

"I just made a play when we really needed it," McKinney said afterwards.

The Wildcats (2-0) atoned for the 27-20 home loss in 2003 to the Herd, handing Marshall just its eighth home loss since Joan C. Edwards Stadium opened in 1991.

But for the second week in a row, turnovers and penalties hurt K-State's ability to score.

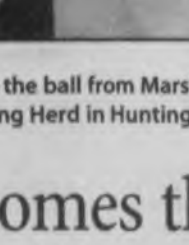
The Wildcats were penalized 10 times for 90 yards and had three turnovers, giving K-State eight turnovers in two games.

"It's obvious that it's a major concern," Snyder said on Sunday. "We've taken a ton of points off the board with turnovers and penalties – taken them off and put them on."

Defensively, K-State forced five turnovers, many at key points.

Safety Marcus Watts was in on two Marshall fumbles inside the K-State five-yard line. The first came at the K-State three with a minute left in the first half, when Watts stripped the ball from receiver Matt Morris, which linebacker Ted Sims recovered.

"The strip at the goal line, I made the wrong call, so I was out of position," Watts said. "I was in different coverage than I was supposed to be. I just came back and tried to make a play, and I did."



The defense also held Marshall to a field goal after Herd safety Geremy Rodamer returned an interception to the K-State five-yard line.

The Wildcats have a week off before facing North Texas at home Sept. 24, and Snyder said his team will focus on correcting little mistakes.

"There's a lot of things here and there, from an individual standpoint, where we've got to become a little better," Snyder said.

Defense steps up to challenge against Thundering Herd

HUNTINGTON, W.Va. - Luck was on K-State's side Saturday against Marshall.

MICHAEL ASHFORD

The Wildcats were lucky Marshall coach Mark Snyder ran one more play at the end of the game.

The Wildcats were lucky Thundering Herd quarterback Jimmy Skinner's pass was tipped at the line, which allowed cornerback Justin McKinney to intercept the pass to give K-State the 21-19 victory.

It's as simple as that right?

Not quite.

More than luck or a bone-headed play call, K-State's win was possible because the Wildcat defense simply made the plays when it counted.

K-State forced two Marshall fumbles inside the five-yard line, kept the Herd to a field goal on another goal-line stand and forced crucial turnovers time and time again.

"Overall, we did play quite well defensively against, what I think is a pretty decent Marshall football team offensively," K-State coach Bill Snyder said. "I thought it showed a great deal of character."

Sophomore safety Marcus Watts and junior cornerback Justin McKinney, in particular, produced defensive highlights that completely changed the outcome of the game.

On both fumbles inside the five-yard line, Watts was the guy who started the play by either stripping the ball or producing the tackle that led to the fumble.

McKinney forced another fumble, had two interceptions – including the one to seal the win for K-State – and tallied three tackles.

"I thought Justin did a nice job, besides the obvious interception," Snyder said. "He made some big plays in the ballgame."

The play of those two defenders, plus the play of the rest of the defense as a unit, proved something Saturday: the K-State defense has playmakers.

Let's face it, last year, K-State would probably have lost to Marshall.

Too often, the 2004 defense couldn't hold teams to field goals instead of touchdowns, or make the game-saving plays.

On Saturday, the Wildcat defense showed it has the ability to turn up the pressure and get the job done when it mattered most.

They may be young and they may make mistakes, but the K-State defenders can produce the plays the 2004 defense could not.

This fact alone could be the difference between a 4-7 season like 2004 and one closer to the 11-win, bowl-game seasons K-State fans are used to.

NFL | Chiefs open season with near shutout over Jets

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Kansas City Chiefs simply were hoping to improve one of the NFL's sorriest defenses, not open the season with the first shutout of the New York Jets in almost a decade.

Yet that's what they came within 29 seconds of doing. The Chiefs' revamped defense kept the Jets out of the end zone until the final half-minute Sunday en route to a 27-7 victory.

Larry Johnson rushed for 110 yards and two touchdowns on nine carries and Priest Holmes added 85 yards and a touchdown for a Kansas City offense that scored 17 points on its first three possessions.

The Chiefs' defense forced seven fumbles and recovered two. Chad Pennington was sacked three times. Backup Jay Fiedler enabled the Jets to avoid their first shutout since Dec. 24, 1995, when he hit Chris Baker on a 23-yard touchdown pass with 29 seconds to go.

MLB | Bonds to return to Giants' lineup tonight

SAN FRANCISCO — Barry Bonds will be activated from the disabled list Monday after being medically cleared to play by Dr. Lewis Yocum.

Bonds

Bonds, who hasn't played all season while recovering from three operations on his right knee since Jan. 31, would be available to resume his quest for the home run record when the Giants open a three-game series against first-place San Diego on Monday night at SBC Park.

The team said it consulted with Yocum, who recommended giving Bonds one more day as a precautionary measure in hopes of keeping him from further injuring the knee.

Winter energy prices to rise up to 52 percent from last year

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Hurricane Katrina hit New Orleans and surrounding areas, it affected a large area, impacting the natural gas supply. Now people must deal with the possibility of rising prices of natural gas.

Gina Penzig, senior representative of communications media for Westar Energy, said as far as electric utility, there may not be too large of an increase.

"Our resources are 95 percent coal and uranium," she said. "We will not be nearly as susceptible to price increase as say a company that uses natural gas."

Penzig said the company's energy rates are regulated and set by the state. They wouldn't be.able to increase them too high and pass costs on to consumers.

Al Walker, manager of communications for the Kansas Gas Service, said preliminary reports show natural gas may cost up to 52 percent more for home heating.

"That is already above what it was last winter," he said. "The aftermath of Hurricane Katrina has significantly impacted natural gas prices."

The Kansas Gas Service's strategy is to purchase gas during the warmer months and store it away for winter.

Walker said they will have enough gas to meet winter demands, but right now it is too early to tell what the exact prices will be.

The Senate Judiciary Committee heard opening statements Monday in the confirmation hearing of John Roberts, nominee for chief justice of the U.S. Supreme Court.

The 18 committee members described what they expected from the hearing. Senator Lindsey Graham, R-S.C., said the focus was on Roberts' own personal outlook on politics.

Roberts
FEDERAL JUDGE

"We're not here to talk about liberal philosophy or conservative philosophy, we're here to talk about you," he said during the hearing.

Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., said Roberts must fully answer questions about hot-button issues and ensure his positions are mainstream before earning Schumer's approval.

Both republicans and democrats are concerned with the appointment of the chief justice due to the permanence of the position when the court is likely to rule on abortion, privacy and other divisive issues in coming years.

"John Roberts, if he's confirmed, will be chief justice for a long time," John Fliter, associate professor of political science, said. "He could be there for 30 to 40 years."

Bush adjusted Robert's nomination from associate justice to chief justice after Chief Justice William Rehnquist died last week.

Three senators who are helping the administration with the appointment process, Dick Lugar, R-Ind.; Evan Bayh, D-Ind.; and John Warner, R-Va., spoke to the committee after the members finished their statements. Lugar and Bayh – both having the same home state – is not a coincidence, as Roberts grew up in Indiana.

Once the senators finished speaking, Roberts stood and was sworn in by the committee before beginning his opening statement.

Former Tennessee senator and current television star Fred Dalton Thompson is working for the White House, helping Roberts through the confirmation process.

During his statement, Roberts tried to ease left-wing fears about laws and precedents he would work to overturn if confirmed to the court.

"I come before this committee with no agenda, no platform," Roberts said.

Vet students gain early admission

Clay Adair, first-year vet-med student, showed his first calf in a 4-H competition in second grade. Lindsey Jones, also a first-year vet-med student, became interested in animals at a young age when she shadowed her aunt, a veterinary technician.

This fall, Adair and Jones, both 20, started at K-State's College of Veterinary Medicine with several younger students.

While respect and honor come with their early admission, so does the promise of hard work.

"You don't take naps anymore," Adair said.

Adair also said many questioned his decision to start professional school so early in his education.

"A lot of people think I'm not ready or doubt me," he said. "A lot of people think I'm crazy."

Though Jones had heard about early admission to the College of Veterinary Medicine, she said she still anticipated a three-year plan.

Ronnie Elmore, College of Veterinary Medicine associate dean, said students who are admitted early have faculty mentors and honors group, but few students are ready for the change so quickly.

"There are very few who get in after two years," Elmore said. "The average

Fraternity members win award for best song, 'Beta Badge' at annual international convention

By Melissa Brownlee
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Budding composers Ryan Newton and Dusty Jordan garnered an award for best new song at this summer's annual Beta Theta Pi international convention.

The two K-State students wrote "Beta Badge," a song about the journey a high school graduate takes, from choosing to go through recruitment and choosing Beta, to what it means to be a Beta, both as an active member and as an alumni.

"I've seen what Beta means to alumni and how all of us feel about it," Newton, sophomore in advertising, said.

After writing the song, Newton and Jordan had the song professionally recorded to send to fraternity headquarters. Officials at headquarters asked Newton and Jordan to perform the song at the convention.

The pair sold about 150 copies at the convention. Officials at Beta headquarters said they want the duo to make 400 more copies to send to alumni donors.

"It started out as just doing something to win an award, but then we started to get into it and really enjoy it," Jordan, sophomore in business and Spanish, said. "It was a great experience."

"Beta Badge" will be put in the Beta archives and U.S. and Canadian Beta members will sing the song Newton and Jordan wrote.

The K-State Beta chapter – now ranked in the top five of U.S. and Canadian chapters -- won six other awards at the Scottsdale, Ariz., convention: excellence in recruitment, excellence in risk management, excellence in Web site design, campus involvement, the Sissom award for chapter excellence and the Knox award for the top chapter.

To qualify for these awards, chapters must meet 19 criteria, but winning chapters exceed the minimum requirements.

The criteria fall under several categories: grade point average, leadership development and self-governance, commitment to community, member education, responsible personal conduct, chapter advisers, member recruitment, communication and lifelong fraternal brotherhood.

Beta won the excellence in risk management award for reworking its entire fire safety and evacuation plan, among other risk management programs, Brad Scheu, junior in pre-medicine and economics and Beta president, said.

Beta also had an in-depth recruitment workshop before last spring's recruitment.

"We did a self-evaluation of who we were and how we could continue that image," Scheu said. "We set a goal of 25 new members and we reached our goal."

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Evacuees not coming

Kansas was originally expected to receive up to 500 evacuees from the Louisiana area, but now there are no flights coming to the state. According to officials, the reason is few people want to relocate. They want to stay and re-build in Louisiana.

Los Angeles loses power

A large portion of Los Angeles was blacked out Monday when electrical power was lost. The power got knocked out shortly before 1 p.m. after two power surges. The city's department of water and power said it was investigating the cause and extent of the outage.

FEMA Director resigns

Federal Emergency Management Agency director Mike Brown said Monday he has resigned "in the best interest of the agency and best interest of the president," three days after losing his command of the Hurricane Katrina relief effort.

CBS features Meadowlark Hills community

By Tessa French
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Katie Lester | COLLEGIAN
Kittie Orr, Meadowlark Hills resident and 1942 K-State graduate, sits on her porch at Meadowlark Hills retirement community in the evening, visiting with other residents and staff.

The CBS "Eye on America" news crew spent Aug. 24 and 25 at the Meadowlark Hills retirement community. They were interviewing residents and touring the home for a feature about new and improved nursing homes.

CBS reporter and news correspondent Thalia Assuras said she was overwhelmed at what she witnessed, including an overactive staff and a generally happy atmosphere.

"The entire camera crew was enthused," said Jeff Chapman, director of public relations, marketing and fund development at Meadowlark Hills.

"Thalia made comments about how good it smelled and what a positive environment we had, and said that every place in America should be the same," he said.

Meadowlark Hills is a very modern place.

"We've completely gotten rid of the 'nursing home,' and even the term itself," Chapman said. "We now refer to the residence as health-care households."

This new concept is rapidly gaining attention in America because of its originality, Chapman said.

"We create homes and not hospitals, but 24-hour care is available if needed," Chapman said.

Some of Meadowlark Hills major facility improvements include a redesigned architecture to resemble a neighborhood design. Also, small groups of residents share their own kitchen, living area and backyards within their households.

Another major difference between Meadowlark and more traditional nursing homes is residents can make their own decisions.

"They choose when they want to get up in the morning, what and if they want to eat, if they want a bath or not, things like that," Chapman said. "They are allowed to be individuals with a happy home, neighborhood environment."

One of the objectives of Meadowlark Hills is to give its residents more freedom. Chapman said though residents aren't used to this at first, they grow to love the individuals choices residents make for themselves.

Roger Beins, clinical services mentor, has worked at Meadowlark Hills for 24 years. He believes this freedom is positive for residents.

"It's silly to think that these people who have gone through the depression, world wars, famine and many other tragedies should lose their ability to make decisions. So, we fixed that," he said.

The cutting-edge, free approach to assisted living is what attracted CBS to Meadowlark Hills, Chapman said. In fact, many people are interested in what is going on at the newly renovated retirement home.

"Usually, twice a month, we conduct large tours of the facility in which people pay to learn and see our concept," Chapman said.

Chapman believes all different things create attention. "CBS came for two days to see life as it was happening at our facility," he said. "They actually thought we had set up unrealistic things, when actually what is common to us was surprising to them. We were even better than what CBS thought we would be."

Chapman said he is most proud of the fact that people want to come and live at Meadowlark Hills.

"Our staff and those who live here are our best marketing," he said.

Yet, even some of the most innovative creations at Meadowlark are not well received. People in the industry, who were comfortable with one thing, are now faced with many new concepts, said Chapman. However, Beins maintains his enthusiasm to the newer changes.

"The changes have been amazing for residents and staff," he said. "Residents are seen as more of a whole person, and they see the staff as the same way. In the 'old model,' a person would adapt and conform to the schedules of the nursing home," Beins said.

"The way it is now, residents stay in control of their lives and we adapt," Beins said.

Jean Caul has lived at Meadowlark Hills for several years and said she has thoroughly enjoyed her stay.

"It's a swell place," she said. "You never get yelled at by the [staff]. They are very nice and polite. They adapt to us and think of our concerns and needs."

Caul also said the place is very comfortable, clean and has great food.

Beins said CBS chose Meadowlark Hills because they are the beginning of a change taking place all over the country.

"The 'baby boomers' are now retiring and just will not put up with the old-fashioned homes, and nursing homes are realizing this," he said.

In the former nursing-home style, Beins said it was hard to leave work and feel positive.

"Now, I think we all leave feeling very accomplished, and job satisfaction is a great thing," he said.

The CBS segment will run sometime within the next month.

TO THE POINT

Landlords should work to save energy

With Hurricane Katrina damaging natural gas plants in Louisiana, the price of natural gas could rise as much as 52 percent more than its price last winter.

Even so, energy bills do not necessarily have to skyrocket.

Tenants should not be forced to pay higher costs because of landlords not taking care of the property.

It is up to tenants to remind landlords to fix the small things in residences that could potentially cause the house to need more heating or air conditioning.

The first step should be to winterize the residence.

Windows should be properly latched. It would also be wise to caulk and use weather strips to stop air leaks around doors and windows.

Even in the heat of the summer, caulking and weather strips may keep warm air out and keep the cold air in.

Also, furnaces should be checked by a qualified technician to ensure they are not wasting energy.

It is also wise to buy compact fluorescent bulbs for the lights.

While they may be costly at the store, they can save energy and last longer.

By checking these items, energy bills should be cut significantly and both tenants and landlords will save in the long run.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Revenge of the ex

Follow these simple rules to avoid awkward encounters with past flame

LAUREN ROHRER

There is a particular breed of guy I believe to be the most feared by all single women in Manhattan. This guy can be good-looking, fun, personable and know everything about you. So, what makes him so scary? He is the ex. And the moment you stop thinking about him, he shows up again.

In my opinion, the only good time to run into an ex is when you are either with a new date (preferably a knock-out) or you yourself look effortlessly stunning.

The problem is, I usually run into them around 9:20 a.m., hung over and wearing my 1999 Cross Canadian Ragweed concert T-shirt.

The only thing worse is running into them when they've happily moved on, and by social standards, you are required to act happy for them.

It's an undeniable fact the more we date, the more of them we accumulate. Therefore, I have decided to deliver a set of rules that are generally unspoken.

RULE ONE:

It's okay to move on. So many times, people try to enforce a grieving period or what I like to refer to as "the weekdays." The truth is, it's different for everybody.

I hate the term "rebound." If I feel like I am ready to date someone new, that's my decision. Men move on, so women should not be scared to either. Although, I wouldn't recommend moving on with one of your ex's friends.

Moving on doesn't necessarily have to mean dating someone else. It can mean making a change for the better and realizing that being alone doesn't have to mean being lonely.

Illustrations by Jordan Mizell | COLLEGIAN

RULE TWO:

Determine custody. Though there may not have been kids, every couple has stuff. It is in the best interest of both of you to determine who gets what. For example, anyone I date will have to accept the fact that I get Lane 33 on Monday nights. Period.

However, I may have to give up Taco Tuesday or whatever other weird traditions you and your ex had.

Also, when it comes to gifts, my policy is pretty simple. Big things like promise rings should probably go back. Little things like a sweater can stay, unless he's into wearing your clothes.

RULE THREE:

When it's over, it's over. There are not many exceptions to this one. If you and your ex feel like visiting, cool, but don't do it at 4 a.m. No one in Manhattan "visits" at that hour.

Always say what you need to say, you may not get another chance. I am not going to say not to fight, because I am human and sometimes telling a guy who broke my heart that he really sucks at life makes me feel pretty great.

What I will say is that actions always have consequences. Hurtful words are not easily forgotten, just ask the parking nazi that I griped out last year. But after you say what you really need to say, let it go.

Understand that being single doesn't have to be the fall-back plan. Being single is a choice, not a consolation prize.

Fall movies not worth your money

JONAS HOGG

For those who enjoy movies, watching Hollywood's rapid fire crap-a-pult chuck steaming piles of brown onto the silver screen all summer was an unpleasant experience.

However, as we recover from this summer's high-powered suck we turn our eyes to the fall, hoping for a reprieve.

In order to better prepare ourselves for the fall, let us examine Hollywood's highest aspirations for the chilling months.

"Corpse Bride" has no apparent plot, per se. What it does have is claymation, and with it Hollywood is hoping it can wrangle the slavering, cultish worshipers of "The Nightmare Before Christmas" onto another marketing teat worth a few million dollars a year. My guess is four stars, only because Tim Burton could stare at a camera for two hours and release it to rave reviews.

Nicolas Cage is starring in a new movie called "Lord of War." The film was directed by Andrew Niccol, director of "Gattaca" – need I say more?

From the crappy director of "I Know What You Did Last Summer" and the shoddy producer of "Scream" comes "Venom". Described as "a tale of voodoo swamp horror," I predict a crappy, shoddy tale of bad special effects worth one star.

In the oh-so-original "Underclassman," a sassy black man must deal with stodgy white people by going to a stodgy white person's private school.

One scene from the trailer depicts the star saving the school's basketball team with his "mad skillz." What would us stodgy white people do without Hollywood exposing us to the behavior of sassy black people? Why, we would live our lives clueless of the expertise in basketball black people possess, not to mention their wild and crazy way of speaking. It's whack, homes. One star.

"Into the Blue" stars Paul Walker and the chick all the guys kept hoping would get naked in Sin City (not Elijah Wood, the other one).

Lacking a plot, this movie hopes to enrapture viewers with close-up after close-up of Paul Walker's breasts and Jessica Alba's pectorals. One star.

For those who lament their ugliness on a daily basis, "Elizabethtown" will remind you that you are neither Kirsten Dunst nor Orlando Bloom. Zero stars.

It also, however, reminds you that you are neither Alec Baldwin nor Susan Sarandon. Plus two stars.

The movie adaptation of the award-winning video game "Doom" will, undoubtedly, follow in the footsteps of other high-quality adaptations of video games, such as "Super Mario Bros.," "Wing Commander" and "Casablanca." Negative one star.

Steve Martin, hot off his successes in "Looney Tunes: Back in Action" and "Bringing Down the House," stars in an adaptation of his own novella, "Shopgirl." The details are sketchy, but a spirited, stodgy white guy pretending to be a sassy black guy is apparently still on the table – much to the delight of dullards everywhere. Eye-gouging bad.

Just in time for the holidays will be a new 40-hour movie adaptation of "Pride and Prejudice." What will the stodgy English do without sassy black people to help them out? If I'm caught watching this, someone shoot me.

Sadly, Hollywood's turd bazooka seems to be on target for the fall movie season. We can only hope that "Harry Potter and the Acne of Acerbar" or "Lord of the Rings, Episode Four: The Lion Strikes Back" will toss some lifelines into the silver screen crap-mire come December.

You can be a farmer without being a "hick". When we say "hick" we are calling attention to not only the tone but also the ignorance of what you just said. It's your fault that you don't have a wider view of things other than, "oh look, cows."

Why can't the asshats just get along?

Yeah, the conservatives calling in lately — stop! Before you say something really stupid.

Recent studies show an all-time low of IQ levels, among conservatives.

Did you know the longest word in the English language is antidisestablishmentarianism?

Topher's roomies love him very much.

Dear Student Senate, I am all for parking reform but why should every student on campus pay $150 for a permit when the garage only benefits a total of 300 students? The people that park there should pay, not everyone else.

Screw you Collegian. A true victim of Katrina chimes in and you sorry jackasses show no respect.

So, I just heard an ad on the radio for a health club in Lawrence that was $99 for a semester or $198 for a year. Are KU students really that dumb?

I know study hours are mandatory for everybody in the greek system. But, I was wondering if everybody in the sororities could study somewhere else besides the library, because not everybody cares about how much you drank this weekend or who you got with.

Student honored at competition

Scholarship awarded to 2005 Student Engineer of the Year

By Tessa French
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Now $1,000 richer, Trisha Culbertson was named the 2005 American Society of Agricultural and Biological Engineers Student Engineer of the Year.

"Trisha is the fourth winner from our department in the past seven years," James Koelliker, professor of biological and agricultural engineering, said.

The award, and its $1,000 scholarship grant, are given yearly to exceptional undergraduates in engineering.

Applicants must be ASABE student members, have a 3.0 GPA and be majoring in an agricultural/biological engineering program accredited by the ASABE.

They must write a paper that describes their goals for engineering.

Koelliker said applicants are judged on scholarship excellence, outstanding character and personal development, student membership in ASABE and leadership qualities.

"Our department nominated Trisha because she was an outstanding candidate for the recognition," Koelliker said.

This isn't the ASABE's first recognition of Culbertson's talents. She placed second in ASABE's national student poster competition and was president of the K-State student branch of ASABE last year.

Culbertson's involvement at K-State extends beyond the College of Engineering. She received the Morris K. Udall and Tau Beta Pi scholarships last spring and has competed with K-State's track and cross country teams for four years.

"I'm most proud of my running career at Kansas State," she said. "Running is one of my loves, so I think it's cool that I was able to train and compete here. I feel like it's helped me succeed in other areas because of the discipline and determination it requires."

Culbertson, senior in biological and agricultural engineering, was the No. 1 runner on the cross country team for the 2004 season and the majority of the 2003 season. She qualified for the 2003 NCAA cross country meet and has made the team's top-10 list in the 5,000 and 10,000 meter races, Michael Smith, cross country head coach, said.

"Trisha is very disciplined and driven," Smith said. "It may seem like a cliché but she is a very organized and driven young woman that will be successful in just about whatever she chooses to do."

One thing that fuels that drive is the Bible verse Colossians 3:23, Culbertson said.

"I want to give my best in all I do for God and not sell short the day that He has given me," she said.

Culbertson has also co-authored two works – a technical paper that was presented at an international meeting in Toronto and a popular version of her research work that appeared in Resource, a monthly magazine.

A native of Burlington, Kan., Culbertson will graduate in May.

"After that, I'm off to grad school, although I'm not quite sure where yet," she said.

K-State professors write leadership book

By Lacey D. Mackey
K-STATE COLLEGIAN

A new textbook for leadership studies is being implemented into the Introduction to Leadership class this fall.

Robert Shoop, professor of educational leadership and co-founder and senior scholar of Leadership Studies and Programs, and Ata Karim, previous senior associate director for administration for leadership studies now in Seattle, wrote the book.

Shoop said much of the text was based on the leadership studies program.

"The genesis of the book was the leadership minor," Shoop said. "It is to develop knowledge, ethical, caring, inclusive leaders for a diverse world."

When looking at various texts to help teach Introduction to Leadership, Shoop said it was hard to find something that would be applicable and helpful for students.

"We haven't found a book that adequately helped in the introductory class," he said. "What we want it to be is a kinetic, organic book that can be added to and made to mold the group."

Susan Scott, associate dean and associate professor of Leadership Studies and Programs, said the difficulty came in trying to find a book that taught the principles of leadership effectively.

"It came out of an entire faculty decision," Scott said. "We kept looking, but there were just no books we could really use."

Shoop, a writer of more than a dozen books on several subjects, said his main objective for this book was to help define some difficult ideas.

"This is very difficult because everything is so abstract," Shoop said. "What's caring? How do you measure that?"

Shoop said while many of his books translate theories into practical application, the books being used for leadership studies were not readable or all-inclusive for the introductory class.

"Intro students do not want to read a 50-page book on ethics," Shoop said. "My job is to translate a variety of complex theories into relevant concepts for students."

This is something Gregg Joyal, junior in park management and leadership studies student leader, said he really appreciated.

"Leadership can be learned, leadership can be taught and everyone can grow as a leader."

Robert Shoop
PROFESSOR

"I really like it, and it has little activities you can do, which makes it easier to lead the group," Joyal said. "The students really seem to like it. They say it's an easy read."

After being in several leadership classes and working as a student leader, Lauren Hatfield, senior in management, said she was excited to read a book written by K-State faculty.

"I think it's great," Hatfield said. "I've had Ata Karim as a professor in the past, and he has a great background in diversity and leadership, as well as Dr. Shoop. I think the two collaborating on the book is an excellent thing."

The book, "Virtuous Leadership: Knowledgeable, Ethical, Caring, Inclusive Leadership," was written to teach readers how to make decisions based on ethics, Shoop said.

"Leadership is value-driven," he said. "It's much more than teaching someone how to run a meeting.

It teaches them to be caring, not just about employees but also to people who use their products or services."

Ethics is a key element when teaching leadership, Scott said.

"Ethics is one of our several learning objectives," she said. "Ethics is the foundation of leadership."

Another key element to the leadership program has been the emphasis on society's diverse population.

"Leadership is inclusive," Shoop said. "We need to take into consideration what makes up a diverse society. There are different things each group brings."

While the book just made its debut in Introduction to Leadership this fall, Shoop said plans are already being made to make changes, get students' opinions and publish again.

"Leadership can be learned, leadership can be taught and everyone can grow as a leader," Shoop said. "We believe everyone can improve their ability as a leader."

Mortar Board wins Golden Torch Award

By Christina Forsberg
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For the 10th year, the K-State chapter of Mortar Board received the Golden Torch Award at this summer's 2005 National Conference.

Mortar Board President Whitney Coen, Leadership Chair Patrick Simpson, Scholarship Chair Amanda York and Victoria Luhrs attended the conference in Columbus, Ohio, to receive the Golden Torch Award and others for Mortar Board. This year's chapter was one of 18, out of more than 200 nationwide, to receive the award.

The Golden Torch Award is given to selected chapters that complete the requirements set by Mortar Board's national office.

"With this award, the Mortar Board National Office recognizes an outstanding chapter," Jan Wissman, K-State Mortar Board adviser, said.

Other honors Mortar Board received at the recent 2005 convention included the Project Excellence Award and an award for Web site excellence.

"The chapter received the award for National Mortar Board Week, held in February, when the chapter brought in speaker Shanté Moore from Qatar and handed out study tips and Pepsi products," Coen said.

As a national college senior honor society, Mortar Board serves on campus and in the community.

"It's an honor society, not an honorary society, because there's a commitment to continue to serve," Wissman said.

Mortar Board members engage in many activities throughout the year. They compile "If I Had Only Known" advice booklets for new K-State students. And two members make weekly visits to read to children in local day cares as a part of the national service project to advance reading education.

This fall Mortar Board will sponsor the University Forum for students who have questions and concerns for a panel of administrators from the campus and the city.

Next semester, Mortar Board will coordinate the statewide Academic Decathlon for high school students competing to enter the nationwide competition.

"This chapter in Kansas is the only college-level group that coordinates a statewide competitive event," Wissman said. "This chapter is most deserving of these awards."

Equestrians focus on teamwork for new season

By Jessica Barnard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With less than two weeks until its first competition, the 2005 K-State equestrian team is anticipating another successful season.

The team will depend on the leadership of second-year coach Teresa Slough as it works toward producing another successful season.

Slough has experience on her team, as 43 riders from last year's team are back for another season, including senior riders Meghan Felts and Lindsey Hicks.

Slough said she is expecting the returning riders to take leadership roles on the team.

"Some of our superstars from the past have graduated – it will be interesting to see who steps up," said Slough.

Even though the roster has somewhat changed from last year, the season itself has much of the same look of past seasons, Slough said.

"This season's schedule is very similar to last year's," she said.

"There will be most of the same schools hosting. Competition may be stiffer, but we will be going to the same places and seeing the same horses."

After last year's success – K-State placed fifth overall at the Intercollegiate Horse Show Association National Championships – the team wants to set a high standard for itself.

"We hold ourselves to very high expectations and rightfully so, because we have a great team and a great bunch of girls," Hicks said.

Slough said she also feels the team has great potential.

"We expect to do well at all of the shows we go to," she said.

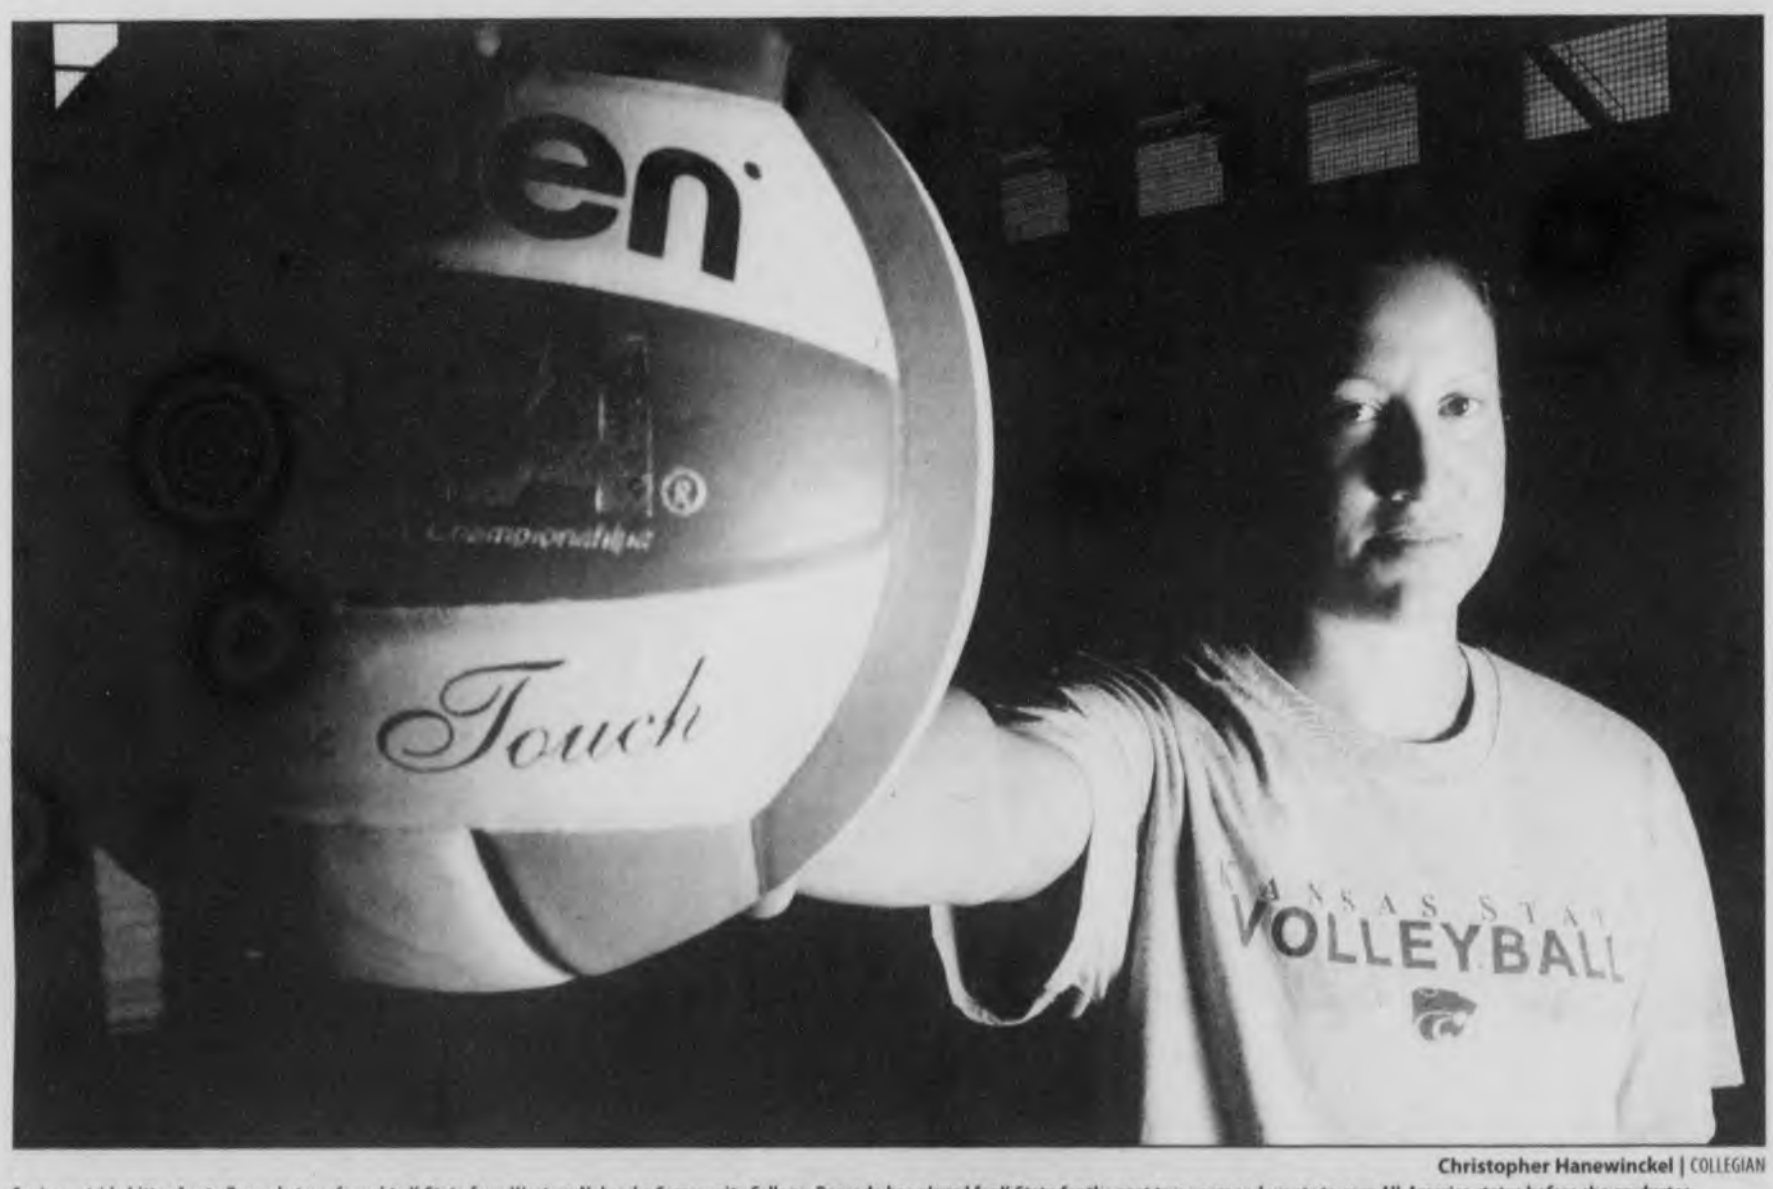
"We set our expectations pretty high, but we think they are achievable."

An area of emphasis this year will be teamwork, Slough said, rather than individual accomplishments.

Felts said with the increased focus on teamwork, the season should be easier on all the riders.

"This year, it seems like it will run much smoother and be more of a team thing," Felts said.

"The expectation is that we need to continue thinking of it as a team sport and not just an individual sport."



With all the riders working together as a team, Hicks is expecting great success.

"I think at K-State we are really making a name for ourselves," Hicks said.

"We're definitely going to give everyone a run for their money this year."

K-State begins competition for the 2005-06 season Sept. 24-25 at the Truman Combined Show in Kirksville, Mo.

Potential realized

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Senior outside hitter Agata Rezende transferred to K-State from Western Nebraska Community College. Rezende has played for K-State for the past two years and wants to earn All-America status before she graduates.

Rezende developing into go-to player for K-State

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Agata Rezende has only played for the K-State volleyball team for a year, but before she graduates in the spring, she wants to leave her mark.

"I'm trying to get the All-America award," said Rezende, senior outside hitter for the 22nd-ranked Wildcats. "I have been working so hard since last spring to achieve this goal. I want to be one of the best players in the country."

Coach Suzie Fritz said earning All-America status is an attainable goal for Rezende.

"She certainly possesses that potential," Fritz said. "You know, All-Americans come from teams that do well. For her to receive that kind of recognition, she'll need her team."

Rezende, who hails from Franca, Brazil, does need her team, but because eight seniors have graduated in the past two years, Fritz said the Wildcats also need Rezende.

"She's going to carry us a lot," Fritz said. "We depend a lot on her for our success."

In the year since she transferred from Western Nebraska Community College, Rezende has proved she can handle the responsibility, Fritz said.

"She's extremely terminal and powerful and has become that way in the last year," Fritz said. "She worked incredibly hard this summer."

Her hard work has paid off.

At the Clarion Hotel Missouri State Invitational on Aug. 26-27, Rezende earned most valuable player honors for the tournament, collecting 44 kills. In the Varney's Kansas State Invitational this past weekend, Rezende tallied 49 kills.

"As powerful as she is, there were times she was unstoppable," Fritz said of Rezende's performance at the Missouri State Invitational. "She doesn't have any glaring weaknesses."

Rezende, not known for being a vocal leader, said she believes her leadership on the court is a necessity this season.

"I'm taking charge of almost every play, and I'm responsible for finishing matches," Rezende said. "They need me to be stable every time and emotionally stronger."

This, coming from a player who couldn't speak a word of English three years ago.

"When I first got here (to the U.S.), I didn't speak any English at all," Rezende said. "I couldn't even say 'hi' or 'bye.'"

Since arriving in the states, Rezende has had numerous learning experiences. Two of the most significant were learning the language and upon her transfer, adjusting to the differences in junior college and Division 1 volleyball.

"At first it was very difficult for me – I was in transition," Rezende said. "But I really feel very, very comfortable. I feel at home right now."

Weekend provides sports highlights

If you slept all weekend, if your television broke down or if you went to the library to study for your first exam like I should have, you missed one of the most memorable and entertaining sports weekends of the year.

MARK POTTER

In a jam-packed couple of days, the Yankees-Red Sox series took a back seat – which is a minor miracle – to college football's comeback wins, NFL season openers, Barry Bonds' activation from the disabled list and Andre Agassi's historic U.S. Open run.

Since so many story lines emerged, and I don't want to ramble on forever, I'll focus my attention on the gridiron.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL

The Texas-Ohio State game lived up to its billing as an epic game between two potential national championship contenders, as Texas quarterback Vince Young helped edge the Longhorns past linebacker A.J. Hawk and the feared Ohio State defense on Saturday night, 25-22.

In other Top 25 action, No. 20 Notre Dame upset No. 3 Michigan by a touchdown, 17-10, and moved to 2-0 under first-year Coach Charlie Weis.

Also, I was pleased to watch No. 5 Louisiana State mount a heroic comeback in a 35-31 win over No. 15 Arizona State.

I was mainly interested, however, in the less-hyped early game on ESPN 2 between my Wildcats and the Thundering Herd of Marshall.

Despite the largest crowd ever at Joan C. Edwards Stadium, and perhaps resulting from an atrocious final play call by Marshall, K-State pulled out a two-point victory (21-19) in a hostile environment to go to 2-0. It sure wasn't pretty, but it still counts as a win.

NFL

To celebrate the start of another NFL season, fantasy football addicts everywhere spent Sunday huddled around their televisions, attentive to every completed pass, interception and touchdown run.

From my friends' living room, I watched four different games at once on four separate televisions, thanks to NFL Sunday Ticket.

Heading into Sunday, I was anxious to find answers to three unsolved mysteries: How well will the New Orleans Saints respond on the field in the wake of Hurricane Katrina, how well will former K-State tailback Darren Sproles play and how well will the Kansas City Chiefs' defense perform?

To my satisfaction, the answer to each was, "extremely well."

The Saints gutted out a go-ahead drive in the final minute against the Carolina Panthers to bring an inkling of hope to their fans. Saints

Women's golf team ties for 9th with Iowa State

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's golf team tied for ninth with Big 12 foe Iowa State this weekend at the Badger Invitational in Madison, Wis.

The Wildcats shot 71-over-par 935 for the three days of play, which concluded Monday. Purdue University won the tournament with a 15-over par 876, and Texas A&M took second with a 32-over-par 896.

For K-State junior Katy Heffel finished at five-over par, sophomore Hailey Mireles finished at six-over par and junior Helene Robert closed at seven-over par.

Other Cats participating at the tournament included sophomores Kali Quick, who shot a nine-over-par 81, and Michelle Regan, who shot 13-over par.

Coach Kristi Knight said the team had problems with the short game.

"We struggled on the greens and missed opportunities with our putting," she said. "When you struggle with putting, you have problems making par."

The final score, Knight said, doesn't mean the team was consistently bad.

"Everybody played well at times," Knight said. "We just have to work on our scoring.

"I am proud of the efforts of all the girls. Everyone contributed and there are lots of positives."

One positive Knight said came from the tournament is now she knows what her team needs to work on.

"Now I have a good idea of where our weaknesses are," she said.

Knight said University Ridge is very similar to K-State's home course, Colbert Hills.

Playing University Ridge will help the Wildcats as the season progresses, Knight said.

"It's basically Colbert Hills with trees," she said. "It's not as hilly, but still a difficult course."

CFB | McKinney's interception up for weekly honor

K-State sophomore cornerback Justin McKinney's game-clenching interception in the Wildcats' 21-19 victory at Marshall on Saturday has been nominated for the "Pontiac Game Changing Performance" of the Week.

McKinney

McKinney's interception, his second of two on the day, occurred at the K-State 12-yard line with three seconds left in the game as the Thundering Herd were driving for a potential game-winning field goal attempt.

College football fans can vote for their favorite play at www.pontiac.com/ncaa, until Wednesday night. The winning play and university will be announced during the Pontiac Performance Halftime Report on ESPN Thursday night.

CFB | Big 12 announces weekly award winners

DALLAS — Texas quarterback Vince Young and two players from Iowa State — cornerback LaMarcus Hicks and punter Troy Blankenship — were named Big 12 players of the week Monday.

Young

Young, who grabbed offensive honors, was 18-for-29 passing for 270 yards and two touchdowns and ran for another 76 yards in the second-ranked Longhorns' 25-22 win at Ohio State.

Hicks, defensive player of the week, returned a second quarter interception 28 yards for a touchdown and also recovered a fumble in Iowa State's 23-3 upset of No. 8 Iowa.

Blankenship took the special teams award for placing three punts inside Iowa's 20-yard line in the Cyclones' first win over an Associated Press Top 10 squad since 1992.

CFB | Sickle cell possible factor in player's death

COLUMBIA, Mo. — The University of Missouri football player whose sudden death was attributed to viral meningitis was also a carrier of sickle cell trait, an inherited condition some medical experts suggest played a larger role than his autopsy report concluded.

Boone County Medical Examiner Valerie Rao found lymphocytic meningitis to be the probable cause of death for Aaron O'Neal, a redshirt freshman linebacker who collapsed and later died following a July 12 preseason workout.

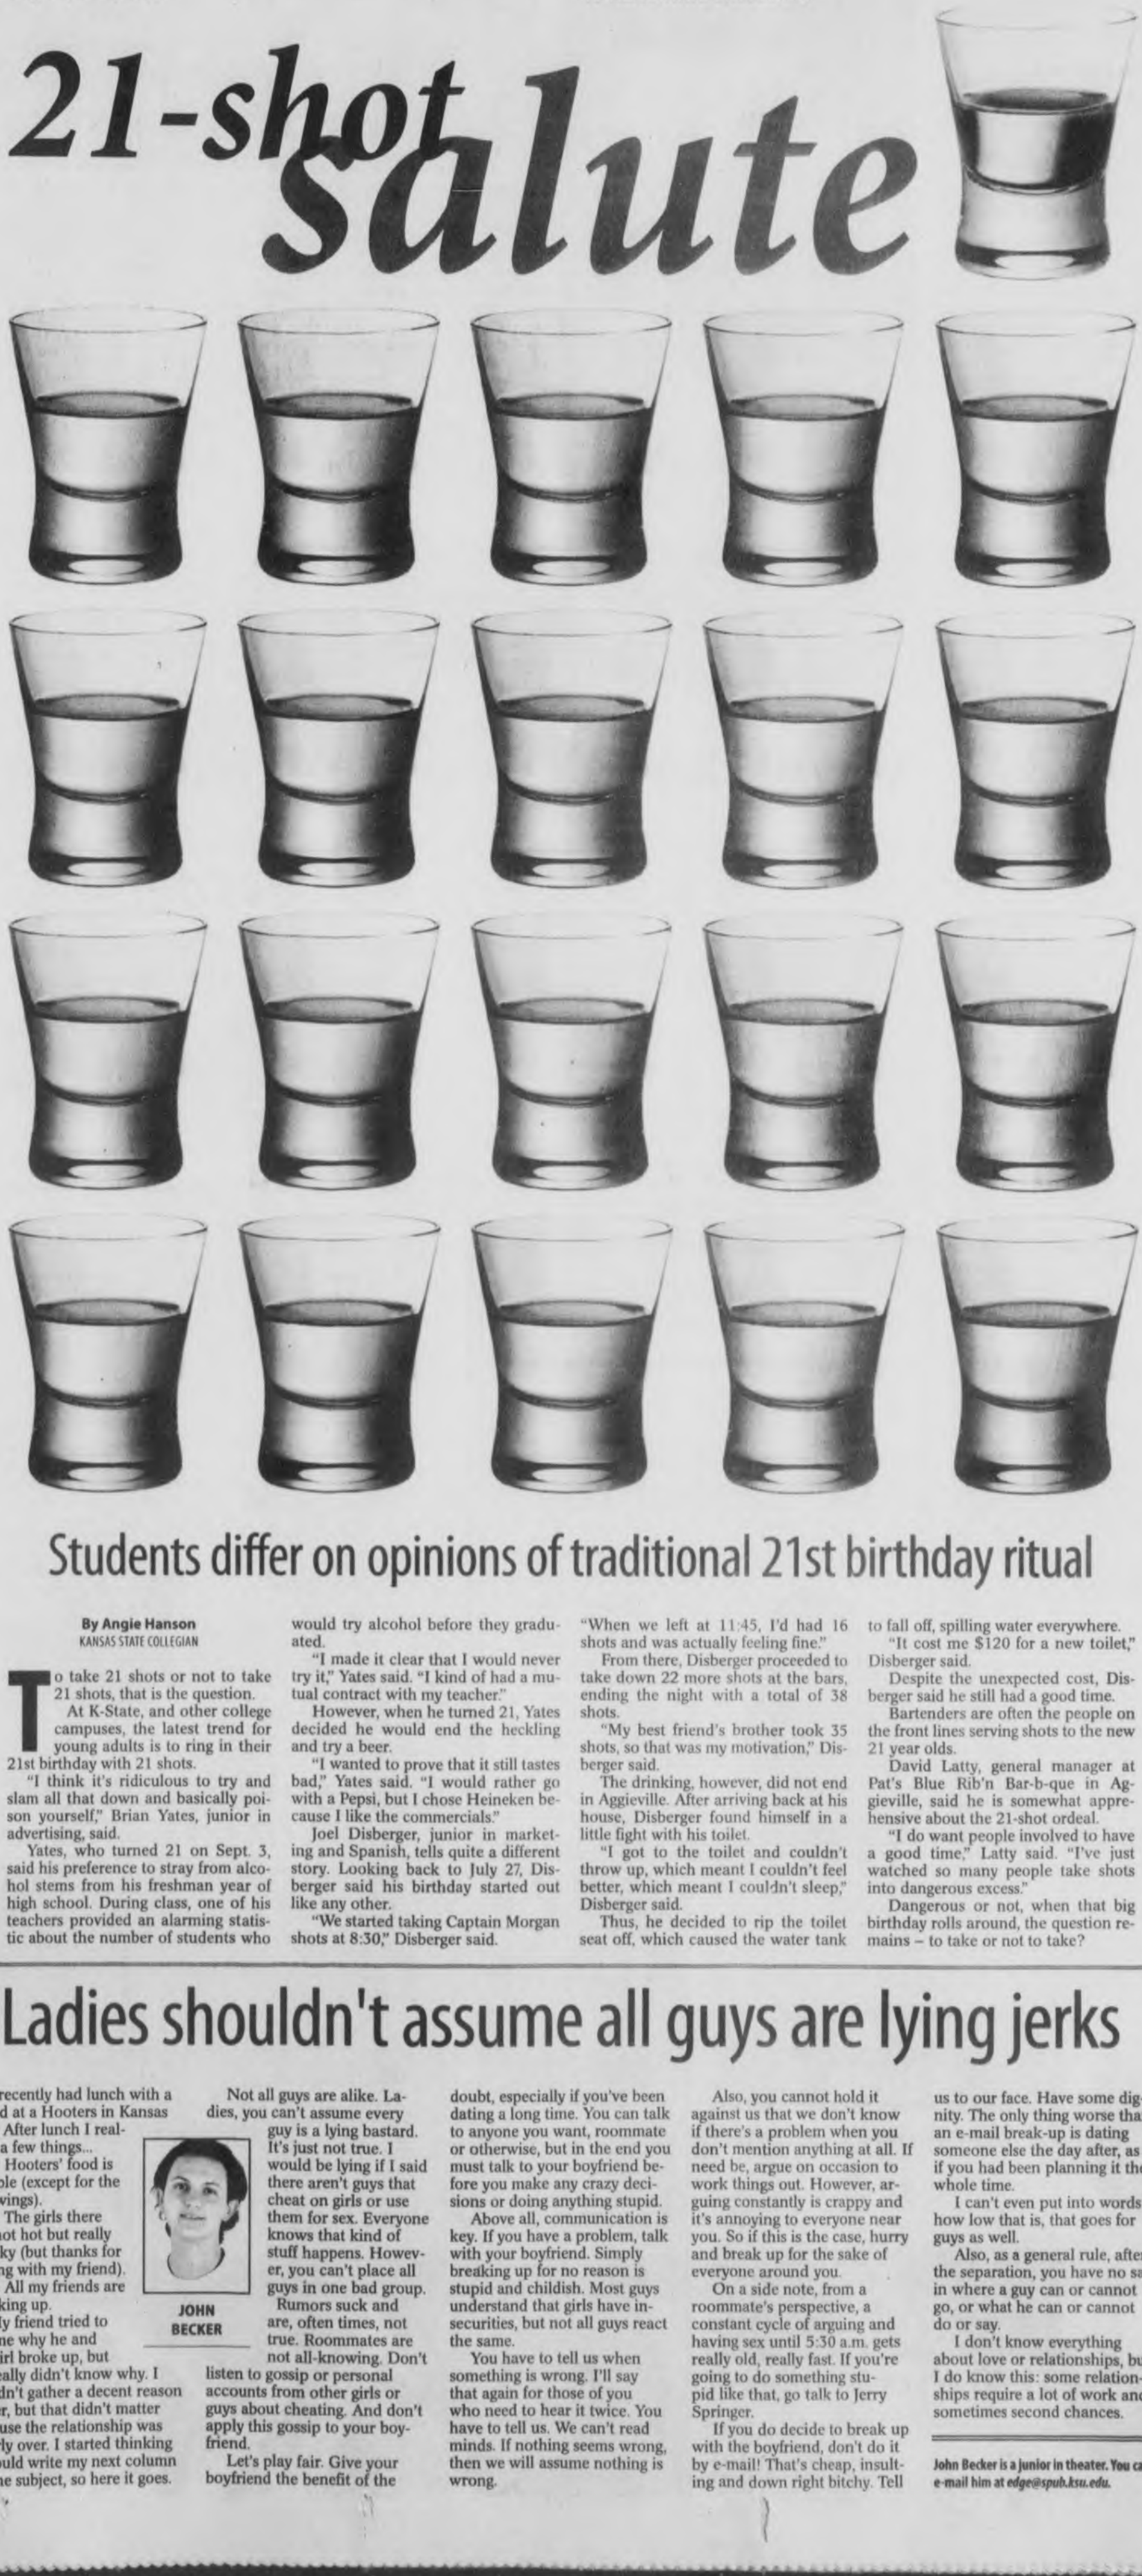
Rao, who released her autopsy findings Aug. 23, has repeatedly denied any connection with sickle cell trait, a condition that primarily affects blacks and can lead to the blood disorder sickle cell anemia when both parents are carriers of the trait. Red blood cells with the genetic disorder were detected in O'Neal's liver, spleen, kidneys and brain.

NHL | Mark Messier retires, ending 25-year NHL career

NEW YORK — Mark Messier retired Monday, ending a 25-year career in which he won six Stanley Cup championships and ranked second only to Wayne Gretzky on the NHL all-time scoring list.

Messier

Messier became a star in the 1980s and a headliner on Broadway in the '90s, captaining the New York Rangers to the '94 championship that ended the team's 54-year title drought.



He doesn't have anything set up yet, but Messier said he is willing to listen to any offers that will keep him closely tied to the game he still loves.

MLB | No criminal charges for death of BoSox fan

BOSTON — No criminal charges will be brought against the officers involved in the fatal shooting of a college student at a raucous celebration by Red Sox fans last fall, prosecutors said Monday.

Victoria Snelgrove, a 21-year-old Emerson College student, was shot in the eye socket with a pepper-spray pellet outside Fenway Park on Oct. 21.

To take 21 shots or not to take 21 shots, that is the question.

At K-State, and other college campuses, the latest trend for young adults is to ring in their 21st birthday with 21 shots.

"I think it's ridiculous to try and slam all that down and basically poison yourself," Brian Yates, junior in advertising, said.

Yates, who turned 21 on Sept. 3, said his preference to stray from alcohol stems from his freshman year of high school. During class, one of his teachers provided an alarming statistic about the number of students who would try alcohol before they graduated.

"I made it clear that I would never try it," Yates said. "I kind of had a mutual contract with my teacher."

However, when he turned 21, Yates decided he would end the heckling and try a beer.

"I wanted to prove that it still tastes bad," Yates said. "I would rather go with a Pepsi, but I chose Heineken because I like the commercials."

Joel Disberger, junior in marketing and Spanish, tells quite a different story. Looking back to July 27, Disberger said his birthday started out like any other.

"We started taking Captain Morgan shots at 8:30," Disberger said. "When we left at 11:45, I'd had 16 shots and was actually feeling fine."

From there, Disberger proceeded to take down 22 more shots at the bars, ending the night with a total of 38 shots.

"My best friend's brother took 35 shots, so that was my motivation," Disberger said.

The drinking, however, did not end in Aggieville. After arriving back at his house, Disberger found himself in a little fight with his toilet.

"I got to the toilet and couldn't throw up, which meant I couldn't feel better, which meant I couldn't sleep," Disberger said.

Thus, he decided to rip the toilet seat off, which caused the water tank to fall off, spilling water everywhere.

"It cost me $120 for a new toilet," Disberger said.

Despite the unexpected cost, Disberger said he still had a good time.

Bartenders are often the people on the front lines serving shots to the new 21 year olds.

David Latty, general manager at Pat's Blue Rib'n Bar-b-que in Aggieville, said he is somewhat apprehensive about the 21-shot ordeal.

"I do want people involved to have a good time," Latty said. "I've just watched so many people take shots into dangerous excess."

Dangerous or not, when that big birthday rolls around, the question remains – to take or not to take?

Ladies shouldn't assume all guys are lying jerks

JOHN BECKER

I recently had lunch with a friend at a Hooters in Kansas City. After lunch I realized a few things...

1. Hooters' food is terrible (except for the hot wings).

2. The girls there are not hot but really skanky (but thanks for flirting with my friend).

3. All my friends are breaking up.

My friend tried to tell me why he and his girl broke up, but he really didn't know why. I couldn't gather a decent reason either, but that didn't matter because the relationship was clearly over. I started thinking I should write my next column on the subject, so here it goes.

Not all guys are alike. Ladies, you can't assume every guy is a lying bastard. It's just not true. I would be lying if I said there aren't guys that cheat on girls or use them for sex. Everyone knows that kind of stuff happens. However, you can't place all guys in one bad group.

Rumors suck and are, often times, not true. Roommates are not all-knowing. Don't listen to gossip or personal accounts from other girls or guys about cheating. And don't apply this gossip to your boyfriend.

Let's play fair. Give your boyfriend the benefit of the doubt, especially if you've been dating a long time. You can talk to anyone you want, roommate or otherwise, but in the end you must talk to your boyfriend before you make any crazy decisions or doing anything stupid.

Above all, communication is key. If you have a problem, talk with your boyfriend. Simply breaking up for no reason is stupid and childish. Most guys understand that girls have insecurities, but not all guys react the same.

You have to tell us when something is wrong. I'll say that again for those of you who need to hear it twice. You have to tell us. We can't read minds. If nothing seems wrong, then we will assume nothing is wrong.

Also, you cannot hold it against us that we don't know if there's a problem when you don't mention anything at all. If need be, argue on occasion to work things out. However, arguing constantly is crappy and it's annoying to everyone near you. So if this is the case, hurry and break up for the sake of everyone around you.

On a side note, from a roommate's perspective, a constant cycle of arguing and having sex until 5:30 a.m. gets really old, really fast. If you're going to do something stupid like that, go talk to Jerry Springer.

If you do decide to break up with the boyfriend, don't do it by e-mail! That's cheap, insulting and down right bitchy. Tell us to our face. Have some dignity. The only thing worse than an e-mail break-up is dating someone else the day after, as if you had been planning it the whole time.

I can't even put into words how low that is, that goes for guys as well.

Also, as a general rule, after the separation, you have no say in where a guy can or cannot go, or what he can or cannot do or say.

I don't know everything about love or relationships, but I do know this: some relationships require a lot of work and sometimes second chances.

NEW RELEASES

Movies in theaters Friday

"Just Like Heaven" PG-13
An architect living in San Francisco (Mark Ruffalo) falls in love with a female spirit he finds in his closet (Reese Witherspoon). The woman, whose ghost he's wooing, has been in a coma at a local hospital for the past six months. Unless he can intervene, her body will be taken off life support.

Witherspoon

"Lord of War" R
A global arms dealer named Yuri Orlov (Nicolas Cage), who specializes in the sale of post-Cold War-era weapons, finds himself dealing with a nosy Interpol agent (Ethan Hawke) and a girlfriend (Bridget Moynahan) who's beginning to think her man might be dabbling into something illegal.

"Cry Wolf" PG-13
After a local teenager is murdered, a group of high school students try to scare their classmates by spreading Internet rumors that a serial killer known as "The Wolf" is in the area. The teens have fun describing the killer's next victims, but when people actually start turning up dead, they have to figure out who's behind the gruesome attacks.

"Thumbsucker" R
A nervous teen (Lou Pucci) with a major thumb-sucking problem seeks help from an orthodontist (Keanu Reeves) and a high-school debate coach (Vince Vaughn). When he stops sucking, he starts going crazy, is diagnosed with ADHD and winds up on Ritalin.

"Corpse Bride" PG
Victor (Johnny Depp), a villager in a small 19th-century European town, is taken to the underworld to marry a corpse bride (Helena Bonham Carter). Surprisingly, the afterlife isn't that disagreeable, and it's a lot more exciting than his strict Victorian society.

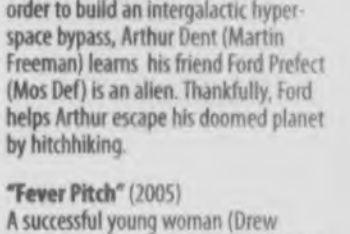
DVDS



"The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy" (2005)
Just before the Earth is destroyed in order to build an intergalactic hyperspace bypass, Arthur Dent (Martin Freeman) learns his friend Ford Prefect (Mos Def) is an alien. Thankfully, Ford helps Arthur escape his doomed planet by hitchhiking.

"Fever Pitch" (2005)
A successful young woman (Drew Barrymore) falls for a man she thinks is the perfect guy (Jimmy Fallon). The only catch? He's a little bit obsessed with the Boston Red Sox.

"Palindromes" (2005)
Thirteen-year-old Aviva Victor wants badly to have children. After her parents protest her desires, she runs away, still hoping to get pregnant.

Facebook popular with Kansas schools

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Nathan Fritz pokes people about 20 times a week. But he gets away with his mischievous jabs every time – at least with his friends and acquaintances on the social-networking Web site, www.facebook.com.

For some, it's a way to find parties, and, for others, it's a way to track down campus hunks.

But for Fritz, along with many other students on campus, it's a true addiction.

Fritz, junior in chemical engineering, has used Facebook since its launch at K-State in the fall of last year.

"I used to be really addicted to it in the beginning," he said. "But today, I check it at least once a day."

Last year, Fritz established the K-State "Facebook Pokers" group. He said his group became a trend, and other state schools started similar groups.

For Kansas Board of Regents' universities, students are taking this online phenomenon by storm. The numbers, even today, continue to grow, said Chris Hughes, Facebook press representative.

"We have over 3.5 million users at 832 schools," he said.

In Kansas, 37,688 students were registered as of last week. Comparing that number to the 76,947 students enrolled in regents' universities in 2004, nearly half the students in Kansas colleges are listed in Facebook.

These numbers, while excluding Kansas community college and vocational schools, are still impressive, Hughes said.

The University of Kansas ranks first in Facebook membership, with 16,823 student members. K-State lags slightly behind with 13,071.

The University of Kansas has 23,938 students and K-State has 19,217 students. Hughes said the newer Web site designs, features and overall quality help increase these numbers.

"In the next few months, Facebook will be undergoing some significant changes," he said. "Our first priority is expanding the network so that it includes as many U.S. colleges as possible. We plan to be at over 2000 colleges by the start of this coming school year."

Facebook founder Mark Zuckerberg said they are looking to expand to other universities.

"We're already at a lot of colleges," Zuckerberg said. "For the ones where we're not at, we'll be mostly there by the end of next week."

High schools are the next conquest for site's expansion, Zuckerberg said.

"Nobody in high school can search for you, see your profile or even send you a message."

Dionna Clark, sophomore at Manhattan High School, thinks the site is an innovative concept.

"It sounds kind of cool," Clark said. "It's a fun idea to think that you can find people that share the same interests as you."

Although Clark likes the Facebook concept, she said she is a little wary.

"Sites like that should have strict restriction," she said. "I don't want people from all over the country having access to my information."

Regardless of the expansion, Fritz said he plans to continue to use Facebook to track people from high school and catch up with other people.

"It's the best way to get in touch with people that you don't really see a lot" he said.

For Fritz, Facebook is a huge convenience.

"It's comforting to know that you can find someone who is in your class and call them about something you missed that day," he said.

"Last summer, I was in Prague, so I didn't get to see a lot of people. It was a great way to keep in contact with people and see what they were doing for the summer."

Hughes said he, along with the other Facebook creators, originally set a goal of making the site an interactive social networking interface, where people could have experiences much like Fritz's.

"We just want to provide something that is useful and fun, and that is what students want," Hughes said.

iPod cell phone gets mixed reviews

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Erin Learned takes it with her to class, on road trips, during study time, when walking to class and even out on the lake.

Nothing separates her from her iPod.

Apple Computer Inc.'s iPod popularity is on the rise, and these popular mobile devices just expanded into a new domain – the iPod cell phone, known as the Motorola ROKR.

The Motorola ROKR, distributed through Cingular Wireless, gives consumers the ability to use their cell phone and MP3 player at once. It can store up to 100 songs, which can be transferred from a PC just like an MP3 player.

The phone also includes a built-in camera and has special features, such as allowing the user to be able to pause music when they receive an call.

Erin Learned, junior in public relations, said she's not surprised at the phone and iPod combination.

"I'm sure for some people, it might be the perfect fit in their lives," she said. "However, I am pretty content with my iPod."

Like Learned, many other people are satisfied with their iPods. According to a September Apple.com report, the company has sold more than 21 million iPods, with more than 700 products bearing the Apple logo.

Jancis Klenda, senior in life sciences and pre-nursing, said she also is an iPod fanatic.

"I use it practically everywhere – when I go running or walking to class," she said. "The new iPod cell phone sounds like a nice gadget to carry around."

Convenience is key, and Chad Mortensen, sales manager at Red Sky Wireless in Topeka, said that is what draws in the attention.

"We've had other MP3 cell phones on the market, including the Samsung SGH-p777," he said. "The iPod logo is very appealing."

Red Skye Wireless, a Cingular Wireless authorized dealer, started putting the Motorola ROKR on its shelves on Sunday. Although some media speculate high sales for the product, Mortensen feels differently.

"A lot of younger people aren't looking for the iPod cell phone," he said. "Consumers care about aesthetics of their purchase most."

VET STUDENTS | Mentors help first-years succeed student has about four years of schooling."

While the odds may have seemed against her, encouragement from several mentors swayed Jones to seek wisdom from Bonnie Rush, professor of clinical sciences, who also urged her to apply early.

"I kind of thought she was crazy," Jones said. "I didn't think it was possible. I was skeptical. I would be going against students with Master's and Ph.D.s. Why would they pick me?"

Despite her uncertainty, Jones said she found peace in knowing her future was in safe hands.

"I went in with the thought, 'If it's God's will, then I will, and if it's not, then I'll wait for next year,'" she said.

Although she is excited about her acceptance into the college, Jones said many are concerned about the admittance of younger students.

"Age is a big thing, a lot of time," Jones said. "A lot of people still have a lot of growing to do. I think there are students who aren't ready after two years, but I think that a lot of students are just unsure."

Elmore said drawbacks sometimes occur for students who are admitted early, but hard work often can help them overcome that.

"Some say the students don't have all the course work they would have in an undergraduate degree, and that maybe the students lose a little bit of overall experience," Elmore said. "But the benefits are they get into vet school, have a faculty mentor and can be a part of an honors group."

While some see her age of admittance as an obstacle, Jones said starting her study of veterinary medicine early is making her a stronger student and person.

"When other students don't know that you're younger, then you're on a level playing field," she said. "When they find out you are younger, they sort of look down on you because of the lack of experience. It's a little disheartening, but it presents a challenge, and I love challenges."

Before starting veterinary medicine, Jones said she heard how intense classes could be, but now the coursework has become a part of life.

"The first couple of days, it was the unknown, but as you start to go about figuring things out, you sort of calm down for this new part of life," she said.

Stress levels can be high in the College of Veterinary Medicine, so leaning on her faith in the midst of confusion has kept Jones focused.

"My faith is such an important part of my life to maintaining my stress level in vet school – the peace I have that God will be with me and not give me more than I can handle," she said.

Jones said students interested in the college of Veterinary Medicine should become involved in learning.

"I think that a lot of individuals going to vet school that are in undergrad don't have to study," she said. "Learn study habits and how to study. Take as many upper-level science classes and gain experience in the profession by shadowing a vet or even cleaning kennels."

Adair agreed that good study habits have been vital to his success.

"I actually study now," Adair said. "The content is not difficult in and of itself, but they throw a lot of it at you at once. You have to put out some effort from the beginning."

Despite their professional status, these two still find ways to have fun.

"When I first realized I was in vet school was probably whenever I bought my lab coat," Adair said. "I wore it around the house one evening and made fun of everyone else for not being in vet school."

ENERGY | Hurricane could affect winter energy prices

He offered some tips for students to save energy and reduce their bills.

Have furnaces checked by a qualified technician and have the air filter cleaned and replaced. Also, set the thermostat at a proper temperature in the summer and winter.

"During the winter, if you are gone, turn it down a little bit, open the windows and let the sun warm the rooms with solar heat," he said. "The same with the summer, If you are gone, set it to 75 degrees or open the windows."

If there are leaky toilet stools or faucets in your home, call the owner, and have them fix it.

Walker said a critical tip is to keep the outside air from coming in. By putting plastic on the windows and doors, or putting something underneath the threshold of the door to keep air out. This will reduce how much heat or cool air you need.

"Turn your water heater to 120 degrees and wash your clothes in cold water, these are just a few things that can help you save money on your bill," he said.

REZENDE | Senior brings maturity to volleyball team

She also feels at home with her team – a team with the potential to be explosive this season, Rezende said.

"We're all excited about this team," she said. "I believe the strength of this team is going to be the great energy the young players have, and that's what's going to make us successful. They're working so hard, and we as a team are getting mature together."

But not too mature, said Rezende's teammates.

"Agata is really goofy," junior middle blocker Joy Hamlin said. "She says funny things. She's fun to be around."

Rezende is also a pleasure to compete with, Hamlin said.

"She's really intense, and that's fun to play with," Hamlin said. "She's really intense, but she also has a lightheartedness about her."

Fritz said Rezende, in her entirety, is a positive role model for her teammates.

"She's a very good example for the younger players," Fritz said. "She's one of our most offensive players, so she'll lead by example primarily. But she's also very mature and extremely intense and manages her time very well."

With school, practice and matches, time is something Rezende does not have a lot of these days. Still, she manages to squeeze in a little rest and relaxation every now and then.

"I love to cook," Rezende said. "I like to cook Brazilian food. I also like to watch movies and listen to music – or I do homework."

Rezende, a kinesiology major, said after this year, her desire to be a physical therapist will most likely take precedent over volleyball.

"I'm ready to be done after this season," Rezende said. "I want to go to grad school in the U.S. and get a physical therapy degree, and then I want to go back home."

However, with nine months to go as a Wildcat, Rezende is focused on her final season and achieving her ambitions, both on and off the court.

On the court, Fritz said, Rezende is unbelievable.

"She's playing her best volleyball ever," Fritz said. "Agata's an incredibly hard worker and intense competitor. She's developed into a phenomenal volleyball player."

COLUMN | Revamped Chiefs defense impressive

Sproles made his NFL debut for the San Diego Chargers and totaled six touches for an impressive 171 yards. He averaged 36.5 yards per kickoff return, with a long of 49.

But most impressive of all was the revamped Chiefs defense, which garnered three sacks and forced three turnovers, all at the expense of New York Jets quarterback Chad Pennington.

Kansas City (1-0) was a mere 29 seconds from a shutout, which would have been its first since Dec. 1, 2002.

Following Kansas City's 27-7 win, ESPN.com's headline read, "Chiefs defense shuts down Jets."

This Is what I think it means to "Own Your Life":
When you subtract out the sleeping time, commuting time, working time, and things you have to do each and every day of your life, most people don't have more than one to two hours a day to do what they would like to do-and then, would they have the money to do it?
We have discovered a way a person can learn how to "Own their life" by building a home-based business; and we have a system for doing it that is so simple anyone can do it. It doesn't require selling, and the best part is it won't take much of your time. If you are interested you can E-mail or call me and I will get you some information.

K-State Career and Employment Services

CES, Career Fair offer workshops, part-time job opportunities

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For those who cannot find a job, help is near.

Career and Employment Services has much to offer K-State students and faculty when it comes down to employment opportunities.

"We aim to help students get ready for some aspect of the job search," Kerri Day Keller, director of Career and Employment Services, said.

The center is involved heavily with assisting students with all levels of the employment process, from résumé building to interviews to dining etiquette.

D'Andre Williams, freshman in life sciences, used the center this year in an effort to gain part-time employment.

"I went to financial aid, and they told me to come here," Williams said.

The Office of Student Financial Assistance told Williams he was eligible for work study assistance and CES could help him. He said his main goal in finding a part-time job is flexibility, because he has a lot of homework.

Throughout the year, CES organizes several workshops to help prepare students for future employment.

The biggest event is the All-University Career Fair, which is 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Sept. 20-21 in Bramlage Coliseum. This year, Keller said more than 200 businesses will attend the event. CES recommends students come prepared to apply for jobs. Some businesses hire students on the spot. Carrying a résumé and an idea of what you can offer different businesses are other things Keller said to keep in mind.

For students unable to attend the workshop, CES also offers help at its Web site www.ksu.edu/ces. On the site, students can browse available part- and full-time employment opportunities in the city, state and country. The site is updated on a daily basis.

However, Keller admits finding a job is not easy for some students. One of the center's main struggles is serving international students, Keller said.

"It's very challenging for international students to find employment in the U.S." she said.

International students have special needs, according to Keller, but they also need assistance in the same aspects of the job search as students from this country.

The center assists them with understanding the culture of the United States and what businesses expect of students, as well as expectations they might have of what a position in the U.S. would entail.

Career Fair offers more than job opportunities

Once upon a time, there lived a young student. This exuberant youth was head-strong, so when he heard of the Career and Employment Services Career Fair he said, "Wooo, dollar night at the bars" and did not go.

JONAS HOGG

As the months went by, the young student realized that graduation was approaching. To avoid returning to Mom-and-Dad land, he would need to find gainful employment.

Unbeknownst to the student when he set upon his education, is the fact that any bachelor's degree that ends in -ology or -omen's Studies is, generally speaking, wallpaper.

"I shall make a difference," the student said "that will prepare me for a job."

So the student joined the Happy Friendly Corps, and set off to perform happy friendly deeds throughout the world.

The student returned and said, "Surely, now that I have made a difference I will find a job." So the set out to find employment.

"We don't make differences here at InsuraShaft" the potential employers would say. "As impressive as we find degrees in -ology or -omen's Studies, we will not offer you a job."

So the despondent student returned to his studies, determined to raise his marketability and exploit dollar night at the bars. Again, Career Fair presented itself to the student.

"Surely with a master's degree that ends in -ology or -omen's Studies I will not need help, besides, wooo, dollar night at the bars," he said.

So the student became wise, and still wanting to make a difference, began applying to international organizations.

"But, you are too moral" said the United Nations.

"But, you are too religious" said the Red Cross.

"Naw, dogg" said the international association of rappers.

"Wooo, dollar night at the bars" said Amnesty International.

The student grit his teeth and said, "I will educate myself so that no difference-makers shall refuse me," and returned to seek the coveted title of PhD.

As the student prepared his doctoral dissertation on the importance of degrees that end in -ology and -omen's Studies, he again saw the information for the upcoming Career Fair.

"Very well," said the student, now aged and crippled by student loans.

As the student browsed booths he glanced up and saw a familiar face.

"You, I know you" said the scurvy-ridden student pointing an arthritic finger.

"Of course you do" said the other. "We went to school together getting our bachelor's degrees. I found a great job at the Career Fair. I do work specializing in taking people with degrees that end in -ology and -omen's Studies, and paying them lots of money to make a difference."

The student was appalled. "You mean all I had to do was go to the damn fair?"

"Yup," the other said. "Look, it's been fun, but I've got to go. Wooo, dollar night at the bars."

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

You know that really cute halter-top you wear out every Friday night? Well, this season it is also perfectly acceptable to wear it for a job interview, if you play your cards right.

Pair your cute weekend party top with a matching, fitted suit jacket. You'll not only be trendy, but ready for a more casual job interview. For tops that are a bit too low cut, try layering a top underneath.

Top this ensemble off by sliding into a pair of casual blue jeans – the darker the better. Dark denim is in high demand this season, and dresses up an outfit much better than lighter or acid washed denim. And even though the trend is to buy jeans that already look as though they've been worn for years, don't do it this time. Avoid tears, unraveled seams or frayed hems.

Though this may seem more casual than anything you ever expected to wear to an interview, it may be perfect for certain environments. The jeans provide a comfortable, more casual air to the ensemble, while the suit jacket and stylish top dress the outfit up enough to let the employer know you're serious about the position and took time to prepare for the interview.

There are also ways for guys to dress stylishly for job interviews. While a nice pair of black slacks is always acceptable for a serious job interview, you can always spruce them up a little by adding a trendy, matching belt.

Match the slacks with a nice button down shirt in coordinating striped patterns. Stripes are in style for men this season too – and once you buy a shirt like the one pictured, you can dress it up or dress it down, which makes it a nice addition to your wardrobe.

Throw a nice black jacket over the shirt, and you may look so good you don't need a tie. However, men do not want too much skin showing during a job interview. So if you do choose to go tie-less, make sure you either button up the shirt all the way or pair it with a matching undershirt.

Let's face it — three-piece business suits or a jacket and tie are not exactly the most fashionable choices of clothing attire. As a result, selecting an outfit for a job interview can be a painful task.

Fortunately, there are many ways to spruce up your drab business clothes and to maintain professionalism in the process of doing so.

Model: Heather Kautz, senior in advertising and public relations.
Top: A blue gauzy top by Miss Me, $30.10, Zotci's.
Suit Set: Brown velvet pinstripe suit by Tulle: jacket $55.20, skirt $34.30, Zotci's.
Shoes: Blue Flats by Pierre Dumas, $19.99, Zotci's.

Don't underestimate the effect a splash of color will have on a dark brown business suit. Throwing a fun but tasteful top underneath your plain brown jacket will make a huge difference.

In addition to making your dingy suit a bit more stylish, it will also allow you to personalize your outfit. Letting your attire reflect your personality might help you stand out a little bit from the other candidates – and make you harder to forget.

If you want to take the fashion of your interview attire to the next level, try a suit made of a fun material. This season, fuzzy fabrics such as corduroy, suede and velvet really stand out.

Pinstripes are also all the rage, which can work wonders for shorter or heavier individuals. The vertical stripes can elongate the torso, making a person appear taller or slimmer. In other words, this trend is a definite advantage for those of us who don't have "model" figures.

Match the fashionable suit with a gauzy, tuxedo-front shirt. These shirts are both classy and feminine, and are available in a wide enough variety of colors and styles to suit any personality.

For more casual, relaxed environment interviews, it is perfectly acceptable to match a dressier top and shoes with a pair of nice jeans. Dark denim is a good choice, as it is both fashionable and dresses up an outfit better than lighter, worn denim. Refrain from wearing jeans sporting holes, frayed hems or similar destruction.

A nice button-down shirt, paired with a matching undershirt, will prove you care about the position you are applying for and will take the job seriously. If the environment is appropriate, it may also be okay to cuff your sleeves, stopping halfway between your elbow and your wrist.

It is also important to be clean-shaven for a job interview – this will let the employer know you take care of yourself. Furthermore, several businesses may actually discourage their employees from growing excessive facial hair.

Model: Scott Howell, freshman in mechanical engineering.
Top: Striped button down shirt by Johnny Max, $45, Zotci's.
Pants: Jeans by Abercrombie, about $80, Abercrombie & Fitch.
Shoes: Shoes by Sketchers, about $50, Nordstrom.

Top 5 tips to make job hunt in Manhattan simpler

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For some, finding a job in town is a tough task. But students are in luck. By taking a few simple steps, they have the potential to be moments away from their next job.

1. ASK FOR HELP

Career and Employment Services has career fairs, workshops and can meet with students on an individual basis. The CES Web site www.ksu.edu/ces, has hundreds of local, state and national job opportunities are available.

Alison Doyle, columnist with www.About.com, said networking is key to finding jobs.

"Speak with anyone and everyone you can think of, and ask for contacts in your geographic and/or career fields of interest," she said

Many professors and counselors are excellent resources for job search advice – they might even be a solid job recommendation.

2. APPLY TO BUSINESSES WITH SEVERAL OPENINGS

Grocery stores, food chains and malls are excellent places to consider. Places like the Manhattan Town Center, Department of Housing and Dining Services and Student Publications Inc. are excellent hot spots. They usually hire in bulk, increasing the odds of landing a paycheck.

3. WHY APPLY?

Wanting a job is not reason for deserving it. Students should apply for jobs that appeal to them, but also relate to their experiences.

Rachel Salder, columnist with www.employmentguide.com, encourages people to research the company.

"Knowing about a potential employer gives you a slight edge over other candidates," she said.

This especially prepares them for the application, and more importantly, the interview.

4. BE PERSISTENT

Employers love enthusiastic employees. Communicate with them, but do not appear desperate. Whether they got a job or not, a good follow-up interview with the employer might help illustrate why they were a good or bad hire.

5. BE CONFIDENT, HAVE FUN

Nobody likes a stiff employee. They want someone with personality. Be confident–this is not a time to be modest. They should tell employers why they deserve the job, not the other person. Aim to make yourself stand out. It's OK to be quirky. But don't try too hard because if you have to work hard at getting the job, maintaining the job might be worse.

Preparation key to interviews

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As the saying goes, first impressions are everything.

This is why, when landing a job interview, it is important to be prepared.

"We certainly know that within those first five minutes, an interviewer in an employment situation can tell if this candidate is serious about an employment opportunity," Kerri Day Keller, director of Career and Employment Services, said. "They may have a general kind of sense if they see them as a fit."

However, there are many things one can do in advance to help make a good first impression.

PRACTICE

Although it may sound strange, practicing beforehand is a good way to prepare for the interview, Keller said.

There are typical questions employers may ask, such as individual skills and personal experiences one has to offer the employer.

Practice responding to such questions by writing sample answers.

Through CES, individual advisers are also available to conduct mock interviews with persons seeking employment and video taped mock interviewing will be available in the spring.

RESEARCH

In addition to practicing, it is also important to do some background research before walking into the interview.

"One of the things we hear over and over again from employers is that students need to be prepared with knowledge of the job they're applying for and the company they're applying with," Keller said. "It reflects very poorly to go into an interview and not have some basic knowledge of the job they're applying for."

PRESENTATION

When the interview time arrives, make sure to have a résumé and list of references on hand. In some employment situations, it may also be necessary to present a portfolio to the employer.

APPEARANCE

To make a good first impression, it is also important to look the part.

"One of the things I've told students when they're thinking about what to wear is that often they'll be working with people their parents' age," Stacey Warner, leader of extension operations for K-State Research and Extension, said. "I think it's a good rule of thumb to think, what would my mom say, when they're trying to decide what not to wear."

Of course, there is also the issue of tattoos and body piercings. Company policies regarding this sensitive subject often vary, so consider what the employer finds acceptable.

"I think first of all you need to take a look at the culture of the organization you're applying for a job with," Warner said. "There will be employers for whom that will be appropriate."

For K-State Research and Extension, Warner said that probably doesn't fit with its culture.

"A couple of earrings in the ears would be okay. Other than that, it probably won't fit us very well," she said.

However, physical appearance is not the only factor weighed during first impressions.

"It's clothing, hair, body language, speech, the way a person carries themselves. All of that works together for first impressions," Warner said.

FOLLOW UP

Even with other students seeking employment in a relatively limited job market, there is a way to stand out – be assertive.

"One of the most assertive things a candidate can do to make sure they're not getting overlooked is to follow up after an interview," Keller said. "Show courtesy to the employer and thank them for the opportunity."

Résumés make first impressions

By Laura Noll
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sometimes all it takes is one sheet of paper to land a job.

And messing that up can be easily avoided.

Although some are aware of the purpose of a résumé and what to include, many may still need to learn the secrets to making a résumé stand out from the rest.

Yana Parker, owner of Damn Good Résumé Service, operates www.damngood.com. The Web site is dedicated to providing tips for the perfect résumé. Based on her experience, Parker said the most common mistake made in creating a résumé is to leave out a job objective.

The job objective commonly precedes all other information on the résumé and shows the employer the applicant is aware of the demands of the position.

"If you don't show a sense of direction, employers won't be interested," Parker said. "The objective portion of the résumé usually consists of five to six words, stating the position for which you are applying."

Those seeking immediate help are encouraged to attend Brad Karsh's "Confessions of a Recruiting Director" at 8:30 tonight in Forum Hall. Courtney Pike, communications manager of www.Jobbound.com, said the presentation will give students an inside perspective on how to write breakthrough résumés and prepare confidently for interviews.

"In his presentation, Karsh will debunk all the job search myths that will have students ripping up their current résumé and creating a new one that reflects their true potential," she said.

However, students who cannot attend tonight's presentation still have options. Career and Employment Services also has many workshops and events to assist in the résumé-writing process.

A résumé critique workshop is available to students from 3 to 4:30 p.m., Sept. 15, in 100 Holtz Hall.

Dorothy Evans, assistant director of Career and Employment Services, said additional sections of a résumé should include personal contact information, education and relevant experiences.

For a good "educational experience" section of a résumé, Evans recommends including at least a degree and graduation date with the name and city of the school.

In total, a student résumé should average one page in length. Employers look for conciseness and organization, Evans said.

Additionally, when writing a résumé, keep in mind what the employer is looking for in an employee.

Michael Marlen, senior in computer science, math and computer engineering, had numerous suggestions for building a great résumé.

"Present the information the company is looking to hire you for in a nice, clean fashion," he said. "Make sure all the information that is relevant to the job is listed, and make sure there are no typos. Definitely try to make yourself stand out and look good."

Marlen also encourages students to submit a résumé to the employer in person.

"It gives the employer a chance to glance at it and meet you for a pre-interview, ideally increasing your odds of getting the interview you are after in the first place," he said.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One of the first things students do when they enter K-State is get a student ID.

For most students, the most memorable part of the ID is the unflattering picture that will haunt them for at least the next four years. But, for criminals, the most memorable part is the student's name and social security number.

Social security numbers on student IDs make students vulnerable to identity theft, said Leslie Moore of the Kansas Bureau of Investigation's Criminal Records Unit. Criminals can steal an identity from anything that has a person's name and social security number on it.

The KBI says identity theft is on the rise and criminals are using personal information to do more than run up credit card bills. They are using stolen names and social security numbers when they are arrested, leaving the victim of identity theft with a criminal record.

"When a person gets arrested, most of them do not have an ID on them, so whatever they say their name and social security number are is what gets put down," Moore said.

When a criminal gives stolen information to an officer, the information is put into KBI's criminal records database. Even if KBI is alerted that this is a case of identity theft and the victim is able to prove that they did not commit the crime, their information will always be associated with the crime and the criminal.

"You will always be linked to that criminal because your name is their alias, and for that reason it can't be removed from the database," Moore said. "We get at least one to two reports a week that this has happened to someone and it haunts these people for the rest of their lives."

The KBI's criminal records database is public record and many employers check to see if applicants have

Roberts rebuffs Democrats' questions at hearing

By David Espo
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. – Turns out chief justice nominee John Roberts doesn't spend all his time reading legal briefs to prepare for his confirmation hearings. He's got enough time to see himself attacked on television, too.

"Some of the things you get pretty upset about," he said Tuesday.

But it's a free country, prompted Sen. Lindsey Graham, R-S.C.

"It's an expression I've been using a lot. It's a free country and it's a good thing it is," Roberts replied.

Roberts repeatedly refused to answer questions about abortion and other contentious issues at his confirmation hearing Tuesday, telling frustrated Democrats he would not discuss matters that could come before the Supreme Court.

Roberts
FEDERAL JUDGE

"I think nominees have to draw the line where they are most comfortable," said Roberts, who also sidestepped questions about civil rights, voting rights and the limits of presidential power in a long, occasionally antagonistic day in the witness chair.

He did say past Supreme Court rulings carry weight, including the Roe v. Wade decision that legalized abortion in 1973. But the principle of court precedents allows for overturning rulings, he said.

Over and over, he assured lawmakers his rulings would be guided by his understanding of the facts of cases, the law and the Constitution, not by his personal views.

"My faith and my religious beliefs do not play a role," said Roberts, who is Catholic.

"I will be my own man," he said later.

The 50-year-old appeals court judge and former Reagan administration lawyer fielded questions about dozens of legal precedents without benefit of notes. His wife, Jane Roberts, also an attorney, sat behind him, flanked by a delegation of aides the White Houses assembled to assist him.

Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., and committee chairman, raised the question of abortion moments after the hearing began, and the issue reverberated again and again.

"The right to privacy is protected under the Constitution in various ways," Roberts said at one point. Hours later, he said he agreed with a 38-year-old high court ruling in a case involving contraceptives for married couples, a decision often cited as the underpinning for abortion rights.

Serial rapist targets local women

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A rape committed last week is believed to be the work of a serial rapist, Riley County Police Captain Gary Grubbs said Tuesday.

Grubbs said evidence from the rape last week has led detectives to believe that it is the same person who committed five other rapes dating back to October 2000.

The most recent offense was between 3 and 4 a.m. on Sept. 5. A woman in her 20s was raped in her home in the north central area of Manhattan near the K-State campus, according to a news release by the RCPD.

The suspect was described as a Caucasian male in his 20s or 30s, between 5 feet 9 inches and 6 feet tall, with a medium build. He was described as wearing a dark ski mask, a black long sleeved T-shirt, leather gloves, pants and boots.

Security tips

- Lock all windows and doors throughout the day, but especially at night when you leave — even for short periods.
- Report to the police individuals who are acting suspiciously and watching women, children and residences.
- Leave lights on at night, even when away from home. Install motion-activated lights.
- Have your key ready when returning home so the door can be opened without delay.
- Do not allow strangers to use your phone. Instead, offer to summon emergency assistance for them.
- Vary your routine and routes a little each day — many rapes are planned.

Source: Riley County Police Department

Grubbs said the suspect targeted college-aged females, and all but the most recent incident have lived in apartment complexes. He said there is no evidence of forced entry in any of the homes.

Although Grubbs said there have been no other reports of rape linked to this suspect, it is possible there could be more victims out there.

Mary Todd, director of the K-State Women's Center, said it is estimated only one in 10 rapes is reported.

Todd said any woman can be assaulted, but there are some safety measures she can take.

"Don't assume you are safe," she said. "Take precautions such as extra locks on doors, especially locking all balcony sliding doors and checking with apartment managers to see if they have installed panic button alarms in each apartment."

Suspect arrested for theft, drug possession

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jeffery Carlson, Clay Center, Kan., was arrested on 19 counts of theft and 19 charges of possession of opiates or narcotics Monday afternoon.

Lt. Michael Quintanar of the Riley County Police Department said Carlson is believed to have been stealing pain medications intended for residents of St. Joseph Village, an assisted living residence in Manhattan, where he was employed.

Doug Frihart, the administrator for St. Joseph Village declined to comment on how long Carlson had worked at the village, but said his employment was terminated upon his arrest.

Frihart said Carlson worked in the nursing department and helped distribute medicine to residents.

"The whole situation involves medication, and he did have the training and the certification to be able to handle medications," he said.

Sgt. Richard Fink of the RCPD Investigations Unit said he had seen a pattern over the past three to four months of medications being signed out but not delivered to patients.

"There was a paper trail that certain people who were responsible for distributing medications didn't do their job," Fink said

Fink said St. Joseph Village brought the situation to the RCPD's attention, identified the problem and did a large part of the investigation.

"They were on top of it. They did a very responsible, good job all together," he said.

Frihart was unable to comment further on the investigation, but said no residents were endangered.

As of Tuesday afternoon, a sentencing date had not yet been determined. Bond was set at $15,000.

Vegetable oil-driven bus visits Iowa

Illustration by Bennie Green | COLLEGIAN

IOWA CITY, Iowa – They rolled into town on a tank of vegetable oil from a Chinese restaurant in Nebraska. Behind the bus, near-colorless exhaust poured out, leaving Clinton Street smelling just slightly of egg rolls.

The National Outdoor Leadership School stopped by Iowa City on Sept. 9 to showcase its environmentally-friendly bus, which is powered by recycled vegetable oil. The bus tour, which started in Wyoming, has scheduled stops at campuses across the nation to promote the wilderness-education school – which uses the outdoors as a classroom environment.

"The bus represents a lot of what we do in terms of the [school's] philosophy," Teal Maxwell, a school marketing representative, said. "We drive all over the place ... we want to do that using veggie oil, because that's a cleaner way to do it."

Everything inside the bus – laptops, lights, even a movie projector – runs off solar power. The only exception is the 90-gallon converted diesel engine that uses restaurant grease as fuel. While the bus can run off diesel, Maxwell said, that's a last resort. The crew prefers to scope out grease traps behind Mexican and Chinese restaurants in a bid for oil that would otherwise be carted away.

"We knock on the door and say, 'We noticed you have some grease out there – would you mind if we take it?'" Maxwell said. "Once they get over the fact that we're not crazy ... they're actually happy to give it to us, because they have to pay to get it hauled off."

Before the oil can be used as fuel, it's warmed and filtered for impurities, which takes approximately an hour. Maxwell said the bus gets mileage comparable with diesel – around nine miles per gallon – but produces cleaner, less harmful emissions that smell faintly of French fries or Chinese food.

The National Outdoor Leadership School's Web site reports veggie cars produce no sulfur dioxide, the compound that causes acid rain, and 78 percent less carbon dioxide, a greenhouse gas that contributes to global climate change.

ILLINOIS INK LAW IRKS MANY

CARBONDALE, Ill. – An Illinois law prohibiting tattoos for anyone under 21 has been on the books since 1961, but many in Southern Illinois have been able to get around the law.

SIUC students with tattoos were surprised to hear it's a Class C misdemeanor in Illinois for anyone to tattoo or offer to tattoo a person under the age of 21.

Several tattoo parlors are located within walking distance of SIUC, including Golgotha Tattoos, located at 703 S. Illinois Ave.

A lot of students who come into Golgotha have to be turned away because they're not old enough, said Darren Ashbaugh, a tattoo artist with 14 years experience.

"A majority of people are unaware that people under 21 can't get a tattoo in Illinois," Ashbaugh said.

There are no statistics available to gauge how many people under 21 get tattoos in Illinois, but Randy Mathis, a community resource officer for the Carbondale Police, said he's not heard of a single complaint in his six years with the department concerning underage inking.

The Illinois law barring tattoos can easily be circumvented, said Maria Stevenson, a senior from Carbondale studying music education.

"If I couldn't get a tattoo in Illinois, I would just go to another state," Stevenson said, who has friends who got tattoos in St. Louis because they were under 21.

Deidra Felton, a graduate student studying animal science was surprised to hear that Illinois is just one of two states in the country that prohibits tattoos for people under 21.

"I got my tattoo my sophomore year in North Carolina," Felton said. "If you're old enough to vote, you should be old enough to get a tattoo. The law doesn't stop anyone."

March aims to end global warming

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Protesting can now require no effort. Rather than picketing with signs, students are marching against global warming online.

Music Television's mtvU joined the year-long Stop Global Warming virtual march with the Curb Global Warming sweepstakes yesterday.

Students who sign up will be entered to win the Toyota Prius actor Larry David drives on his HBO show "Curb Your Enthusiasm." David, who has written for Saturday Night Live and Seinfeld, donated the car.

Laurie David, Larry David's wife and the creator of stopglobalwarming.org, said they need a large number of protesters to show lawmakers the public is concerned with global warming.

"We're creating a movement," she said. "We want to get enough people involved that global warming can't be ignored."

So far, more than 100,000 people have joined the march, including senator John McCain, Leonardo DiCaprio and Walter Cronkite.

While some virtual marches demand participants swamp congressmen with calls or e-mails, students in the Stop Global Warming march only need to sign up.

For more information
To join the march and enter the sweepstakes, go to www.mtvu.com.

"We want to keep the energy in one direction – heading toward the solution," Laurie David said.

"It's not a partisan issue. We're all guilty. We're all part of the problem, so we want to focus on a solution," she said.

Once students join, they will get e-mails with information about global warming.

"People need to be educated," Laurie David said. "There's a lot of misinformation out there."

Stephen Friedman, general manager of mtvU, said college students often want to be involved but don't know how to go about it.

"They want clear things to do," he said. "They want to take action."

Laurie David said college students need to be concerned about the environment because it will affect them more than anyone.

"It's about your tomorrow," she said. "If not you guys, then who? College students in the past have been responsible for change."

Laurie David said global warming is a problem people can start solving now.

"There are so many things we could be doing," she said. "We need a clean industrial revolution."

OPINION

TO THE POINT

K-State shouldn't charge for new IDs

Anybody who has ever had to deal with identity fraud will tell you it's about as fun as the average root canal. K-State, however, has left us all wide open for identity theft.

By having our full name and social security number on our student IDs, K-State has put us all at risk for a crime that has become so common, major law enforcement offices have entire branches devoted to its prosecution and prevention.

Although K-State has decided to change the ID cards, their policy concerning the change is insufficient.

Making students pay for a new ID is inexcusable. This is K-State's mistake, not students'. Why are students forced to pay for their own security – which the school has compromised?

Additionally, getting rid of social security numbers on school IDs will solve only half the problem if students are still required to put the information on class sign-ins, medical forms, add-drop forms and things which could easily be picked up and used by someone of less than honorable intent.

As much as academe likes to imagine itself as pearly white and untainted, the arrests of several professors from major schools across the U.S. on charges of identity theft should be enough to quiet the bureaucratic belly-aching that has accompanied these much-needed and long-overdue changes.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Strange bedfellows

Science, Religion agree embryonic stem cell research unethical, unnecessary

KODY COOPER

During the 23-and-a-half-hour break between Spongebob episodes, the clock ticks slowly. It is during these monotonously melodic intermissions that I ponder heated political issues, like embryonic stem cell research.

From time to time, unexpected visitors interrupted my melancholic meditation. Recently, my doorbell chimed at 3 a.m. (t-minus four hours until Spongebob).

Opening the door, I immediately recognized the quarreling voices of two timeless archenemies: science and religion. Strangely, I felt I'd met them before.

Religion sounded irritated, "I already told you, Science, I'm not joining your obnoxious Facebook club 'Darwin is my homeboy', so stop inviting me."

Science shot back. "At least I'm not part of the flat-earth enthusiast group, 'Don't blame us, we voted for Ptolemy.'"

Religion wasn't fazed. "I never joined that group, I'm just a groupie. Besides, you're just mad because you just got hit with the 'ugly truck' on your wall."

Science retorted, "well, my unshaven ugliness is just another proof of ape ancestry."

The squabble was incessant. I interjected with a burning question: "I'm troubled by this debate about embryonic stem cell research (ESCR) what do science and religion have to say?"

Science smiled.

"Believe it or not, Religion and I agree that ESCR is a complete bastardization of truth. Punk politicians and Hollywood idiots are propagating false hopes about ESCR. In all the years since the initial harvesting of human embryos for stem cells, not one cure has been produced. Complications like post-transplantation tumor formation make future prospects bleak."

I couldn't believe it. Years of human embryo destruction and a cure for Parkinson's disease or Alzheimer's is still a pipe dream?

Science continued, "Adult stem cell research actually has the greatest promise. Stem cells from umbilical cords and adult tissues are generating real breakthroughs. Furthermore, this research is wholly ethical."

I stammered, "Ethical?"

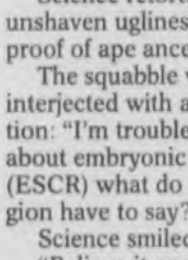
Science interrupted, "Did you know that you yourself were once an embryo? At the moment of conception, you were genetically distinct from your parents: a living organism. As an embryo you were smaller than the radius of a needlepoint, yet your genes coded over more than 500,000 typed pages of instructions for all your features."

Wow. It never occurred to me. In fact, every human being, even the creator of Spongebob, used to be an embryo.

Religion chimed in, "Not only does an embryo contain the entire human genome, but a divine process has enjoined it with what the ancients called 'psuke' or what we currently refer to as the 'soul'."

My mind was racing. So some celebrities and politicians advocate the murder of defenseless, ensouled, human embryos? What if the creator of Spongebob had been martyred as an embryo in the name of recalcitrant research? A world without Spongebob? Could anyone justify such madness?

Some politicians are completely desperate for votes in the ballot box. Are you a paraplegic ailed with muscular dystrophy and diabetes? Vote for me and you'll walk again! In fact, you'll get superhuman strength! Finally, you'll be able to compete in world championship midget tossing and shatter the 32.5-foot world record while double-fisting Twinkies.



I wondered aloud, "Is there anyone virtuous left in America who cares more about protecting life than making false promises?"

Religion and science spoke in unison, "Kansas Senator Sam Brownback should be praised for his consideration of scientific and religious truth as he crusades to end the embryonic holocaust of human life."

I know whom I want as the United States' next President.

Actions have ripple effect on all of us

RACHEL THOMPSON

We crave interaction and touch with other humans, but we may not realize the power our actions, words and lives have on the people we interact with.

We may not even realize the quantity of people we come in contact with who are affected by, or can affect us. Every person holds a powerful ability to change someone's day and make it better or worse.

A powerful illustration of the relationships that forms from collisions between people, and the way they echo and spread, is in the movie "Crash."

This film challenges you to think and react to the characters as they careen into each other's lives throughout a single day. Seeing the consequences that desperate actions or assumptions produce and the ripple effect of actions by intolerant and prejudiced people is astonishing. At the end of the day, no one knows how your actions have changed someone's life, and this film demonstrates that unpredictably along with the extent to which a single set of actions can reverberate through life.

Everyone knows those days when waking up in a bad mood or having a rough moment can ruin the rest of the day. We often take that stress out on people who surround us and care about us, or strangers who have no reason to be subject to the anger or frustration we have.

A misunderstanding between friends can create enemies. A misunderstanding between strangers can create chaos. We have all made assumptions about strangers that make us angry, one example being road rage. The person driving in front of you is not trying to be rude and may have no idea of your rage, but if you assume they are trying to piss you off or they intentionally cut you off, then you can spoil your day.

The misunderstandings between cultures raise tensions quickly, often making both parties angry or insulted. These assumptions can be easily avoided or alleviated with some tolerance, patience and knowledge. Many people don't realize they are being intolerant; but in "Crash" it is glaringly evident.

As an outside viewer, we are able to see with a different perspective. With ourselves, we cannot see our own intolerance, but to others it is visible. We must question our actions and reactions to others and the consequences those incur before becoming livid with the world.

Smiles, hugs, laughter or any good human interaction will heal bad tempers and ease irritation. Laughing by yourself shortens the elation, but within a group of friends it reflects and strengthens.

We see countless numbers of people walking through campus every day. Just smiling and saying hello to the people sitting next to you in class can make them feel better, and it can also make you feel good.

So walk through life with an awareness of how far and broad your actions can reach, how many people you see everyday and the power that you have to leave a positive impression on others.

Jonas Hogg should take two minutes and do a little research before writing an article. Then maybe he won't sound like such an asshat.

To the ignorant students who have never been out west: those of us so-called "hicks" out in western Kansas, do not in fact shoot gay people because they are different. In actuality we are probably more civilized and intelligent than you city-folk.

Oh yeah! I can text the Fourum now! I'm doing it all the freakin' time now!

Grad students, just because you have graduated and you know the information doesn't mean you know how to teach it. Because you know what they say, "those who can, do; and those who can't, teach."

Pikes are pathetic. They have to post parties on Facebook.

John Becker, clearly you must be single and destined to stay that way for a long time.

Actually, the "official" longest word in the dictionary is pneumonoultramicroscopicsilicovolcanoconiosis, defined as "a lung disease caused by the inhalation of very fine silica or quartz dust."

I have a question: how many beers does it take to drink yourself into a self-induced coma?

I'd like to take this time to thank the KD sorority house for the generous gratuity I received this past weekend when delivering their pizzas. I would only hope that all the other houses follow in their footsteps.

K-State orchestra, dancers come together to perform ballet show at McCain Auditorium Tuesday

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

At the season-opening concert, K-State Orchestra cello players play through a piece during their performance Tuesday evening in McCain Auditorium. The orchestra's next performance will be Oct. 18.

Christopher Hanewinckel
COLLEGIAN

More than 600 K-State students and community members attended "An Evening of Ballet Music" by the K-State Orchestra and K-State dancers Tuesday night at McCain Auditorium.

David Littrell, distinguished professor of music and orchestra conductor, said the orchestra's performance was the best September concert since he started conducting in 1990.

Littrell said he invited the dancers to perform since the music was ballet. He refused to pick just one favorite piece of the concert.

"I loved every piece, and the dancers added a lot to the concert," Littrell said.

Eight K-State dancers performed ballet, tap and can-can on four songs. The dancers had three weeks for auditions, choreography and rehearsals. They rehearsed with the orchestra only once – during Monday's rehearsal.

Joyce Yagerline, associate professor and director of KSU Dance Program, choreographed the show on limited stage space.

Yagerline said dancing to a live orchestra is an enriching experience for the dancers.

"There is a vibrancy to live music," Yagerline said.

Saylor Burgess, junior in dance and women's studies, was one of five can-can dancers on Orpheus in the Underworld. The can-can dancers wore handmade, detailed costumes designed and executed by Becky Polzella, who spent 50 hours on each costume.

Burgess said it was the combination of intense rehearsals and a strong choreographer that allowed the show to come together in three weeks.

"Joyce is an awesome and inspiring choreographer. I thank her very much for allowing me to be in the can-can piece," Burgess said.

Littrell and Yagerline said they are planning joint performances for future seasons, since dancers are not regulars in K-State Orchestra's performances.

Jessica Elliott, sophomore in music education and violinist, said her favorite part of the concert was the last two songs.

"The dancers really added variety to the show," Elliott said.

Gretchen Hendrickson, sophomore in music education and audience member, said her favorite portion of the show was the dancing.

"The can-can dancers were energetic," Hendrickson said. "They were very entertaining to watch."

Gospel artist to open McCain series

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Friday's opening night at McCain Auditorium will feature a type of music the series doesn't normally offer.

Sandi Patty, a 2004 Gospel Hall of Fame inductee, will perform contemporary Christian, Broadway and patriotic numbers at 8 p.m. Friday.

Patty
2004 GOSPEL HALL OF FAME INDUCTEE

"We wanted to branch out with our musical styles," Thomas Jackson, director of marketing and development for McCain, said. "She's one of the pinnacle artists in that area of music."

Jana Fallin, division chair of music education and president of the McCain board, said the board wanted to cater to area Christians.

Ticket sales have reflected an appreciation for this change. Jackson said McCain has sold "a large number" of tickets and about half of those have been to students.

"The phones haven't stopped ringing," he said. "There's been a lot of interest in this particular type of music."

Patty has won 39 Dove Awards and five Grammy Awards. She has three RIAA-certified platinum and five gold recordings. Fallin said Patty is not as well-known as some artists because Christian music artists do not get as much publicity.

"She could have been in the opera world but she choose to go the Christian route," Fallin said. "It's a shame the world didn't know her better."

Patty will sing from her album "Hymns of Faith...Songs of Inspiration" as well as some pop-style music, Jackson said.

"She's got a phenomenal range in singing styles," he said. "She can sing almost anything. It all sounds good."

Fallin agreed.

"She has a really glorious voice," she said. "This music will be well done. It'll be kind of like watching a Mercedes drive down the street."

Jackson said he and his colleagues will evaluate the success of Patty's performance before determining if other artists from the contemporary Christian genre will be asked to perform at McCain.

"We can definitely look forward to seeing this type of entertainment again," he said.

Wildcats' luck has run out

A win is a win, even if it is as unimpressive as K-State's win over Marshall on Saturday.

The Wildcats should not have won that game, but if it's any consolation, last year's team probably would have folded.

There are no other words to express what the Wildcats had on their side in their win besides luck. Maybe they should be grateful the Thundering Herd coach is in his first year.

ANTHONY MENDOZA

Mark Snyder had a brain lapse and decided to throw the ball with eight seconds remaining, even though his team was in field goal range and down by two points with a timeout remaining.

Any other year, the Wildcats would have left Joan C. Edwards Stadium with a loss, but the Wildcats had one thing working for them in this game: a lack of game experience for the Marshall players and head coach.

The Wildcats are 2-0, and Thomas Clayton is a legitimate replacement to Darren Sproles as the new feature player on offense, but there are things that should concern coach Bill Snyder.

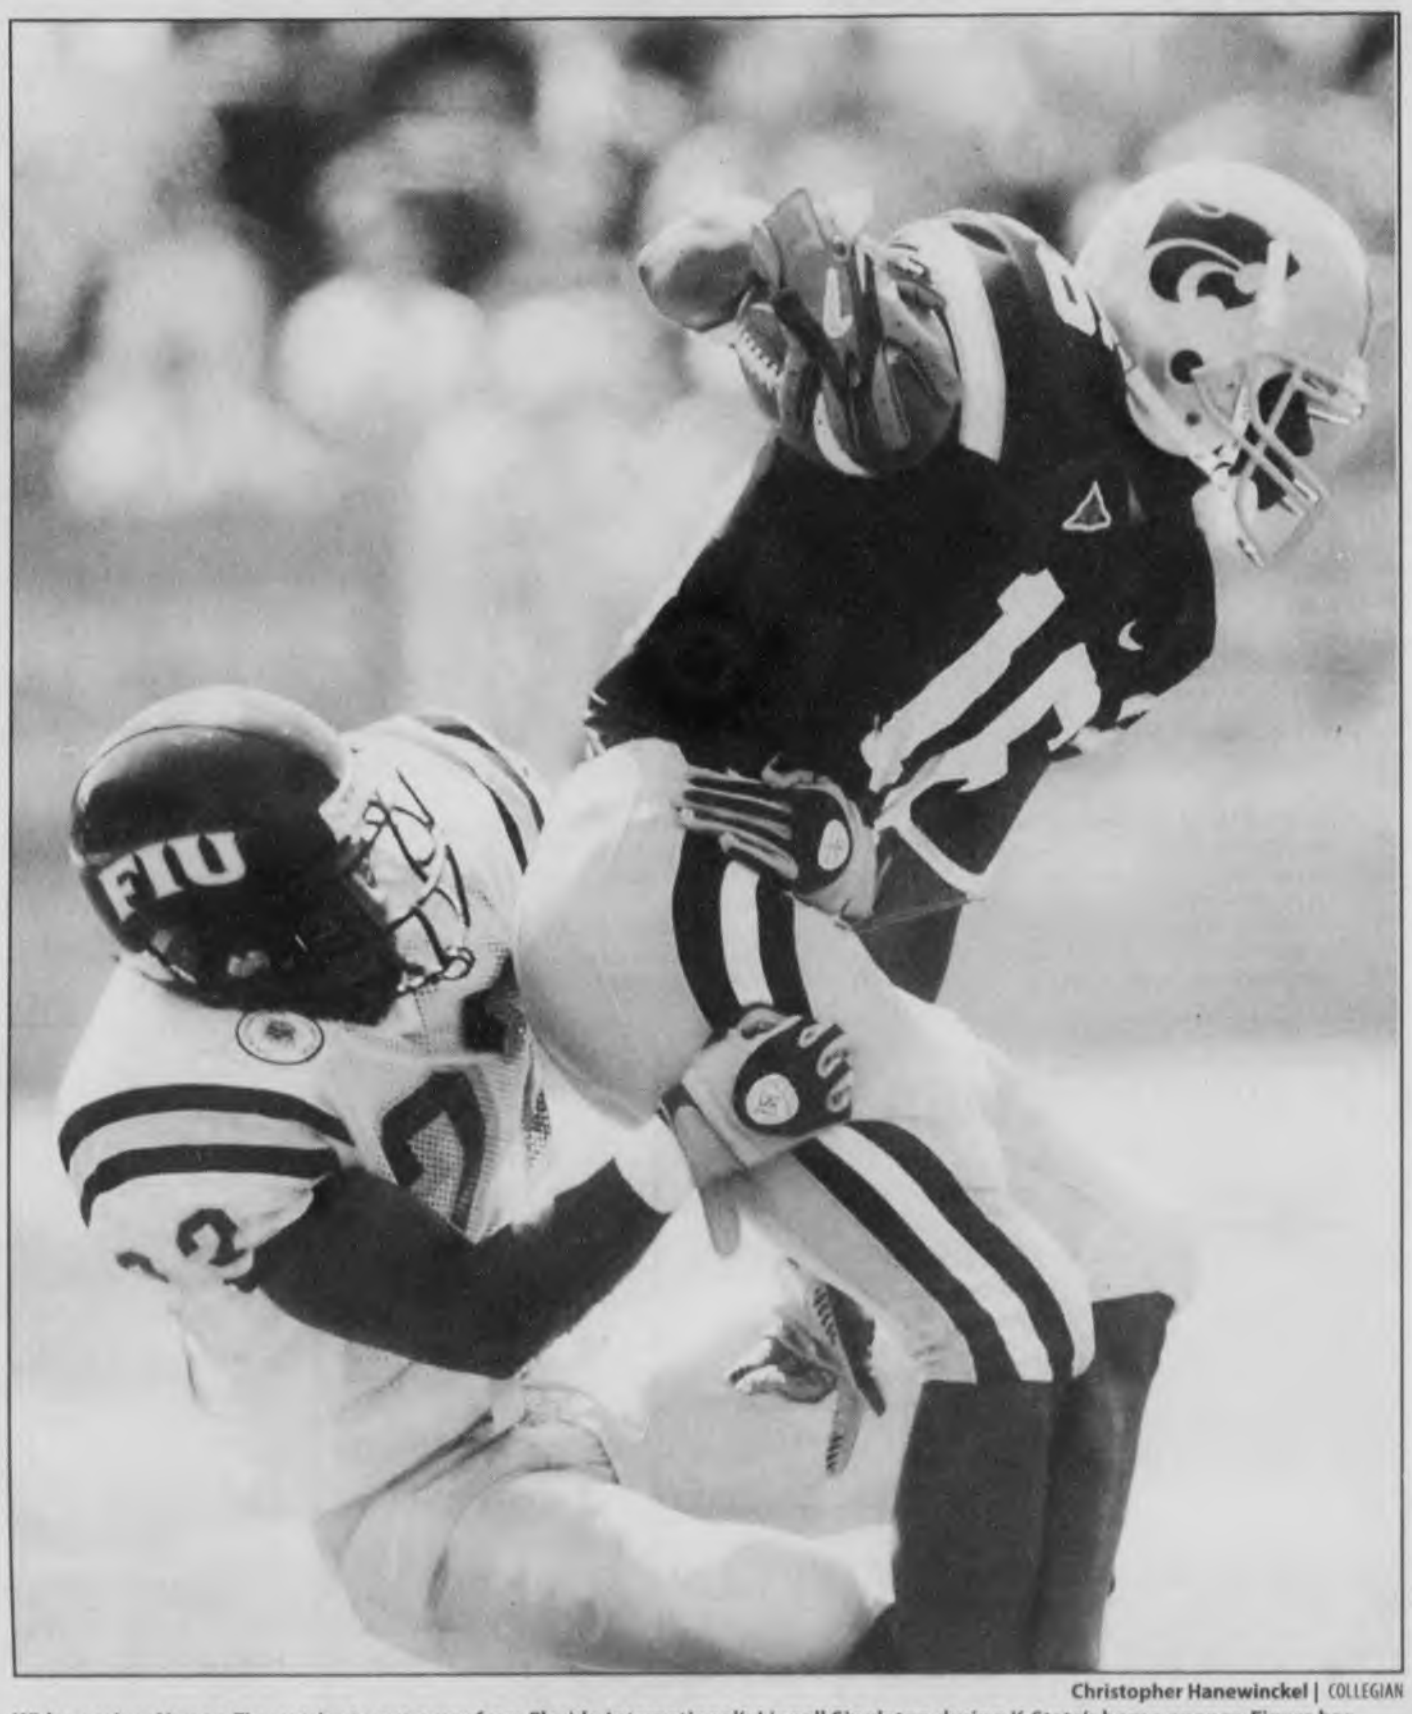
Yamon Figurs, who was supposed to be the game breaker this year, continued his early season issues with holding onto the ball on special teams. His second fumble in two games cost the Wildcats points again, as Marshall converted on the turnover.

K-State's leading returning receiver didn't make a dent in the stat sheet, besides the costly fumble, and has yet to become the deep threat he should be.

Last season, he averaged more than 15 yards per catch on 31 receptions. This season, Figurs has only three catches for 24 yards, an eight-yard-per-catch average.

It may not be all Figurs' fault, though, because early on, quarterback Allen Webb has failed to show consistent ability to throw the ball down the field or to be accurate off the scramble.

Webb has shown he is still not comfortable in the pocket and his run-first mentality will hurt the team offensively because it does not allow time for his teammates to make plays down the field or plays to develop.



His ineffectiveness throwing the ball on the run is also a problem, which was highlighted by his two passes during crucial points in the second half against Marshall, when he bounced the ball off the turf to tight end Rashaad Norwood on third downs that would have extended drives.

The bye-week could not have come at a better time for the Wildcats. It's a time to look over film and figure out problems with penalties and turnovers that nearly cost K-State its perfect start.

The Wildcats' luck is gone, and all nine lives have disappeared. Now they must prove they are a legitimate contender to win a weak North division, even if luck is no longer on their side.

Time to regroup

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Wide receiver Yamon Figurs tries to get away from Florida International's Lionell Singleton during K-State's home opener. Figurs has struggled with special teams plays this season and was replaced by junior wide receiver Jermaine Moreira on kickoff and punt returns.

Penalties, turnovers focus of week off

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For a brief stretch Saturday, K-State played almost as well as coach Bill Snyder could want.

On three consecutive possessions from the 5:46 mark of the first quarter to the 11:46 point of the second, K-State scored touchdowns on each drive, kept Marshall to a three-and-out and forced one fumble.

"There was a period of time after we had given the gift of 10 points, probably 12 and a half-, 13-minute period of time, where we probably played as well as we've played for quite some time," Snyder said on Tuesday.

However, on K-State's fourth drive, quarterback Allen Webb was intercepted by Marshall's Geremy Rodamer.

After that, the Wildcats did not score, but committed one other turnover and totaled nine of their 10 penalties and held on to win 21-19.

Since the next game is not until Sept. 24, Snyder said the Wildcats will focus on correcting turnovers during their week off.

"First and foremost, coaches, and then players, have to really recognize what are the issues," Snyder said. "We're in that process right now. We got a decent start on it (Monday), and we hope to continue through the week."

One player hit by the turnover bug has been return man Yamon Figurs.

Figurs began the season as the starting punt and kick returner, but after a fumbled punt against Florida International and a fumble on a kickoff return against Marshall – both led to opponent touchdowns – Jermaine Moreira replaced Figurs on the depth chart at each position.

However, his teammates caution not to count Figurs out.

"I think Yamon still could be the play maker too," safety Marcus Watts said. "Yamon's got that natural speed, that 4.2 speed that you just can't ignore. He's got the big-play capabilities at any time."

News & Notes

PASS RUSH A CONCERN

Snyder indicated Tuesday there are still issues with the Wildcats' pass rush.

K-State has two sacks this season – one from linebacker Maurice Mack and a combined sack by defensive tackles Quintin Echols and Alphonso Moran – each coming against Marshall

Snyder said progress has been made, but quarterback pressure is still a work in progress.

"That's certainly a concern for us, and maybe as big as any," Snyder said. "The fact that we only have two sacks in two ballgames probably addresses that issue as much as any other stat that's out there."

LACK OF COMMUNICATION

In the second half Saturday, a blown circuit caused K-State's headsets the coaches use to communicate between the field and press box to stop working.

As a result, the only way the coaches on the field could speak with the coaches in the press box was via one cell phone and two walkie-talkies.

Quarterback Allen Webb said the lack of working headsets affected play-calling in the second half.

"We got a lot of plays in very late, and we're a heavy-audible team, so when we did finally get the play, we really didn't have that much time to audible if we were faced with a situation we didn't like," Webb said.

NFL | Chiefs back charged after altercation at bar

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Chiefs running back Larry Johnson turned himself in to police Monday night after an altercation he had with his girlfriend early Saturday at a Kansas City bar.

Johnson

Police Department spokesman Darin Snapp said Johnson was cited for domestic abuse assault. Johnson posted bond and was released, with a court date set for Sept. 20 on the municipal charge.

Snapp said the incident began around 12:30 a.m. at The Drink when Johnson's girlfriend came into the bar where Johnson was with a different woman.

The 25-year-old girlfriend, of Overland Park, Kan., saw Johnson and walked the other way, Snapp said.

The running back then grabbed the woman by the arm and pulled her to the front door, according to the police report, where Johnson asked the manager to make her leave. But since she had done nothing wrong, the manager said he couldn't kick her out, so she stayed, Snapp said.

CFB | Skipping class might cost OU's Peterson a start

NORMAN, Okla. — Oklahoma coach Bob Stoops says he'll decide later this week whether suspended tailback Adrian Peterson will start Saturday against UCLA.

Peterson

"We'll determine that as the week goes," Stoops said Tuesday. "We'll see. At this point, we anticipate him playing. Start or not depends on how we feel practice is going, what we feel we need to do. Depending on what further happens from here, we'll see."

Peterson, who rushed for 220 yards and three touchdowns in Oklahoma's 31-15 win against Tulsa on Saturday, was suspended from practice on Monday and Tuesday after missing classes but was allowed to participate in team meetings and other activities. He is not being allowed to speak to reporters.

Peterson's suspension was a result of an Oklahoma athletic department policy on class attendance. Stoops said he supported the policy and even helped suggest it to Gerald Gurney, the school's associate athletic director for academic programs.

IRL | League drops 3 races, cuts season by 8 weeks

INDIANAPOLIS — The Indy Racing League will cut eight weeks and three events from its schedule in 2006, move its race at Watkins Glen, N.Y., to the week after the Indianapolis 500 and finish the season for the first time at Chicagoland Speedway.

The league is dropping races at California Speedway, Phoenix International Raceway and Pikes Peak International Raceway, leaving a 14-race schedule from late March through early September. Other races, including one or more of the three left off next year's schedule, could be added later, IRL president Brian Barnhart said Tuesday.

The series this year will end at Fontana, Calif., on Oct. 16. Next season, the final IRL race will be Sept. 10 at Chicago, the fourth venue to host the season wrapup. One of the main reasons for the earlier finish, Barnhart said, is to avoid conflicts with the NFL and the Major League baseball playoffs for fan attention.

SPT | High school sports participation tops 7 million

INDIANAPOLIS — California and New York continued cutting into Texas' huge lead and Michigan moved ahead of Illinois and Ohio in the number of high school students participating in sports.

Total student participation for all 50 states and the District of Columbia, meanwhile, rose 1.6 percent from 2003-04 to a record 7 million in 2004-05, according to an annual survey by the National Federation of State High School Associations. It was the 16th straight year the NFHS reported an increase in the number of high school athletes.

Football again had the most participants and the largest increase among all boys' sports. Basketball remained the leading sport for girls, but track and field showed the biggest gain. In terms of percentage increases, bowling and lacrosse had the biggest gains for both boys and girls.

Fritz close to No. 100

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In search of her 100th win as K-State's coach, Suzie Fritz and the 22nd-ranked Wildcats (8-1) will open conference play against the Oklahoma Sooners (5-3) at 7 tonight in Norman, Okla.

The Wildcats tied a school record with an 8-0 start before losing to No. 5 Minnesota in four games Saturday night at Ahearn Field House.

The Cats have the chance to bounce back against the Sooners, who posted a 4-16 record in the Big 12 Conference last season and who the Wildcats defeated in both matches last year. In fact, Oklahoma hasn't defeated K-State since 1998.

Even so, Fritz, who is in her fifth year at K-State, said her squad must stay focused during tonight's game.

Libero Angie Lastra lunges for the ball while outside hitter Jamie Perkins covers her Saturday afternoon at Ahearn Field House.

"All I know is they continue to improve by leaps and bounds each and every year," Fritz said of Oklahoma. "They were a much better team last year than they have been in the past. They are much more physical than they have been in the past, and it is not a team that we will overlook."

Sophomore libero Angie Lastra said the Wildcats will not take the Sooners lightly.

Kern finishes 2nd at CSU Invitational

By Cedrique Flemming
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Senior Ben Kern accomplished something Tuesday only one other K-State golfer had ever done.

Kern shot the second-lowest individual 54-hole score in school history at the Cleveland State Invitational in Chardon, Ohio, Monday and Tuesday, after carding a score of 8-under-par 205 (68-68-69).

"He is really starting to play with a lot of confidence, and he's playing under control," coach Tim Norris said in a release.

Kern's finished second overall, three strokes behind the individual champion, Gary Woodland of the University of Kansas, who shot an 11-under 202.

Kern and Woodland were the only golfers to shoot under par, with the third-place finisher, Peter Richardson of Purdue University, shooting even-par.

The Wildcats were fourth out of 17 teams heading into the final round before slipping four spots to finish eighth. K-State shot a combined score of 883 (293-291-299) at the par-71 Sand Ridge Golf Club.

Overall, K-State had a positive start to the season, Norris said.

"We still have some work to do, but overall I am pretty pleased," he said. "We were only 12 back of the leader, and I think we can find those 12 strokes pretty easily."

No job? Angry girlfriend? Broke? No dinero? HELP!

Whether students prefer a taste of the Caribbean islands, an eclectic bar or some super-indulgent ice cream, they never have to look too hard to find an affordable place for a date in Manhattan.

By Holly Kramer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A great date spot is a place that's wallet- but not diet-friendly. Cold Stone Creamery's menu boasts a huge selection of gourmet ice cream and mix-ins for students and their sweeties. It's also in Aggieville, at 1225 Moro St., and it's close enough to City Park to take a stroll and burn off those decadent calories.

For those who are on the move and on a budget, Little Caesars Pizza has an everyday pick-up special of a medium pepperoni pizza for only $5. People can grab a pizza and have a cheap dinner to take wherever they go.

"Five dollars for a pizza is a really good deal," Meghan Romain, senior in elementary education, said. "My boyfriend and I pick up one when we don't want to go out to eat."

Bowling is can be an inexpensive way to spend an evening with someone special. At Zuckey Bowl, 515 Richards Drive, a student can pay a $3 cover charge and bowl for $1 per game on Mondays and Wednesdays.

One exotic place to eat in Manhattan is The Little Grill, 6625 Dyer Road. It has a selection of genuine Jamaican fare. Students and their dates can try the Caribbean jerk pork chops or check out the rum punch. The tropical atmosphere sometimes even has live music.

For hungry students who prefer their food with a side of Aggieville, another option is Rock-a-Belly Deli, 718 Manhattan Ave. This small, funky bar offers made-to-order sandwiches and cheap drink specials. Some favorites are the Rueben sandwich and the chili.

"I really like the decorations," Romain said. "It's such a cute, fun place to have lunch and some good drinks."

The location is good for patrons to dine, walk around the 'Ville and then grab some post-sandwich cocktails.

TRES PASSÉ!

Be willing to take a chance in the name of fashion

COURTNEY LAIR

"Be daring, be different, be impractical, be anything that will assert integrity of purpose and imaginative vision against the play-it-safers, the creatures of the commonplace, the slaves of the ordinary," said Cecil Beaton, a respected photographer and fashion designer of his time.

I find this advice inspiring not only when it comes to fashion, but in every task one chooses to undertake.

This summer, I had the opportunity to study fashion journalism and intern at a merchandising studio in London, as well as travel Europe. Since I am quite a people-watching connoisseur, one of the things I desperately miss about the Europeans is their carefree, avant-garde attitude when it comes to their appearance.

Walking down the bustling Oxford Street to work everyday, I never knew what to expect. From businessmen in their forties sporting flashy red Pumas and mohawks with their tailored suits to head-to-toe Sienna Miller look-a-likes. Taking in all the diversity was absolutely captivating. I could not help but smile at some of the outlandish outfits these people dreamed up!

Even my fashion journalism teacher, Robin, was beyond fabulous. He never ceased to surprise our class with his almost theatrical costumes.

A typical day called for a knee-length royal-blue velvet overcoat layered over a white ruffled shirt, skintight leopard-print pants and the pointiest shoes imaginable.

Maybe each of us could learn a little lesson from the Europeans. Dress to please yourself, not everybody else. With just a little extra confidence and creativity, we could all add a dash of pizzaz to our lives and hopefully be a breath of fresh air to everyone else.

Remember mistakes are made for us to learn from. Through many fashion mishaps in the past and undoubtedly many more to come, I would like to share with you one which I hold dear to my heart.

What began as an innocent birthday present from my godparents ended up becoming the most humiliating fashion faux pas I have yet to commit.

As a second-grader following in the footsteps of my glitzy, clotheshorse of a grandmother, I was already well aware of the magic in spotlight-stealing clothes.

The feelings I felt when I tore open that box were comparable to those of Sarah Jessica Parker upon receiving next season's Oscar de la Renta couture.

This neon tie-dyed outfit could best be described as "Rainbow Brite on a trip to Amsterdam." However, I thought that the totally 1980s combination of lace (and therefore completely transparent) leggings and an off-the-shoulder T-shirt was simply divine.

Despite my constant begging, my mother refused to let me wear my beloved outfit outside of the house.

A few months later, when my parents were in Las Vegas, I realized this could be my only opportunity to stun my classmates with my scandalous little getup.

I traipsed into class like a model down the runway -I couldn't wait to see everyone's reaction.

To my astonishment, my classmates looked at me not in awe, but in dismay, and my teacher was certainly less than impressed when she threatened to send me home from school.

But the day of shame that I thought would never end finally did, and I arrived at school the next day with slightly less confidence than the day before.

Luckily, no one else seemed to remember. My teacher was far from Joan Rivers, known for dissecting every flaw on the red carpet, and the average second grader has trouble recalling his or her own phone number, let alone my miniscule fashion mistake.

No matter the consequence, I hold dearly to the belief that most risks, including those in fashion, are worth taking, because without them, we would never know when something might end up being truly fabulous.

TODAY IN HISTORY

1812 Napoleon enters Moscow

One week after winning a bloody victory over the Russian army at the Battle of Borodino, Napoleon Bonaparte's Grande Armée enters the city of Moscow, only to find the population evacuated and the Russian army retreated again. Moscow was the goal of the invasion, but the deserted city held no czarist officials to sue for peace and no great stores of food or supplies to reward the French soldiers for their long march. Then, just after midnight, fires broke out across the city, apparently set by Russian patriots, leaving Napoleon's massive army with no means to survive the coming Russian winter.

1814 KEY PENS "THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER"

Francis Scott Key writes a poem that will eventually become the lyrics to "The Star-Spangled Banner" after witnessing the massive British bombardment of Fort McHenry in Maryland during the War of 1812. Key, an American lawyer, watched the siege while under detainment on a British ship and wrote the famous words after observing that the U.S. flag over Fort McHenry had survived the 1,800-bomb assault. After circulating as a handbill, the patriotic words were published in a Baltimore newspaper on Sept. 20. Set to the tune of "To Anacreon in Heaven," an English drinking song written by the British composer John Stafford Smith, it soon became popular throughout the nation.

1847 SCOTT CAPTURES MEXICO CITY

During the Mexican-American War, U.S. forces under General Winfield Scott enter Mexico City and raise the American flag over the Hall of Montezuma, concluding a devastating advance that began with an amphibious landing at Vera Cruz six months earlier.

1901 AN ADOPTIVE WESTERNER BECOMES PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

On this day in 1901, the 42-year-old Theodore Roosevelt is suddenly elevated to the White House when President William McKinley dies from an assassin's bullet. McKinley's untimely death brought Roosevelt the presidency, but 17 years earlier, two other deaths had sent the young Roosevelt fleeing to the far West where his political ambitions were almost forgotten.

1944 AMERICANS LAUNCH OPERATION STALEMATE

On this day in 1944, the U.S. 1st Marine Division lands on the island of Peleliu, one of the Palau Islands in the Pacific, as part of a larger operation to provide support for Gen. Douglas MacArthur, who was preparing to invade the Philippines. The cost in American lives would prove historic.

1959 SOVIET PROBE REACHES THE MOON

A Soviet rocket crashes into the moon's surface, becoming the first man-made object sent from earth to reach the lunar surface. The event gave the Soviets a short-lived advantage in the "space race" and prompted even greater effort by the United States to develop its own space program.

1982 DEATH OF A PRINCESS

Princess Grace of Monaco, also known as Grace Kelly, died on this day of injuries sustained in a car crash. The accident was one of the most tragic in modern memory. The car plunged down a 45-foot embankment after the princess suffered a stroke and lost control of the car. Known as America's princess, Kelly's life had been a true fairy tale. She was born into a rich Irish Catholic family in Philadelphia where she attended private schools before enrolling in the Academy of Dramatic Art in New York. She soon rose to stardom both on Broadway and in Hollywood, winning the public's affection in such films as Rear Window and The Country Girl. However, she abandoned her acting career in order to marry Prince Rainier of Monaco, making her a real-life princess.

Faculty opposes parking garage

By Chris Carpenter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State faculty senators struck down a proposal that would have added 1,406 parking spots on campus at their meeting Tuesday.

They discussed the plan after Gary Leitnaker, assistant vice president of the Division of Human Resources, made a presentation involving the construction of the first of four new parking structures on campus.

The Faculty Senate made several arguments against the proposed garage.

Currently, there are 3,900 student parking stalls on campus, including the residence hall lots. Faculty and staff use another 1,900 stalls. On top of that, there are 3,660 first-come, first-served stalls.

Faculty senators argued the problem is that, on a campus with just under 10,000 parking stalls, 15,500 permits are sold each year, meaning on the average day, finding decent parking can be a serious challenge.

The garage, which would be built south of the K-State Student Union, would be designed to blend in with other buildings on campus. It would contain 1,406 parking spots, a net gain of 966 stalls over the current lot where it is proposed to be built.

"What we are trying to do with this garage is build something that will go a long way to alleviate our current parking problems," Leitnaker said. "But also something that will fit in with campus and be pleasing to the eye."

Funding for the project would come from a combination of bonds and parking fee increases. Student parking fees would increase by $25 each year for three years.

Faculty increases would be taken automatically out of salaries based on a three-tier fee structure that would take less from those who make less money.

"We want to stress that fees will only increase for three years, and that at the most faculty would only have about $2.06 taken out of each paycheck," Leitnaker said. "Even with the increases, K-State's parking fees will still be slightly below the national average for universities."

However, Faculty Senate seemed to be strongly opposed to the garage idea as a whole.

Several faculty senators argued that alternatives should be sought, rather than building four massive garages.

One suggestion was to use a transit system, running from the abundant stalls at Bramlage Coliseum to several points around campus.

Leitnaker was quick to stress alternatives had already been considered. "This garage is what was suggested by a committee that studied alternatives," he said.

"This, in their opinion, is what will be most effective."

That didn't change the outcome of an unofficial straw vote at the end of the meeting, where a majority of senators voted against the proposal. No official vote total was released.

Just after the presentation, Student Senate Chair Tyson Moore said the Student Senate was in favor of the garage.

"We voted to approve the garage as presented to us, which is the same presentation seen by the Faculty Senate today," Moore said.

"We do believe that the garage would be in the best interests of the students, and we do think that it would serve students better than a transit system."

It was also mentioned the current shuttle system runs from Edwards Hall and the K-State Foundation to various points around campus and is barely used.

However, it was also brought up that this could be due to a lack of marketing for the shuttle, and several Faculty Senate members professed to never hearing of the system.

Leitnaker also added that even though the structure would be massive, it would not detract from the surroundings or dominate the landscape.

"It will look good," he said.

Students welcome on city boards

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Justin Kastner loves a challenge.

And he proved it his junior year at K-State when he ran for city commissioner.

Kastner, 1998 K-State graduate in food science and industry and leadership studies, won the city election by a 25 percent margin.

This year, the city welcomes more eager students like Kastner who are willing to take bigger roles in government.

Running for an office isn't out of the question, considering "any student that is a resident of Manhattan can run for an office," Manhattan City Manager Gary Fees said.

"Numerous positions on different city boards are available to interested applicants."

The process of becoming involved with Manhattan government is simplified in a few steps, Fees said.

First, get to know the positions. Manhattan has five boards with committee positions available.

Those boards include: Cemetery Board, Douglass Center Advisory Board, Housing Authority Board of Commissioners, Social Services Advisory Board and Special Alcohol Funds Advisory Committee.

For details about each position, visit the City of Manhattan Web site, www.ci.manhattan.ks.us.

Second, apply. Applications are available on the City of Manhattan Web site or the city clerk's office at city hall, 1101 Poyntz Ave.

These applications must be turned into the clerk's office. The application can stay on file for up to two years.

Manhattan Mayor Ed Klimek will review applications and appoint board members with the open board positions.

Then, the City Commission gives the final approval of selected board members.

Students interested in board positions should not hold back, Fees said.

"If you're qualified, age is certainly not a criteria."

Former mayor Brad Everett, said that students like Kastner are an asset and well-accepted in city government.

Fees said, "I would encourage them to serve on a board or committee, whether city or county, for students need to engage in the government."

Political science students, though they might relate more to the political side of the boards than others, are not the only students Fees encouraged to join.

"Anyone should jump in, become involved," he said.

"We have historic resources board, health board and other positions available. It takes many people, with different backgrounds, to compose these positions."

K-State radio still alive

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After serving K-State for 78 years, KKSU, the university radio station, was shut down in 2002. Though it has been gone for nearly three years, K-State radio is still going strong.

KKSU had been the K-State radio station since 1924, but was shut down amid controversy in 2002.

The problem stemmed from a contract made with WIBW radio, said Richard Baker, news director for K-State Radio Network and former KKSU news director.

WIBW and KKSU shared the same frequency and alternated airtime, giving KKSU Saturdays for broadcasts of K-State athletic events.

"It was a share-time agreement with WIBW that went back years and years and years," Baker said.

In 1969, the university and WIBW traded the weekends for extra time between 5 p.m. and 5:30 p.m. However, WIBW had to agree to still carry K-State football.

"We knew that when we gave up football, no one would carry it," Baker said.

However, the wording of the contract caused problems after K-State football gained prestige. The university sold the broadcast rights to K-State sports to Larry Steckline and the Mid America Sports Network, Baker said.

"WIBW was not pleased, and they were looking for ways to do something about it," Baker said. "They went back to the old share-time agreement, and they said they have the right because in the agreement it says the broadcast must originate through them."

After a court battle, a judge ruled that WIBW had the right to broadcast the football games free of charge, so KKSU was terminated and the airtime was sold to end the contract.

"The university, realizing that they probably would never be able to sell the broadcast rights again for any money, agreed to give up the time that we broadcast," Baker said.

Selling the time to WIBW allowed other broadcasting companies the opportunity to broadcast K-State games.

"Over the next several years it would have cost millions of dollars if we had stayed with WIBW," Larry Jackson, director of K-State Radio Network, said.

After the station time was sold, many hoped K-State would purchase another station.

"There was an intent to investigate options, but the money given for KKSU was not enough to purchase anything comparable, so we are still investigating those options," Jackson said.

Even though the radio station was no longer on air, K-State Radio Network still wanted to provide its services to Kansas. The network sends out syndicated programming free of charge to stations statewide, Baker said.

"We used to send out reel tapes, and at one time they sent out probably 40,000 tapes a year or more," he said. "Then, as technology changed, so did we, and they started sending out programs on cassette, and we now do the same thing on CDs."

The K-State Radio Network currently mails CDs to 48 stations in Kansas every week that contain information about agricultural issues, horticultural research, family issues and public issues.

Along with weekly CDs, K-State Radio Network also provides live broadcasts to stations using a satellite purchased with the money from the sale of KKSU.

"We are doing the same work, getting the K-State research out to radio listeners," Jackson said. "It's just they aren't listening to KKSU to get it."

a criminal record. Victims may never know their identity has been stolen until a potential employer checks their criminal history.

Starting this summer, the K-State ID Center began issuing student IDs without social security numbers. New IDs will cost students $15, said Craig Johnson, assistant director of operations at the K-State Student Union.

Johnson said roughly 5,000 to 6,000 new IDs are issued each year for students who have lost their ID or need a replacement.

"I lost my student ID four years ago and I have yet to find it," Aaron Leiker, graduate student in mass communications, said. "I was fine until my professor required it for a test. In a moment of desperation, I had to get a new one."

Students should also avoid putting social security numbers on drivers licenses, Moore said.

Leiker opted for putting his social security number on his driver's license as a backup for his student ID.

"Putting my social security number on my driver's license probably wasn't the smartest thing to do, since it doesn't expire until 2013," Leiker said.

Moore offers students three tips to help protect their identity.

First, never leave a name and social security number for others to see. This includes class attendance and other forms that require this information to be passed around the room. Second, don't leave a student ID with others. Instead, offer to leave something that does not have personal identifiers on it. Third, when finished with an ID, shred it like a person would with a credit card.

"After all those years of school it would be devastating to miss out on a job because your identity was stolen," Moore said.

with respect," Lastra said. "We are a good team, and they are a good team, too, so we have to go out and play hard every single game."

When the two teams met Sept. 29, 2004, outside hitter Sandy Werner led K-State with 15 kills for a .375 hitting percentage.

This year, Fritz is asking Werner, a junior from Topeka, to be more consistent and more of a leader on the court.

"We need to rely on her more, and she needs to be more dependable," Fritz said. "I told her I have a tremendous amount of confidence in her, and she needs to have confidence in herself."

Fritz said she is unsure how her young squad – with just two seniors – will respond to their first loss.

"My expectation is that we will be just fine, but I don't know exactly how we are going to rebound," she said.

Werner said if anything, the loss caused the Wildcats to work harder in practice.

Also, Werner was encouraged by K-State's effort heading into conference play.

"We played some tough teams (this preseason) – probably our toughest tournament was this past weekend - and I think it has prepared us well for Big 12 play," Werner said.

The preseason helped K-State gain valuable experience in a couple of important areas, Fritz said, as the Wildcats were not only exposed to multiple offensive sets, but were also the beneficiary of some close, competitive matches.

Concerning Fritz's potential 100-win milestone, Lastra said she is now motivated even more to beat Oklahoma.

"I have learned a lot from Suzie, so giving her that 100th game is going to be awesome," Lastra said.

Student IDs receive makeover for 2006-2007 year

By Lindsey Jones
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

By the end of April 2006, K-State students should have new identification cards to carry.

Because of a new state legislation passed a year and a half ago, secondary education schools can no longer use social security numbers on ID cards. Because K-State's current cards display each student or faculty member's SSN, the university had to overhaul the current card system by a specific deadline.

"The university wants to safeguard student information," Craig Johnson, assistant director of operations at the K-State Student Union, said. "That was our motivation."

Some students had concerns about having their SSNs on their ID cards and thought the new change would benefit personal security.

"I think it is a great idea because not as many people can obtain your personal information with the new cards," Jennifer Peterson, senior in psychology, said. "I had heard that they weren't using socials (security numbers) anymore, but I didn't know the validity of that."

Accidents happen, and sometimes students lose their cards. With the new system, however, losing an ID card wouldn't be as unnerving to some.

"I think it's a good idea," Kristen Kendrick, graduate student in sociology, said, "because if you lose your student ID, whoever finds it will then have your SSN and can steal your identity and go crazy."

Johnson said the university is in the process of updating its student information system. The module used produces unique, 16-character International Standard Organization numbers for each student that will be displayed on the new cards. The first six numbers on every card will be 601729, K-State's personal school code.

Johnson said the first step in 15 campus buildings lose power

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An unknown failure in K-State's power supply left students in the dark Wednesday morning.

More than 15 campus buildings lost power at about 9:30 a.m., said Dale Boggs, associate director of facilities maintenance and utilities. Power was restored to all buildings after about 15 minutes.

Boggs said a similar problem happened about a month ago, but the cause is still unknown.

"It may just be a simple situation in the substation that needs to be taken care of, or it could be someone on campus doing something electrically that is causing a short," he said.

Boggs said the Division of Facilities is bringing in an electrical engineer and someone from Westar Energy to help find the source of the problem.

Mollie McReynolds, administrative assistant with the College of Arts and Sciences, said the power outage didn't affect her work.

"I didn't lose any information on the programs I was working on, but I don't know about the other departments," she said.

Although during the power outage people may have lost some unsaved work, Boggs said it shouldn't have harmed any equipment.

"When it just drops off the way it did, it doesn't cause any more problems than someone flipping the switch just like they were turning it on or off," he said.

Members of many faiths came together Wednesday afternoon in Forum Hall in the K-State Student Union to pray for the victims of Hurricane Katrina.

"We've come today to remember those who died, to remember survivors, some of whom are with us," Rev. Don Fallon, K-State coordinator of religious activities, said in the opening prayer. "We're here today to give support and care for one another."

Twenty-nine people participated in the memorial service, 15 of them as speakers. The service began with Jewish, Muslim and Christian readings.

"God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore will we not fear, though the earths do change, and though the mountains be moved into the heart of the seas," Andrea Blair, faculty adviser to Hillel, K-State's Jewish student organization, read from the Torah.

After the readings, Fallon introduced several speakers, including Stephen White, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

"All of us have confronted adversity in one form or another, but this disaster is different," he said. "The Christian Science Monitor [said] this event caused the largest displacement of Americans in the past 150 years."

Michael Burns, student body president; Jason Lantz, director of the American Red Cross of the Flint Hills; and John Myers, a student from the University of New Orleans, gave remarks.

Myers evacuated New Orleans with his wife and two daughters before Katrina hit. He served as the

And Roberts, along with other Dix Edition residents, gave a lot last weekend, benefiting those associated with the Hurricane Katrina disaster.

Dix Edition residents established their first block-wide garage sale last Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Roberts said nearly 75 families contributed toward the event.

"I just asked friends to put stuff out and do it for charity," she said. "All proceeds went to Katrina. Over 17 businesses donated sale items, food and gift certificates."

Jason Lantz, director of operations for the Flint Hills American Red Cross, said the event raised nearly $4,700. Of that money, approximately $800 came from raffle sales, $300 from donations and the remaining portion came from sales.

Truck spills $800,000 in new quarters

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HAMMONDVILLE, Ala. – An armored truck carrying tons of quarters caught fire Tuesday and spilled most of them on a highway, where workers used heavy equipment, shovels and buckets to scoop up the singed coins.

The driver said the truck carried 39,000 pounds of new Kansas quarters, part of the U.S. Mint's state coin series, that were worth some $800,000, said Police Chief Michael Putnam.

The rear of the truck bound for Birmingham caught fire in the predawn hours on Interstate 59.

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Bankrupt airlines

Delta Air Lines Inc. and Northwest Airlines Corp., hobbled by high fuel costs, heavy debt and pension obligations, filed for bankruptcy protection from creditors Wednesday, becoming the third and fourth major carriers to enter Chapter 11 since the 2001 terrorist attacks.

160 killed in Iraq

More than a dozen highly coordinated bombings ripped through Baghdad on Wednesday, killing at least 160 people and wounding 570 in the capital's bloodiest day since the end of major combat. Al-Qaeda claimed responsibility for the attacks in the name of Sunni insurgents.

Roberts 1 step closer

Supreme Court nominee John Roberts carefully picked his way through a second day of questions from the Senate Judiciary Committee on Wednesday as Republicans challenged Democrats to support his all-but-certain confirmation as the nation's 17th chief justice.

DIVERSIONS

A waste of time, but hey, it's better than lecture

Urban myths: true or false?

COMPASSION TEST
Myth: Students in a class on the life of Jesus arrive to take the final exam, but are told to go to another building on the other side of campus. As students travel to the other side of campus, a beggar asks each for their help. No one stops in order to get there on time. When they arrive, the professor tells them the beggar was an actor and was testing their compassion. Since no one stopped, they all fail the exam.
Conclusion: TRUE
This story is based on a real-life study for a social psychology class in 1970.

KIDNEY ROBBERY
Myth: A college student awoke in a bathtub full of ice after a night of partying. He realizes both of his kidneys have been stolen by organ thieves. He now spends his time hooked up to machines until a donor match is found.
Conclusion: FALSE
This myth has been circling the Internet for years with many different versions and is sometimes used as a story to warn kids about heavy partying.

DARK HAIR
Myth: Hair grows back darker and thicker after it has been shaved.
Conclusion: FALSE
This myth may be based on the perception that short hair is tougher than long hair. The living sections of hair lie beneath the scalp, so cutting the other sections would not affect it.

KILLER GOAT
Myth: An abused goat kills it owner and is saved by an animal lover.
Conclusion: TRUE
Snowball, the goat, was turned into a watchdog and Carl Hulsey, the owner, beat it with a stick repeatedly to make it more aggressive. On May 16, 1991, Hulsey approached Snowball with a stick. The 110-pound goat rammed his owner twice in the stomach. The coroner later determined he died from blunt force to his abdominal cavity. The goat was supposed to be put down, but after protesters called animal control, he was turned over to a private animal shelter.

ALLIGATOR COMMUNITY
Myth: Alligators live in the New York City sewer system.
Conclusion: FALSE
According to the myth, baby alligators brought back from Florida as pets were dumped into the sewer system after outgrowing their young stages. Alligators can't live along salmonella or E. coli and live at temperatures between 78 and 90 degrees.

Smaller businesses oppose possible Sunday liquor sales

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Sunday-liquor-sale debate finally reached Manhattan – and was shot down faster than alcohol on a 21st birthday.

Within the past two months, the Manhattan City Commission has received proposals, organized meetings and considered allowing liquor to be sold on Sunday.

Manhattan City Commissioner Tom Phillips said, to his knowledge, Dillons Food Stores initiated the proposal.

"They wrote a letter asking the City Commission if Dillons could sell 3.2 liquor on Sundays," Phillips said.

Due to state law, most cities in Kansas don't allow Sunday sales.

Some cities have decided allow Sunday sales at stores and gas stations. According to the Kansas Alcoholic Beverage Control Web site, www.ksrevenue.org/abc, Sunday sales are allowed in restaurants with at least 30 percent food sales.

Jayme Morris-Hardeman, city commissioner, said the proposal is all-or-nothing.

"While most of the retailers would prefer to have a city ordinance only allowing cereal malt beverage distributors to sell the alcohol, we can't allow that," she said. "State law says that if we allow grocery stores to sell alcohol, then all liquor distributors must sell it."

Personally, Morris-Hardeman said she was rather indifferent about the proposal. She said, however, that the rest of the city commission did not favor it.

Regardless of the commission's opinion, Phillips said smaller retailers object to the plan.

"All liquor stores objected to this proposal, excluding one," he said.

Yvette Dalley, owner of Dowling Liquor, 471 Poyntz Ave., said she strongly objects to the proposal.

"I don't want them," she said. "It's the only day off we have, and I feel like people can get all they need on the six days. Why the seven?"

She said she thought larger companies would take advantage of the smaller businesses.

"It's Wal-Mart, your convenient stores wanting to sell strong beers," Dalley said. "They really want to push to try to get strong beer sales."

Many Manhattan liquor stores are privately owned and run by families, Dalley said.

"For small business, they charge more; this is true," she said, "but we have to save money, especially how things are anymore. Prices go up and up and up and up."

Smaller stores, like Dalley's, make an about 20 to 30 percent profit, she said.

"We charge our prices so we can pay for expenses and wages," she said.

Yet, corporate stores have more money to use, Dalley said.

"Stores like Wal-Mart can afford giving away their liquor," she said. "Once people go to their stores for the free booze, they are bound to buy other things too. With our smaller liquor stores, we can only offer alcohol."

However, Dalley said she has other reasons to keep her liquor store closed on what she considers her weekly holiday.

"For most of us, this is when we can do our inventory and keep track of store records," she said. "But since I am a widow, I also like to go home and keep my cats company."

As of now, Morris-Hardeman said the city has no plans of reopening the liquor debate.

"It pretty much was expressed by all retail liquor stores that they are not in favor of the ordinance," she said.

Dillons Food Stores and other liquor stores weren't available for comment.

Study Abroad Fair gives students chance to explore internationally

By Megan Green
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students interested in taking class in another country or even on another continent are in luck.

A Study Abroad Fair, sponsored by the Office of International Programs, gives students the opportunity to learn about K-State's international programs and to meet students who have studied abroad. The fair is from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. today.

"We want to give students the opportunity to talk to people who are putting on the programs and actually speak to them instead of reading a brochure," said Jenifer J. Chambers, study abroad director.

If you go
Study Abroad Fair
When: 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. today
Where: K-State Student Union Courtyard
How much: Free

At the fair in the K-State Student Union Courtyard, 15 programs will distribute information, including 10 program providers.

Other booths include the Office of Financial Aid, Business Study Abroad Advocates, Engineering Mentors of International Experience, Journalism Study Abroad Ambassadors and the National Student Exchange.

Students from Truman State University and the University of Kansas will promote outside programs available to K-State students.

"The Study Abroad Fair is a big celebration of all the kinds of programs we have," Chambers said.

Chambers said students have misconceptions about credits, language requirements and costs associated with studying abroad.

Language requirements vary by program, but many are run entirely in English.

Program costs vary from $3,000 to $20,000. University financial aid can be applied to international programs and $55,000 worth of scholarships are available to students studying abroad.

K-State offers more than 300 places to study abroad and about 500 students take advantage of those programs annually, including three new programs – in Florence, Italy; London; and Australia – that begin this school year.

Daniel Hunt, associate professor in art, left for London on Sept. 14.

"It's an unbelievable opportunity," he said. "Do it while you are young and before you have lots of obligations."

Chambers said students have told her they loved living abroad.

"Very, very rarely are students unhappy with their study abroad experience," Chambers said.

Before students set foot on the foreign soil, they go through extensive orientation programs in which they are paired with other students who have gone to, or are from, the country where they have chosen to study.

Students must apply with the Office of International Programs.

To find out more, students can attend one of eight weekly sessions offered by the Office of International Programs located in Fairchild Hall. For days and times, visit www.ksu.edu/oip.

Most students who have studied abroad would, and do, go again. Jason Swisher, senior in business, has studied in Mexico, Spain and Australia.

"Studying abroad has been the best times to my life, and I have no regrets," he said.

TO THE POINT

City should allow Sunday liquor sales

The City of Manhattan will soon decide the fate of Sunday liquor sales. Their decision should be the one that offers the most freedom to both the consumer and the business owner.

Alcohol is a legal commodity, and it should be available for purchase any day of the week.

Although some stores do not wish to be open on Sundays, it makes no sense to prohibit those that wish to be open seven days a week from setting their own business hours.

It is within the power of the individual business owner to decide whether or not they wish to be open and the hours they wish to work.

With college and professional sports being a regular Sunday ritual for many, it is easy to imagine a quick trip to the store for malted goodness might become a ritual as well.

The fears of some business owners that Sunday sales will drive business toward larger stores, such as Dillons and Wal-Mart, is unfounded.

Additionally, the meager selections offered by larger stores will never match the selections and quality of specialty stores. Wal-Mart furniture seems second-rate; Wal-Mart brand wine would be a horror beyond imagination.

Simply because some do not want to participate in an activity does not mean that they should bar others from doing so. This is not the nature of liberty.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Not far enough

Pope Benedict XVI has made changes, but there is still more work to do

ZACHARY T. ECKELS

There was a lot of sadness after the death of Pope John Paul II, but there was also a lot of excitement for the Catholic Church's future. My mind filled with ideas that a new pope might make a lot of changes to continue our trek into the 21st century.

But, then came the announcement. It seemed like story after story about Joseph Ratzinger painted him an ultra-conservative pope, hell-bent on dragging us backwards.

Thankfully, after giving him some patience and time, I have come to really respect the man who took the name Benedict XVI. I've watched happily as he has continued to make links between Jews, Protestants, Muslims and Buddhists.

It is really refreshing to know that in an age where everyone tries to justify war with religious ideals that I have a leader determined to make peace.

Although I do respect the pope, I am not completely satisfied.

Since becoming the pope became synonymous with being a huge political figure, the Catholic Church seems to be operating more like a country instead of a religion, ignoring real problems while only worrying about foreign affairs.

I am sure almost everyone knows at least one of the problems I'm talking about, and yes, I've heard the joke about the priest who went on a cruise.

Most recently, Benedict XVI has been trying to get dismissed from a Texas suit claiming abuse from a Houston Seminary Student. He became one of the defendants in the suit while he served as head of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith for the church.

Admittedly, the evidence suggesting another church cover-up in this case seems pretty strong.

Benedict XVI's arguments for head-of-state immunity and also that the court would be interpreting religious documents are both well-founded. Saying this, he better get to interpreting those documents for himself before the problems get any further out of hand.

The quickest and easiest ways to make changes would be to allow male and female priests in the Catholic Church as well as allowing priests to marry.

In reality, doing both of these things wouldn't be changes for the church. Instead, it would be going back to the way things originally were.

That's right, it wasn't until the year 352 A.D. that a decree stated women would no longer be ordained, although in the 14th century, Bishop Pelagio complained that they were still being ordained and hearing confessions.

And as for getting married, it wasn't until 1123 A.D. when Pope Calistus II decreed clerical marriages invalid. Although long before this, the clergy, technically, weren't supposed to sleep with their wife.

I'm not saying married men and women won't abuse children in the same way a few misguided priests do today. Instead it would solve the real problem the church has which I believe is connected to the abuse: shortage of clergy.

If the Catholic Church was able to have an abundance of clergy like protestant churches, it would be no problem to excommunicate any priest who would commit such a heinous crime. Or at the very least take away their priesthood and get them the help they obviously need.

An even easier problem to fix in the church is the silly argument over condoms.

With the epidemic of AIDS threatening countries in Africa and everywhere else, preaching that "sex is only for reproduction after you're married" doesn't seem to be getting the job done. Instead, we need to quit ignoring the problem and admit that if people are going to sin and have sex with multiple partners, they might as well use a condom.

They could even come up with a catchy slogan to accompany this movement. I was thinking something along the lines of: "If you're going to sin, make it safe sin."

Even though I really do see a need to fix some of these problems, they aren't nearly enough to change my mind about being Catholic.

After all, Pope Benedict XVI is not doing that badly, at least I don't have to worry about him calling for the head of Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez.

Playing the blame game with Katrina

New Orleanians must feel kind of like Job right now. Actually, they've gotta feel worse; at least Job eventually got a bitching' book deal. New Orleanians are still at the tender mercies of fate.

But we're Americans – we can help out. We can pull together, join hands, put on some vaguely inspiring Queen rip-off arena rock and then, as one, find something to shovel the blame onto.

How about we blame the War in Iraq? After all, about 1/3 of the Louisiana National Guard is over there, leaving Louisiana virtually unguarded against opportunistic acts of nature. I did some research and it turns out, that while the LANG has been deployed, Iraq hasn't suffered a single hurricane.

Had the LANG only been in New Orleans, you can bet they would've fought the 20-foot incoming wall of water street to street, pausing only to treat their drenched comrades or give clench-toothed soliloquies about the futility of war.

Or tax cuts; couldn't we blame them? We could, except tax cuts be damned, Bush is spending like a drunken bull in a candy store. Let's face it, his budget has more pork than a Nebraska cheerleading squad, and Louisiana was in on that, too. He hasn't been so much feeding Leviathan, as walking blithely down its throat, credit card in one hand, chic Louis Vuitton designer handbag in the other. Can't we find an easy scapegoat, something we can all agree upon, in order to let the healing begin?

GRANT REICHERT

We have to! Could you imagine what would happen if we had a tragedy and didn't randomly blame something within a few weeks?

I say we blame Texas. According to a Web site with authoritative fonts, dangerous low-pressure systems, such as Katrina, are created over the Gulf of Mexico by the differentiation of pressure coming out of Texas. Which is to say, Texas sucks.

True, they say everything is bigger in Texas, but here in the First-World states, we find such glorification of elephantiasis to be rather disturbing.

Now don't get me wrong: I'm not saying that Texas is bad – I'm certainly implying it, though. It's just that I know that Texans won't be offended by this, because I've taken care to write it in a special code: English.

But that's not enough healing. We should also blame fraternities. They take in impressionable young males, too weak-willed to make it on their own, and then, after a steady program of targeted humiliation, enforced conformity and protein-deprivation, they spit out soul-emptied, popped-collared eunuchs, completely reprogrammed with sound-bytes from the latest "Animal House" clone.

The hurricane causal link might seem a bit fuzzy at first, but this is a time of national healing, man. Catharsis. Your negativity is decidedly not helpful. Which, we still have some more blame here.

We've got to do something with it; my finger's cocked and ready to point.

How about Jews? They've been blamed for everything up to and including anti-Semitism. Or blind people; they'd never see it coming. Who we going to blame? Ghostbusters? A fat lot of good they did us vis-à-vis hurricane Katrina. Personally, I blame Pfizer Corporation. I have my reasons.

Now it's your turn to get your blame on. It doesn't really matter what you blame – every little bit counts. Let the national healing begin.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Columnist should help, not point fingers

Editor,

The recent destruction of Hurricane Katrina is felt by me more than most here at Kansas State University as I am from Quitman, Miss., a small town about three hours from the Gulf Coast.

Having said that, it pains me to see people such as Mr. Eckels pointing fingers when this country needs continuity.

Mr. Eckels claims the government did nothing to ready themselves for the storm. He forgets the government was prepared and had needed items ready, but was forced to move these items due to the storm.

Afterwards the infrastructure of the area was in such shambles that moving into these areas was nearly impossible.

Mr. Eckels also forgot some of the people left behind were looting and shooting at those trying to help. It is because of this that many National Guard troops were pulled away from helping victims.

Another of his claims is our president should have had the foresight to plan for this storm.

It has been known the levies that surround New Orleans could not weather a storm of this magnitude since the 1960s.

I send my deepest sorrows to those who have suffered from this storm, and I am happy to see people giving their time and efforts to help. People like my father, who serves in the Mississippi Air National Guard.

He has seen time in Iraq and is now sleeping on a cot rather than in our home.

And Mr. Eckels, if you are looking for something to do with your $200 tax refund, I suggest sending it to the Red Cross.

'Poverty defined' misses mark

Editor,

Attempting to define poverty is difficult. While Webster's leaves something to be desired, the redefinition found in "Poverty Defined" falls even shorter from reality.

The standard used to judge poverty is referred to as the 'poverty line.' Surprisingly, during research we found no obvious line. Instead, there are different classifications used different ways.

Many of those who fall below the poverty threshold work. The working poor are not mentioned in this article, despite making up "1 in every 5, or 7.4 million individuals."

Another aspect to consider is job availability. Yes, most people are capable of digging a ditch or handing out fries.

Capability and availability rarely reach a level of homeostasis conducive to decreasing unemployment. Furthermore, few families could survive on fast-food salaries.

Has Maddy considered how his perspective affects his views? He is a white male, inherently given more privileges than women, people of color and other vulnerable individuals.

Not only is his white male privilege evident, but also a feminization of poverty. "Unbeknownst to the majority of her children, Mother Freedom gave birth to another child..."

This feminization implies that poverty equals weakness, and that the impoverished are typically women.

Several points in this article scream ignorance. "Poverty wears FUBU and Nike, but not a nametag because poverty doesn't work." This ethnocentrism comes dangerously close to racism.

It also suggests the poor squander their money. Thrift store and donated clothing are rarely from trendy designers. In fact, they are typically outdated, obvious, hand-me-downs.

The ignorance illustrated in this article is disheartening for those who seek to enable the vulnerable, oppressed and poor. It is views like Maddy's that perpetuate the injustice of poverty rather than remedy it.

Bush not responsible for hurricane response

Editor,

I know Bush is a popular target, but the fact that he is a Republican and most of the victims in New Orleans are poor or black is not enough evidence to suggest he is handling the situation poorly.

I'm not about to suggest the federal government's response has been exemplary, but I am also not naive enough to think Bush is to blame. Our country seems to have forgotten about personal responsibility or accountability. There were many, many instances where this occurred that all contributed to the events taking place today.

Should we be surprised by what we see from an area that leads the country in homicides and governmental corruption? I, for one, would feel much more comfortable to have Bush in control than the city and state officials currently in place.

Team hoping to win national championship

By Nick Dunn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As the only non-scholarship college softball team in the state of Kansas, K-State's women's club softball team is no stranger to obstacles.

Fighting through problems with limited competition, no scholarships and a lack of financial support, the athletes have a heavy burden to bear.

Add the pressure of being the No. 2 club team in the nation – behind defending national champion West Virginia University – and the challenges become even greater.

However, when the squad begins its season today against Hutchinson Community College, each player will have one goal in mind.

"We want to bring home a national championship," team president and centerfielder Lacie Spain said. "We want to continue to grow and improve, and hopefully that results in a title."

The softball team has been around for more than 10 years and has recently achieved national success. In the 2003-04 season, K-State placed third at the national tournament. Last year, K-State finished second after playing 12 games in four days.

With 10 returning players, the coaches expect this year's version to be better than ever.

"I think we can definitely win it all," Joe Reyes, assistant coach and junior in secondary education, said. "We are a much stronger team. We have improved pitching and team speed."

But being a non-scholarship team makes it hard to find competition. In fact, the Air Force Academy and the University of Colorado are the closest non-scholarship teams available for competition.

"We basically will play any team that wants to play us," Spain said.

That results in a wide variety of opponents. The club plays teams ranging from NCAA Division I opponents to club teams.

Everyone on the team is committed to gaining the ultimate prize – a national championship trophy. However, reaching that goal requires sacrifice and time commitment.

A typical week includes at least 15 hours of practice and games, on top of school and work obligations.

"I am amazed with the dedication of our players," coach Richard Baker said.

Reyes said the players' commitment is remarkable, especially when considering they receive no money from the school.

"The game means a lot to the players, and it means a lot to me," Reyes said. "Being on scholarship is not an issue if you love to play the game."

Spain, in her fifth season, said being a part of the team has always meant a lot.

"It is just the love of the game that keeps us playing," she said. "We all have so much fun when we are around each other that it makes us love what we do."

With the start of the season, Baker said he doesn't know what to expect.

"We just want to focus on playing good, solid softball," Baker said. "We'll have to wait and see, but I think we're going to do very well."

CFB | Wildcats to meet up with Redbirds in 2006

K-State will face the Illinois State Redbirds at home during the 2006 football season, according to an article published Wednesday by Randy Reinhardt of www.pantagraph.com.

The two teams agreed to play Sept. 2, 2006 at KSU Stadium, with the Wildcats reportedly paying Illinois State $300,000, the largest guarantee in Illinois State's history.

The deal between the Wildcats and Redbirds was set up by former K-State associate athletic director Sheahon Zenger, who spent nine years at K-State before accepting the Athletics Director position at Illinois State this summer.

Talks with Illinois State about other possible games are ongoing, Reinhardt reported.

CFB | K-State's Mann Named to AFCA Good Works Team

K-State senior fullback and team captain Victor Mann was one of 11 NCAA Division I-A student-athletes named to the 2005 Good Works Team by the American Football Coaches Association Wednesday.

Mann

In his time at K-State, Mann has worked as a mentor to at-risk middle and high school students in the VIP Program, participated in both the Read-to-Achieve and Kats for Kids programs, visited local schools and read to kids and spoken about staying in school and saying no to drugs, taken part in the Special Olympics Bowl-A-Thon, served as a member of the Student-Athlete Advisory Committee and headed efforts to organize donations of food and money to help underprivileged families in the Manhattan area.

MLB | New deal with ESPN, worth nearly $2.4 billion

NEW YORK — ESPN will start a series of Monday night baseball broadcasts and gain greater flexibility to move games to Sunday nights under a new eight-year contract worth $2.37 billion.

The agreement announced Wednesday, which runs through 2013, allows the network to have a team appear on its exclusive Sunday night games up to five times per season, up from 11 over a three-season span under the six-year contract that is expiring.

Baseball is getting $200 million from ESPN in the final season of its current deal, which was worth about $815 million for its television component and was a product of a lawsuit settlement.

CFB | Buckeye TE gets 'hate' mail for dropped TD pass

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Ohio State tight end Ryan Hamby has received a couple of hate letters since dropping a sure touchdown pass during the Buckeyes' loss to Texas last week.

Hamby

Cutting over the middle into the end zone, Hamby was open when Justin Zwick's pass bounced off his chest and into the air. He had a second chance to grab it but was slammed by a defender just as the ball touched his hands.

A touchdown would have given Ohio State a 10-point lead in the third quarter. The Buckeyes ended up settling for a field goal and eventually lost 25-22 to Texas.

NFL | Ailing McNabb questionable after hit

Still experiencing pain and soreness as a result of the bruised chest he suffered Monday night, quarterback Donovan McNabb sat out practice Wednesday, and the Philadelphia Eagles' star was officially listed as "questionable" on the team's injury report.

McNabb

McNabb expressed confidence, however, that he will be able to start in Sunday's home opener at Lincoln Financial Field against the San Francisco 49ers.

Fritz collects win No. 100 in sweep of Sooners

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State coach Suzie Fritz hit the century mark in wins Wednesday night, as the No. 22 Wildcats swept Oklahoma in Norman, Okla.

Fritz' 100th career win came as the Wildcats dispatched the Sooners in three games – 30-22, 30-28 and 30-26.
